With a group of other Representatives I had dinner with him in the House restaurant the last night of the session. He was cheery, enjoyed his dinner, and seemed much better than in the early winter, and I was greatly surprised and shocked to hear of his death.

His life was devoted to the people of his district and he rightly held a firm place in their affection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I deem it a sad privilege to have the opportunity of paying a brief but heartfelt tribute to the life and character of our departed friend and colleague Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE who for years ably and faithfully represented the thirty-fifth district of New York in the House of Representatives. I served with him on the Committee on Appropriations and was brought into even more intimate contact with him while serving with him on one of its most important subcommittees. I have sat around the committee table with him for weeks at a time in the hearings preliminary to the preparation of some of the most important appropriation bills. It is in the close contact and the intimacy of the committee room that one can best form a correct opinion of the ability and the fidelity of a colleague. And it can be truly said of WALTER MAGEE that those who knew him best like him most. I have never known a man who was actuated by a higher sense of public duty, and it was this high sense of duty which controlled him throughout his career as a Member of Congress. He was a strong party man and earnestly believed in the principles of the political party to which he gave loyal support and allegiance. But he never permitted partisanship to dictate his course on public questions which did not involve matters of strict political policy.

He was a faithful and able representative of his district and a loyal servant of his State and country. When the news of his sudden passing during the recess of Congress was flashed over the country his colleagues, without regard to party, were greatly shocked and deeply grieved. They mourned the loss of a loyal friend and a faithful public servant. He passed away in the prime of his useful life. His record has been made—a record that is shot through with service and fidelity. Liszt made the theme of his "Preludes" the beautiful thought that each event of life is but a prelude leading up to the harmony of death. And this same thought is applicable to the life of WALTER MAGEE. He has left a memory which we all will cherish and a record of noble service that we should all strive to emulate.

THE LATE SENATOR ANDRIEUS A. JONES

Mr. MORROW assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following order:

Ordered, that Sunday, April 15, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for memorial exercises in commemoration of the life, services, and character of Hon. ANDRIEUS A. JONES, late a Senator from the State of New Mexico.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 168

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. ANDRIEUS A. JONES, late a Member of the Senate from the State of New Mexico.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House at the conclusion of the exercises of this day shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is extremely fitting that we pause in our daily labor here to commemorate the life, character, and public services of our colleagues in the House and also in the Senate of the United States.

Senator JONES I knew quite well. A Tennesseean by birth, he was educated in that State, but in early manhood went to the great Southwest and began the practice of law in the State of New Mexico. He was a splendid lawyer and built up a splendid practice in that State.

In the early nineties, if I recall correctly, Senator JONES was appointed United States district attorney for the State of New Mexico. Later he became chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of New Mexico and served in that capacity for some 10 years and developed a real genius for political organization. In 1914 he was appointed by President Wilson as Assistant Secretary of the Interior and then in 1916 was elected to the Senate of the United States.

He was a man of fine presence, one of the handsomest men I have ever known, and I have often thought of what our late and beloved Speaker, Champ Clark, used to tell us in the cloakroom. Among other things he made the statement one day that good looks had just about as much to do with success in politics at the beginning of one's career as any other one attribute. Senator JONES was a very handsome man, a man of charming personality, always kind and courteous to everyone, and always a great democrat, and I mean this in the broadest possible sense of the word.

I knew Senator JONES by virtue of being a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House while he was a member of the Finance Committee of the Senate. In this way we were thrown together, and later on, I knew him more intimately really by virtue of the fact that he was connected with the Democratic senatorial committee of the Senate while I was connected with the Democratic congressional committee of the House. He was a tireless worker and, as I have said, a genius at organization. He was one of the greatest political speakers his generation produced. Senator JONES was a real orator. Not only this, but he was a great student. When he made up his mind on a public question there was no way to change his determination.

Invariably, you would find Senator JONES espousing the cause of the masses of the American people, the toilers, if you please, although a man himself of reasonable wealth, or well to do, as we would call it, yet his mind and heart never left the interests of the common people of America.

I say these things, and I say them gladly because I feel that I know what I have said about Senator JONES is the absolute truth. We, of course, miss him in this House. We miss him as a Senator. The country has lost a great and able public servant. In this life, my friends, he fought a good fight, he kept the faith, but, alas, to our great detriment and to the great loss of the 120,000,000 of American people, he has finished his course.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, Senator ANDRIEUS A. JONES, as I knew him, was a man of strong intellect, of a friendly disposition, and an attractive personality. It was my good fortune to travel several days on the same boat with him, and during that time I came to realize the splendid qualities of the man. Modest and unassuming, accommodating and obliging in manner, always in a cheerful mood, unselfish and generous, and always a gentleman.

The western spirit of hospitality was his in a marked degree, and foremost of all was his splendid clear-cut honesty of purpose which was depicted in his open countenance.

When you looked into his face you could see a soul of rugged honesty.

When he crossed the "great divide" I was one of those appointed to take him back to the West he loved.

We carried him back to that beautiful little city, Las Vegas, N. Mex., where a whole State, without regard to politics or rank, came in great throngs to pay a last tribute to their most distinguished and best loved citizen.

Tender hands bore his body to the church he loved and worshiped in, and I sat there and heard the services and I thought what a testimonial his life was to the faith that lies in us that Jesus of Nazareth made a supreme sacrifice for the great as well as the lowly and that some day we may meet Him face to face.

His Masonic brethren performed the last sad rites at his grave in the "city of the dead."

We left him there to sleep until the resurrection morn.

Of him let it be said:

> One whose thoughts are a little cleaner,
> One whose mind is a little keener,
> One who avoids those things that are meaner,
> That's what I call a friend.

Mr. SEARS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege, inasmuch as Senator JONES has passed to the great beyond, as he has, to be able to take part in these proceedings, and to add a word of my own to the many splendid thoughts that will be expressed in the Senate and in the House with reference to his life and his passing.

I was not one of those who was privileged to have a close personal acquaintance with Senator JONES, although I had met him and admired him. How could I? One can not go into a small village that is new to him and get much of an acquaintance in that small environment until days and years have gone by.

Here where we have 435 Members in this House and almost one hundred in the other, gathered from a country 3,000 by 2,000 miles in extent, so few of the others any of us have seen before, and an acquaintance that ripens into knowledge and friendship only comes to those who have an immediate touch. So I could not know him as so many others have, but I have realized his qualities from those who have known him; I have come to know those essentials which go out from each and every man to the community and to the country at large, where he is a larger character.

But what is death? I have an idea it is not so bad. Our fathers and mothers have gone through it for countless generations, so why should we be afraid, especially if we are like Senator JONES and belong to the great band that stood the tests laid down by the Man of Galilee. Two great tests were laid down by that Man of Galilee. One was that you must love your God and the other was that you must love your fellow men.

I, myself, do not know whether God is a wholesome relation of natural law or a personality that has been there for all these countless years. I do not know, but whatever It or He is, that Deity or that wholesome relation of natural law, He is entitled to our greatest love and that Deity was all in all to the Man of Galilee when He said, first, "You must love your God and then love your neighbor."

Now, as you know, I saw Senator JONES as he was lying there in the little city where he had lived so long and where his remains are now, a wonderful heritage to the people of that community. He lay there about as handsome as he was in the Senate, with a smile on his face, which I think was intended, perhaps for every one of that community, and for all of his brothers, and friends from here who should go out there and attend his final laying away. He lay there as finely and as splendidly as if he were gently sleeping and as if he had put his smile on for one of greeting, as one to show the affection he had for all the world, for his country, and his neighbors.

He was prized most highly in that community. Great indeed is the office of the pioneer. Senator JONES was one who early in his manhood went to the State of New Mexico. He helped lay the foundations of that wonderful Territory and of that wonderful State at a time when it needed men of stability, of character, of vision, and of wholesomeness. He was one of those who took part in the laying of those foundations, and when that Territory ripened into statehood, into a Commonwealth on a parity with the rest of our States in this Union, the splendid foundations which had been laid there were as much to his credit as to any other single man.

Since I have been in Washington I have never heard anything but kindly references to him. Those who have had a long acquaintance with him and those who knew him well loved him and held him in high esteem, and his immediate community will cherish his memory in the future, because he was a man of the highest character and standing. He will be cherished here by those who came in daily contact with him in the Senate as one who well knew the legislative functions and duties and whose advice was sound. He was needed in our western country because he knew that great western country, and he was needed in this great country of ours. I think there was no more kindly man in the Senate that he was. He was universally loved; he was universally prized, and I am very glad I am able to be here on this occasion and add a word of tribute to the others which may be paid to him.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, Victor Hugo once said that what is said of a man has as much to do with his life and more to do with his destiny than what he really does. Judged by that standard, the destiny of Senator JONES is doubly blessed—a life crowned with wonderful achievements and a reputation that was above reproach. Some one has said that the richest treasure mortal man affords is spotless reputation. If that be true, Senator JONES was indeed one of the wealthiest of men.

I shall not discuss his services as a United States Senator, but I want to refer for a brief moment to that human side of his nature with which I was more familiar. Those who served with him in the Senate, those who are familiar with his achievements before he came to Washington, have already paid their tributes of respect more ably than I could do if I had the advantages of the years of association which came to them, but as a friend I merely wish to come in all humility and lay a flower upon his grave.

I had occasion to get most intimately acquainted with Senator JONES on an extensive trip of inspection of more than 10,000 miles that carried us to the Tropics, through the Panama Canal, across the Pacific Ocean, and on into Alaska. I have seen him in the Senate; I have been with him in the cloakroom; I was with him upon the high seas; I saw him amid the desolate solitude of Arctic mountain peaks, in the glow of the midnight sun, and at all times I found him to be that courteous, genial, affable gentleman, who always stamps the recollection of his personality upon all those with whom he comes in contact.

The record that he made in the Senate will stand as long as this Republic shall endure, and as the activities and the influence of American life roll westward with the sun, the foundation that he laid for the development of the great West will bring its blessings to the sons of men for generations yet to come.

But when I think of him personally, as I said, I think of that wonderful personality which came into my life at a time when I was a young Representative in this House, and which left a most indelible impression. I have always associated with him and shall associate with his memory the majestic swells of the ocean, where I first learned to know and to love him. When I heard of his untimely death there came to my mind the grand lines of Tennyson:

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam.
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark;

For though from out this bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, it was my wonderful privilege to be closely associated with Senator JONES for a period of about 60 days, and during that time on the extended trip spoken of by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] I became very much attached to him, and also to that sorrowing wife of his who now sits in the gallery. I would feel recreant to my duty as a friend if I did not take this occasion to say something about this wonderful man. It was about four years ago that I first met him. I appreciated very much my close association with him. He was a real American citizen. This country lost one of its foremost legislators when he died. There was a pall of gloom that spread over the entire membership of Congress when he passed away. I only wish I had the power of expression to say what is really in my heart. I offer my sincere consolation to the sorrowing widow and family.

Senator JONES has made the world better for having lived in it. We all cherish his memory. All who knew him loved him.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the life, character, and public services of the late Senator JONES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLDFIELD assumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, the House is convened to-day to pay honor and respect to the memory and service of the late Senator ANDRIEUS A. JONES.

Born in the year 1862 in the State of Tennessee, the son of the Rev. James H. W. and Hester A. A. (May) Jones, the Senator, like many other men who have gained success in life, began his career under humble circumstances. He had the desire for knowledge, and, coupling that with honest energy and endeavor, he succeeded in securing an education, first at Bethel College, Mackenzie, Tenn., and later at Valparaiso University, where he completed his education and received the degree of bachelor of science in 1884 and the degree of bachelor of arts in 1885. He taught school in Tennessee in 1885 and that year migrated to Las Vegas, N. Mex., which remained his home until his untimely death. Las Vegas was his first and only established residence in the West.

His public activities were largely begun in his adopted State. He was principal of the public schools of Las Vegas from 1885 to 1887. Then, having taken up the study of law, which profession was to be his chosen one, he was duly admitted to the practice of law before the bar of the District Court of New Mexico in 1888.

In 1894 he was admitted to the practice of law before the supreme court of the State. In the year 1893 he was elected president of the Bar Association of New Mexico, membership in which he retained until the time of his death.

His entry into politics, and the commencing of his future political career, began by his election as mayor of Las Vegas in 1893. From this office he stepped into the office of United States district attorney and served in that capacity until 1898. In 1896 he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention and from that time up to his death he was an active participant and advisor in all Democratic conventions in the State; he served as State Democratic chairman from 1906 to 1908, and again in the first State election in 1911.

In the election of Woodrow Wilson as President, a western man was sought as Secretary of the Interior; the appointment fell to Franklin K. Lane, of California, and ANDRIEUS A. JONES, of New Mexico, was selected as his assistant. It was in this position that the ability of the late Senator was developed in revising and facilitating the work of that department of Government.

There are many employees still in the department who speak with the highest regard of the work of Senator JONES in organizing this important department. He was also a member of the Democratic National Committee from 1908 to 1922 and in 1924 he was chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee.

In 1916 Mr. JONES became the successful candidate of his party to the Senate of the United States and was renominated in 1922 without opposition and again elected to that body; he was serving the next to the closing year of his second term when he was called to death. Senator JONES left surviving him his wife, Natalia Jones, and two sons, Vincent Jones, of the New Mexico Construction Co., Denver, Colo., and A. A. Jones, jr., a student at Princeton University.

It was in the Senate of the United States that the Senator became a power for good in legislation for his State and for the Nation.

Being a close student of financial problems he at once became an authority to be consulted by his colleagues in the Senate and the House upon questions of financial and tariff problems of the country. It is not an exaggerated statement to say that the late Senator was an outstanding man of ability in whatever rôle he appeared in public life—as a lawyer, as an executive in the Department of the Interior, as a private citizen in his own business affairs, and as a Senator in the affairs of this great Government.

He was a believer in the principles of Democracy as outlined by Jefferson, yet he was always fair and never by his manner displayed to his fellow colleagues a spirit of partisanship.

The people of New Mexico, whom he so well represented, had implicit faith in all his efforts. His work was coupled with industry, intelligence, and a happy discernment of public questions. His sympathies were with the people, for whom he had a profound respect. In affairs of the Nation he stood for fair treatment of all by government. He was a sincere believer in a just and proper compensation to our soldier veterans who had fought so faithfully for the honor and protection of our country in the World War. Instead of the bonus voted by Congress he favored a cash settlement. His sympathy was sincere, as he sacrificed one son upon the altar of his country in that war. Had he lived a few years more there is no question but that he would have brought about the cash payment to our soldier boys. That was his desire, and he was seeking such legislation at the time of his death.

One great characteristic of Senator JONES was that he never felt himself above his fellowmen, and he placed himself upon the same plane with the citizenship of his State. When he made a promise to the people of his State, he fulfilled it, and believed always in fighting for the right and knew no defeat in his efforts toward that goal. He stood for equal and exact justice to his fellowmen and was an antagonist of those who sought special privileges at the expense of the masses of the people.

General Grant upon his deathbed was asked what event in looking back over his career brought the greatest satisfaction to his mind. His reply was—

I take chief pleasure in the fact that I have always had the will to do my duty.

This same thought may be expressed about the career of Senator JONES. He died from overwork due to his untiring and faithful labor in behalf of what he believed to be his duty. When his health began to fail he would not surrender his work; he felt he should remain at his post and carry out his trust. After all, there is great satisfaction in the fact that one dies in the useful service of his fellowmen. We can sincerely apply this spirit to the late Senator.

He was signally honored by the bar of Las Vegas when a tribute, prepared by five prominent lawyers, was signed by every one of the members—21 in all. A. T. Rogers, former law partner of the Senator, delivered an impressive eulogy and appreciation of his ability as a lawyer and his excellent qualities as a man. Judge E. V. Long, 92 years old, whose friendship with the Senator had been of more than 40 years' standing, recalled pleasant associations with him. The tribute of the Las Vegas bar follows:

It was with feelings of the most profound sorrow that the members of the Las Vegas bar met in session attended by every lawyer in the city to express in such terms as deemed appropriate, futile as any such attempts must necessarily be, their sincerest regret at the passing from time into eternity of their distinguished fellow member, United States Senator ANDRIEUS A. JONES, and their deep sympathy for the bereaved family.

Because of his warm heart, his interest in the welfare of his fellows, his love for his profession and all engaged therein, Senator JONES had formed a close personal friendship with every attorney practicing at the Las Vegas bar; many such friendships bearing the test of long years and growing even deeper. But whether the relationship extended over one year or forty, there is not a lawyer in the city or district who does not feel a deep sense of personal loss in the death of Senator JONES.

Now when his abilities are being everywhere extolled, when the greatest of the land unite to do him honor, resolutions are being adopted, which we sincerely indorse, dealing with his achievements, high character, broad statesmanship, and splendid qualities, we, the associates of the profession he so highly honored, the intimates of the home town he so deeply loved, the friends of the family whose sorrow is our sorrow, feel that it is fitting that we should confine ourselves chiefly to the personal and professional relationship.

As the members of the Las Vegas bar, mourning that his presence shall no more be with us, we shall ever carry into our work and our life the inspiration of his high ideals, tireless industry and unswerving devotion to ethical principles.

As citizens of Las Vegas, who can appreciate more fully his public-spiritedness, his loyalty, his worth to the community; as residents of New Mexico, who can understand more clearly his devotion to the interests of the State through a period of nearly half a century; as loyal components of this great American commonwealth, who is there to take more pride than ourselves in the notable public actions that have made the name of ANDRIEUS A. JONES well-nigh a household word throughout the land? But, in the personal equation, as friends, who could so well know his kindness of heart, his generosity, his readiness at all times to serve his fellow man, it is all in his motto—"He profits most who serves the best"—it is all in his creed:

So many words, so many creeds,
So many ways that wind and wind,
When just the art of being kind
Is all this old world needs.

How words fail when we seek to express the sympathy we feel for the members of the bereaved family! We grieve with them, for though necessarily in lesser degree, yet in a very considerable measure, their loss is our loss.

The sincere sorrow throughout the State of New Mexico occasioned by the death of the Senator was a direct testimonial of the deep regard and esteem in which he was held by the citizens of his adopted State.

We speak not of him because he may have acquired wealth or material success in his career, but rather in connection with what he stood for and what he accomplished, which made the position of his fellow man better in the affairs of life, and which gave a better spirit of consideration for the welfare of all the people. His faithful service rendered is the most fitting eulogy, and gives him an enduring place in the history of his State and of the Nation. There is no doubt but that the people of New Mexico have lost one of their ablest citizens, and one who had been a devoted champion of their cause.

At the funeral in his home town of Las Vegas there were no lines of race, creed, or partisanship. All leaders of prominence in the State were present to pay homage and honor to the dead statesman. Among them were the escort of eight United States Senators and ten Members of Congress, the Governor of New Mexico, and seven ex-governors. It has been truthfully said that his neighbors not only took pride in his achievements, but loved him as a citizen. Among the mourners was the venerable Judge E. V. Long, 92 years old, the man who as a district judge in Indiana had admitted the late Thomas W. Marshall to the practice of law. Judge Long, for four decades was a firm friend and political adviser of the deceased Senator.

I appear to-day as one who sincerely mourns the death of ANDRIEUS A. JONES, for I loved, respected, and admired him. I looked upon him as a statesman of the first rank from out of the West, and I feel that in his death I suffered the personal loss of a firm friend.

Mr. MORROW resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the resolution previously adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House now stands adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, at 12 o'clock noon.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, April 16, 1928, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, April 16, 1928

Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., assistant rector of the Church of the Epiphany of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, high and mighty ruler of the universe, who dost from Thy throne behold all the dwellers upon earth, graciously condescend to us who come now before Thy Divine Majesty to praise Thee and to worship Thee.

Accept the adoration of our hearts and receive our grateful acknowledgment of the abounding blessings that Thou hast vouchsafed to us and to our great Nation.

Look with favor upon Thy servants, who assemble in this place charged with grave responsibilities affecting the peace, welfare, and ordered governance of our country.

Endue them with wisdom and spiritual understanding, with devotedness and undiscouraged patience in the discharge of their high tasks. Grant that they may both perceive and know what they ought to do, and also have grace and power faithfully to fulfill the same.

We ask it all in humble acknowledgment of our own undeservings, but with sincere dependence upon the perfections and compassions of Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Saviour.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

COLORED LAND OFFICE SEGREGATION TO END—PARTITIONS HAVE BEEN REMOVED, NEGRO ELKS HAVE BEEN TOLD

Officials of the Civil Liberties Bureau of the Grand Lodge of Colored Elks yesterday expected abolition of segregation of negro clerks in the Land Office of the Interior Department early this week. Partitions which have separated colored and white employees in the office have been removed with general expressions of approval, it was reported.

The fight for abolition of segregation in this department has been led by Gretchen McRae, of Colorado Springs, Colo., the home State of Secretary Hubert Work, of the Interior Department. She was elected recently to the executive board of the Association for Advancement of Colored People. As a stenographer in the Land Office, her fight for ending of segregation there has been carried on with an intrepidity which has won popularity to the cause.

The National Association for Advancement of Colored People announced last night renewal of its drive for abolition of segregation in the Treasury Department, where Assistant Secretary Ogden Mills has had the matter under advisement. The drive will be launched with a banquet to Neval H. Thomas, head of the association, and a mass meeting at the Suburban Gardens Sunday, when Clarence Darrow will be the principal speaker.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1928.

Hon. COLE L. BLEASE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: In view of your recent utterances, as published in the local papers of this city relative to Secretary Hoover putting the negro clerks in the Department of Commerce in the same rooms with the white clerks, I would like to call your attention to a similar order of Secretary Work, of the Department of the Interior, which went into effect to-day—April 13.

A negro girl typist in Division C of the General Land Office was sent down to the stenographic division, chief of same being a Mr. Phillips, but the girls in this division put up such a "kick" that the negro girl was switched to Division E, the survey divison.

Partitions are being taken down between rooms so as to make them larger, and white clerks are being put in the same rooms with the negro clerks. This is being done in Divisions C and F of the General Land Office.

This was done over the vigorous protest of Commissioner Spry, of the Land Office.

The Land Office at its best is a regular hell hole. (See inclosed circulars, same being a true statement of facts.)

This order was done, of course, to catch the "nigger" vote.

It is bad enough to work for starvation wages without working with a lot of negroes.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) ——— ———.

Mr. BLEASE. The two articles referred to in the letter I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles are are follows:

ROTTENNESS AND TERRORISM IN THE LAND OFFICE—RING RULED—A HOLDOVER FROM THE MIDDLE AGES

Bully McGee, chief of the mineral division, General Land Office, an ignorant bully, spends his time ragging the clerks, drawing $3,200, and does nothing but messenger work, carrying papers from one desk to another; ignorant, uncouth, would make a good section boss for a railroad gang. Runs up and down the halls, sneaking and listening in on the clerks. Knows nothing about the work. Women clerks all "jumpy." The assistant of the division, a Mr. Keefer, an ex-barber, an ex-war worker, does the expert dirty work for the chief—has to, to hold his job down.

When word comes down from the ring above, do this, do that, Keefer swears your life away.

McGee has been in the Land Office for about 35 years and had been demoted twice for being dirty. So ignorant he can't review a three-line letter.

MR. OBENCHAIN THE HEAD OF THE RING

Obenchain, the head of the ring, the master mind (Mussolini Obenchain); Bond, former chief clerk, a superannuated old fossil, came into the office as a boy draftsman over 40 years ago, was dead from the collar button up.

The Land Office is ruled by a ring headed by C. A. Obenchain, who has built up an ironclad ring, places his favorites in fat jobs. He stands, it is said, behind McGee and keeps him in; the Land Office is apparently turned over to the duce (Obenchain), who runs same to suit himself.

RECLASSIFICATION UNDER THE NEW CLASSIFICATION LAW A BIG FARCE

Obenchain's favorite female clerks, formerly file clerks, dubbed mineral experts, and jumped to $2,700. Other file clerks who were doing the same kind of work and who had incurred the ill will of the duce had 25 cents taken from their so-called salary. Other favorite file clerks were raised last January to $2,100. He tried to keep this secret, but murder will out. All file clerks doing the same kinds of work and working on the same files.

Adjudicating clerks in the said mineral division doing the same kind of work, classified accordingly as how they stood in with the duce, ranging from grade 2 to grade 7, all doing the same kind of work in the same room, with desks side by side. Clerks who incur the displeasure of the chief are blacklisted. Last spring, when wholesale discharges of the clerks were made, clerks not standing in with the plucking ring, controlled by Mussolini Obenchain, were kicked out, no matter what their ratings were. For instance, in one division, whose chief was apparently a fair man, a clerk was given a rating of 90; when same was revised by Obenchain, said rating was cut to 70, and clerk was kicked out of the service.

APPEAL BOARD A FARCE—YOU APPEAL FROM PHILIP DRUNK TO PHILIP SOBER

Clerks who appealed to the board who did not stand in the ring were blacklisted. The steam roller was put in action, and the appealing clerk flattened out, and appeal rejected.

The board, consisting of a Judge Harvey, a Judge (so called) Patterson, and an ex-file clerk named Crowley, put up a great exhibition of running the said roller. (They certainly obeyed orders.) Mr. Root couldn't have done better.

Everyone here who has been to some night law school for one term—there are 11 in town, counting the Y. M. C. A. and the K. C.'s—is called a judge.

Clerks not standing in with the ring had their appeals framed up and denied.

The whole atmosphere seems to be "trying to get something on some one."

Bond, the former chief clerk, spent his time doing fancy-design work in different colored ink at his desk to while the time away, and also spent his time trying to get even with clerks he has a grudge against, held grudges against clerks for years waiting for a chance to get him.

CHIEF M'GEE A BIG CROOK

At one time McGee was chief of Division G (railroad or contest division), but was kicked out of the office for accepting bribes from the railroads in relation to allowing their cases before his division.

OBENCHAIN THE GREAT CLASSIFIER

Obenchain, the great classifier, classified himself from $1,800 to $5,500 with a new title thrown in (special administrative officer); this name was painted on the door. But when Judge BLANTON got after him they changed his name to supervisor and cut off $1,000; in other words, shaved his title and salary a little.

ECONOMY AS SET OUT IN THE LAND OFFICE—WONDERFUL

The economy program as set out in the land office—all members of the ring and their favorites had their salaries increased, but the little fellow who needed it most was close-shaved and reduced to make the money go round; you know the Good Book says, "To him who hath"; the man in the gutter says, "Them that has, gits."

All kinds of boards were created to take of the inner circle, including the commissioner, who was jumped from $5,000 to $7,000, a nice salary for a rubber-stamp job, and Mussolini Obenchain runs the office.

THE CLASSIFICATION BOARD OF THE LAND OFFICE

The following "worthies" constitute the classification board, to wit: Messrs. Parrott, McPhaul, and the chairman, Obenchain. They classified themselves from $1,000 to $5,500.

A GREAT SALARY GRAB

In order to spread out the money they squeezed the little fellow; some got $1 per month raise, and a number got only 25 cents.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THIS FOR CLASSIFICATION?

In one room an adjudicating clerk, who did not stand in with the gang, was given a low grade; other clerks in the same room and doing the same kind of work and no better and as much were classified three grades higher. When asked why, was told by McGee that he was a rotten clerk; said clerk then saw his Senator, who got busy; the clerk then went back to McGee, who gave him a fine letter of recommendation; clerk on strength of same was promoted. He was a rotten clerk on Monday and a fine clerk on Thursday, same week.

Drunken clerks out of office for weeks get sick leave O. K'd; other clerks, not standing in with the chief, but who are honest and sober and who are really sick, have the department doctor sent out to their rooms to try and get them.

McGee stays in office after hours, goes through clerks' desks, trying to get something on them; was caught red-handed.

Stool pigeons everywhere who report to the duce. It is said the keeper makes his daily report upstairs. A regular hell hole.

POSTSCRIPT

We have a new chief clerk, a Mr. Gauze (Obenchain's hand-picked man). When Mr. Gauze, our new chief clerk, was installed, a reception was held in his office, and special invitations were sent out. It was given out that only those that "stood in" were wanted; the rest of the office force were not wanted—a close corporation. When Mr. Gauze was asked why, said it was Mr. Obenchain's suggestion and command.

Old soldiers all, for they seem to know the old army game—never give a sucker an even break.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 12, 1927.

Mr. JOSEPH F. GARTLAND,

Chief Inspector, Interior Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In view of recent developments in various "courts" throughout the country relative to oil and gas land suits, it may be of some interest to you, as chief inspector of the Interior Department, to know the reputation of the chief of the mineral division of the General Land Office, of which the oil and gas leasing section is a part, chief of same being a William J. McGee.

A number of years ago Mr. McGee was suspended for over a year and then kicked out of the office, when he was chief of the railroad division, for accepting money from the railroads for favoring and allowing their cases, which were before his division. However, by some mysterious influence he was reinstated and later made chief of the mineral division, of which the oil and gas leasing section is a part. This is a matter of record and can be easily verified.

Does Mr. Work know of this? I wonder.

In view of the Teapot Dome, Sinclair, Doheny, Fall, Denby, and other oily scandals connected with the Interior Department, an account of this person of unsavory record being selected and put at the head of the oil and gas leasing division of the land office would make some good Democratic campaign material if printed in the newspapers throughout the country just before the election. Think it over.

I know a number of antiadministration Congressmen who would like to get hold of this information and would broadcast same.

I have been informed that it is common talk in the land office that Mr. McGee is the inside man for some of the outside oil promoters, said promoters being represented by certain attorneys in this city who hang about his office.

Very respectfully,

Attorney at Law.

Mr. BLEASE. I understand that Mr. Hubert Work is the campaign manager for Mr. Hoover in the Interior Department, and that Mr. Ogden Mills is the campaign manager for Mr. Hoover in the Treasury Department. For eight years the clerks in the departments have been permitted to work along just as they have been working without friction and without trouble, but since Mr. Hoover has announced himself as a candidate for President and wants to secure the negro vote in the doubtful States, not only by him but through his influence with his campaign managers and assistants in other departments of the present administration there has begun, under the direction of Mr. Hoover, a systematic plan to humiliate white girls from whatever part of this Nation they may happen to come by placing some of them in the same category with negro employees not only in the offices but in closets in the various departments.

I think, Mr. President, that the time will come, if it has not yet arrived, when the white people of this country will wake up to the serious attack that is being made upon them as a race by this attempt at social equality on the part of certain politicians, who, regardless of their respect for the white race, are willing, in order to get a few delegates from certain sections of the country, to go to any extent to humiliate the white girls who are forced to work in the departments for a living. My purpose in inserting these letters in the RECORD is to call attention to that fact, in order that the people may be informed, if they are not already informed, of the condition in some of the departments of the Government at Washington.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Seicheprey Post, No. 2, American Legion Auxiliary, of Bristol, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Capper-Johnson bill, to provide further for the national security and defense, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the convention of the Connecticut State Dental Association, at New Haven, Conn., favoring the passage of Senate bill 3356, providing for the coordination of the public-health activities of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a telegram and papers in the nature of petitions from the Sunday Noon Club, Second Congregational Church, of Waterbury; the Connecticut League of Women Voters, of Stamford; the National Council of Jewish Women, of Bozrahville, and sundry citizens of Waterbury, South Norwalk, Wethersfield, and Canton, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the adoption of the resolution (S. He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Visiting Nurse Association, of Mystic, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Oddie bill (S. 1752), to regulate the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New England Tobacco Growers' Association, at Glastonbury, Conn., protesting against the passage of House bill 9195, providing for the importation of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes in quantities of less than 3,000 in a single package from the island of Cuba, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WAGNER. I present a resolution adopted by the highway committee of the board of supervisors of Orange County, N. Y., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is a public highway running through the military reservation at West Point; and

Whereas the right of public occupancy of the highway now existing or which may exist is reserved to the people when the land was ceded to the United States Government by the State of New York; and

Whereas this highway has been closed to the public without written authority from the War Department; and

Whereas gates have been placed in the highway which are an obstruction, narrowing the highway from 33 feet to 18 feet and causing many accidents; and

Whereas a recent decision of the court of appeals, which I offer as evidence, plainly states that the people's rights are reserved in this highway: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the highway committee of the board of supervisors of Orange County request United States Senators COPELAND and WAGNER and Congressman FISH to use their best efforts to have the permit renewed so the superintendent of public works may construct the highway across the reservation provided for by an act of the Legislature of the State of New York.

Copies of this resolution to be forwarded to Congressman FISH, United States Senators COPELAND and WAGNER, and also Colonel Greene.

Adopted.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I have here a telegram from the Nebraska Wheat Growers Association in reference to the McNary-Haugen bill, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LINCOLN, NEBR., April 14, 1928.

SMITH W. BROOKHART,
United State Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Declaration of policy McNary-Haugen bill recites "It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote the orderly marketing of agriculture commodities and to further the organization of producers of such commodities into cooperative associations." Telegram from Senator MCNARY says loan features to cooperatives in section 5 eliminated by the Senate at request of Des Moines meeting. With loan features eliminated the declaration of policy is a hoax and a fraud. Who at Des Moines wishes to deny the farmers financial assistance in developing cooperative marketing? No cooperative marketing associations as defined in the bill were represented at Des Moines nor were they invited. If the House concurs with the Senate in refusing to aid cooperatives, majority of wheat pools will publicly denounce the measure and appeal to the President to veto it. We protest the Senate action and appeal to the supporters of cooperative marketing to see that the House and conference reinstate these sections as recommended by the Senate and House Agriculture Committees. National wheat pool meeting here April 21 will take definite action against this legislation if it denies to the farmer assistance in developing control of his marketing. Des Moines meeting apparently gathering of men interested in campaign issues rather than farmers' welfare.

NEBRASKA WHEAT GROWERS ASS'N NONSTOCK COOPERATIVE, ERNEST GREEN, President.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD two editorials on the matter of flood control, one from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of April 13, 1928, and the other from the Washington Post of April 16, 1928.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Editorial on flood control legislation, taken from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of date April 13, 1928]

GAS ATTACK ON FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. MARTIN MADDEN, of Illinois, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, appears to be greatly exercised over the flood control bill that has passed the Senate and that has been favorably reported in the House. He hears, we are told, that speculators are buying lands in the Mississippi Valley that will be benefited by the project and thinks the bill as it stands presents great opportunities for graft and extravagance. He intimates that President Coolidge is alarmed by possibilities of expenditures running up to $1,500,000,000, and we gather the impression that, in his opinion, the dickens will be to pay if something isn't done to safeguard the revenues.

Is there any occasion for such alarm or for any alarm? We can see none. It seems to be a matter of arousing public uneasiness as a means of frightening the House and forcing it to make amendments to the bill in line with the ideas of the President and Mr. MADDEN. The bill provides that the project "shall be prosecuted by the Mississippi River Commission under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers." The expenditures therefore will be controlled entirely by permanent governmental agencies which are subject to the President of the United States and which for long years have had charge of river improvements.

As to the lands to be acquired, they are to be obtained through condemnation proceedings instituted by the Secretary of War in the United States district courts having jurisdiction in the localities where the property is situated, and the court in each instance is required to appoint commissioners to appraise the property and assess the compensation. The Secretary of War, however, is authorized to purchase lands necessary to the project when they are offered by the owners at a reasonable price. It is provided, moreover, that when the construction will result in benefits to any persons or corporations, municipal or private, "such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid."

All of this is in accordance with standard procedure, and it surely provides sufficient safeguards against any speculative enterprises and against graft of any sort. It makes the Secretary of War and the Federal courts responsible for the acquirement of the lands essential to the project. Can we have any more dependable agencies? The lands to be obtained will be designated in the plans decided upon by the board of review which is authorized to consider the two plans presented by the Army engineers and the Mississippi River Commission and to adjust their differences, or, if it finds it necessary, to present an original plan to Congress. It is assumed, however, that it will take the plan of the Army engineers, the Jadwin plan, which is formally adopted by the bill as the basis of consideration, and apply to it the recommendations of the commission's plan where in any specific detail it seems to be preferable. At any rate, with its final decision upon the plan the functions of this board apparently cease, and full authority to carry out the plan is fixed in the governmental agencies above stated.

How in this arrangement there could be any extravagance of design or of execution, or how it can be regarded as opening the door to graft we are unable to see. On the contrary, it seems to make sure that the design, in the first place, will be adequate and practicable from the engineering standpoint, and, in the second place, that it will be executed under the direct and exclusive control of the Federal Government by permanent agencies of its own whose record has never been stained by graft and who as engineers are more likely to avoid wasteful expenditures than any other agencies to whom it could be intrusted.

[Editorial on flood-control legislation, taken from the Washington Post of date April 16, 1928]

FLOOD LEGISLATION

Republican leaders in the House are anxious to bring about changes in the flood control bill in accordance with the wishes of President Coolidge. If the leaders can not induce the committee in charge to accept amendments they will make a fight on the floor. It is assumed that the principal change proposed is that which would exempt the lower river States from financial contributions to the cost of flood control. Another modification desired is the elimination of the provision for surveys of the great tributaries of the Mississippi. It is feared that if States and communities are exempted from contributions to the cost of flood control and surveys authorized for storage reservoirs on the tributaries, a gigantic system of water storage will be developed, with the burden falling entirely upon the United States Treasury.

The bill as passed by the Senate and approved by the House committee does not authorize any work except the control of the Mississippi below Cairo. The cost of this work is estimated at $325,000,000, but doubtless this figure will be exceeded. The bill recognizes the validity of the principle that communities relieved from flood dangers should pay a part of the cost, but it makes an exception in the case of the lower Mississippi on account of the great expense already incurred by those communities. As to surveys of tributaries, the bill does not authorize any works to be undertaken, nor does it exempt communities from paying their share of the cost.

Public opinion has been clearly expressed on the subject of Federal responsibility for controlling the Mississippi. The people of this country do not wish to make flood control contingent upon the payment of part of the cost by the inhabitants of the endangered area. The country asks that the Mississippi be controlled by the Government, and that the work be paid for by the Government. The Senate's unanimous action in passing the bill was plainly responsive to this public sentiment.

It is also universally recognized that the Mississippi will never be made entirely safe until its big tributaries are controlled. Each of these is a flood system by itself. But when it is proposed to include in the Mississippi control scheme a project for Government construction of reservoirs away up in Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Montana, Colorado, North Dakota, Kansas, New Mexico, and other States remote from the lower Mississippi, the public balks. Where is flood control to end, if every stream eventually reaching the Mississippi is to be bottled at the source?

Between an inadequate flood-control plan and an unlimited raid upon the Treasury there is a middle ground of effective flood control, without extravagant distribution of "pork." It is the duty of Congress to find this middle ground. No provision should be incorporated in the pending bill which could be cited later as a pledge for constructing any auxiliary works on any tributary. The control problem has not been solved yet. Months and probably years of study must be made before the continental water system called the Mississippi can be controlled. The most that should be done at present is to authorize surveys of the tributaries that unquestionably contribute most of the flood waters, and this authorization should be accompanied by a reservation that will unmistakably relieve Congress from undertaking any works on any of these rivers, pending further study of the entire problem.

NICARAGUAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, we have a treaty with Nicaragua with reference to an interoceanic canal. Our rights under that treaty should be protected. Furthermore, when we send an army of marines into a country, I think it is our duty to take up the national debt of that country and protect it from the ravages of our philanthropic financiers in New York.

I am, therefore, introducing a bill to require the Government to refund the Nicaraguan national debt, and head off those people who are trying to capture the national bank and the national railroad and the other resources of the Nicaraguan Republic.

The bill (S. 4077) to more effectually provide for the protection of the interests of the United States in connection with its rights to construct, operate, and maintain an interoceanic canal over Nicaraguan territory was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks just made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] about financing Nicaragua, it seems to me that it would be interesting to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Times, written by one of the specialists sent down to study the case, entitled "Twelve million dollars invested by us in Nicaragua."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Monday, February 6, 1928]

TWELVE MILLION DOLLARS INVESTED BY US IN NICARAGUA—TOTAL DIRECT INTEREST OF WALL STREET FINANCIERS THERE IS PUT AT $185,000—$10,000,000 ON EAST COAST—NEW ORLEANS BROTHERS, ONCE PEDDLERS, HAVE $8,000,000 IN FRUITS AND OTHER VENTURES—NO SIGN OF EXPLOITATION—NATIONAL BANK AND RAILWAY, FORMERLY CONTROLLED BY AMERICANS, NOW OWNED BY GOVERNMENT

By Harold N. Denny

MANAGUA, February 5.—Careful inquiry into the financial and economic situation in Nicaragua fails to disclose that dominance of American business interests which one might be led to expect from recent utterances in the United States.

In fact, American interests are probably less in Nicaragua than in any other Central American country, according to independent experts, although American interests here far exceed those of any other people. Wall Street's entire direct financial interest in this country—and indirect interest is not evident—is $185,000. This is scheduled to be paid off in three months. The Nicaraguan Government is paying 6 per cent interest on it.

These facts as to American business activities have been gleaned from authoritative sources and checked by inquiry among disinterested persons, and, in some instances, among those presumably critical of American methods.

NO EXPLOITATION FOUND

This correspondent has been unable to learn of any instances of exploitation by Americans, though he specifically asked for them. There is criticism of the red tape which the National Bank of Nicaragua imposes on those desiring loans, but there is no indication of profiteering. There is also some jealousy over the Americans employed here in offices and otherwise, who earn far more than most of the natives.

The bank, which was founded by Americans with Wall Street capital, and around which so much of the criticism of America's Nicaraguan policy has centered, is now owned entirely by the Government of Nicaragua, and all its earnings go to the Government.

The National Railroad, about which also accusations have often centered, is owned entirely by the Government and it is operated by Americans for a fixed fee. All the earnings go to Nicaragua.

The fact that the Nicaraguan Government has acquired complete control of the bank, in the eyes of many here, offers the most serious threat to the financial integrity of the country, since foolish or unscrupulous management could readily create the same sort of currency inflation which bankers were called into the country to rectify.

The total American investment in this country is estimated at $12,000,000. Ten million of this is on the east coast and is represented by banana plantations, lumber groves, and small gold and silver mining interests, which last are mostly closed down.

HOLDINGS PUT AT $8,000,000

Banana groves are owned and operated by the Standard Fruit Co., owned by Vacarro Bros., of New Orleans, one time Italian fruit peddlers. Their investment here is estimated at $8,000,000, including their ownership of the Bragmans Bluff Lumber Co.

The Cuyamel Fruit Co. is also owned in New Orleans and it is credited with a $1,000,000 investment. Both of these companies operate vessels. Various lumber companies represent most of the rest of the American investment.

The United Fruit Co., a huge corporation which has been said in the United States to dominate much of Nicaragua, is declared to have not more than $200,000 invested here. Much of this is accounted for by its Tropical Radio subsidiary. The rest is in banana lands, abandoned because they were ravaged by plant disease. Its ships do not stop at any Nicaraguan ports.

American investments on the west coast are chiefly in coffee haciendas individually owned.

The West India Oil Co., a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, is the only oil company operating in Nicaragua. It is purely a selling agency with an annual turnover of about $750,000. It sells gasoline at 45 cents a gallon, but the manager asserts that duties, taxes, and transportation costs allow a profit of a cent a gallon.

INDIANS GET $1 A DAY

Although the east coast is relatively undeveloped and semisavage, wages there where American employees dominate are found to be higher than on the west coast.

A barefoot Mosquito Indian owning only a shirt, a pair of trousers, and a machete gets $1 a day for cutting bananas for Americans, whereas the laborer on a similar sociological level picking coffee in western Nicaragua receives from 50 to 60 cents a day.

The British rank second in business interests in Nicaragua, with an investment of $2,500,000, largely represented by commercial houses and coffee farms. They also control the Anglo-South American Bank in Managua, a branch of the London house. There is also some British capital in the Anglo-Central American Bank here.

Other nations have scattering investments, largely in shops and importing and exporting houses.

The United States is also strikingly dominant in commerce with Nicaragua, buying more than half of Nicaragua's total exports and selling her 70 per cent of her imports.

WALL STREET ENTERED IN 1911

Wall Street first came into Nicaragua in 1911 at the request of the American State Department with the object of straightening out the depreciated currency and heavy obligations to Europe, which created a danger of European steps looking to collection.

Brown Bros. and J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, lent $1,500,000 at 6 per cent and 1 per cent commission, with which was established the national bank with $300,000 capital. They also lent $725,000 for various governmental expenses. The bank established the cordoba equivalent to the dollar as the unity of currency, and it is still on a gold basis. Fifty-one per cent of the bank stock was owned by the bankers and the remainder by the Nicaraguan Government.

Nicaragua, by agreement with the bankers, raised the custom duties and employed Clifford D. Ham, an American, as Controller General of Customs. He was approved by the United States Secretary of State. The Government also granted the bankers an option of 51 per cent of the stock of the National Railway, to be run by an American corporation and completely controlled by the bankers until the money due them was repaid.

REPAYING HEAVIEST DEBT

Nicaragua's most onerous foreign obligation, one for $6,000,000 to the Ethelburg Syndicate of England, was refunded under the bank's guidance. It has now been reduced to $3,500,000 and is being rapidly paid off.

The bank has made several 6 per cent loans with 1 per cent commission since to tide it over crises, all of which are now repaid with the exception of $185,000.

Besides the interest on its loans the New York bankers make an indefinite sum on the Nicaraguan bank's reserve fund, now $750,000. This reserve for the Nicaraguan currency, averaging $2,000,000, is on deposit with the Guaranty Trust Co. and Seligmans. The New Yorkers pay 3 per cent interest and have the use of the money as deposits.

Besides being the sole bank of issue in Nicaragua and, as such, controller of the currency, the bank conducts a general banking business here and is seeking to promote thrift by establishing savings accounts paying 6 per cent.

HOW BANK MAKES LOANS

The bank is criticized because it will not extend credits to agriculturists. Louis Rosenthal, the manager, explained this by saying that the slender, fluctuating deposits of the bank necessitated keeping the funds liquid. When a coffee grower seeks funds to move his crop the bank lends them at 12 per cent, against a mortgage on the crop and plantation. The coffee itself is accepted as currency and supplied against the loan, the bank buying it outright at the market price or accepting it on consignment.

Mr. Rosenthal asserted that the bank did not charge a commission on such sales.

There were numerous foreclosures on plantations following the depression of 1921, but there have been few, if any, since and, according to the manager, the bank now does not own any property except the realty occupied by the bank building.

The American interest in the bank was taken over in 1918 by the Mercantile Bank of the Americas, comprising the Guaranty Trust, the Mechanics & Metals Bank, Brown Bros., Seligmans, the Continental Commercial of Chicago, the National Shawmut of Boston, and the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. of New Orleans. This group later withdrew from the Central American field.

When a $1,000,000 loan to the Diaz government was necessary last year to pay off the Liberal and Conservative armies under the Stimson peace agreement, Brown Bros. withdrew and the Guaranty Trust Co. replaced them as cooperator with Seligmans.

A prominent American here told the correspondent that one of the Seligmans had informed him that Brown Bros. withdrew because they were tired of the constant criticism and annoyance over their paltry investment, from which they did not make sufficient to repay them for their trouble. Mr. Seligman was quoted as saying that they were remaining as a matter of pride and from a desire to see a thing which they thought vital to Nicaragua through to a success.

The resources of the bank have doubled since its organization. From the first, Nicaragua received nearly half the bank's earnings. The Nicaraguan Government bought the American's majority interest in 1924 for slightly less than $300,000. From then on the bank's entire earnings, now more than 16 per cent, have gone into the Nicaraguan Treasury. With this the Nicaraguans gained the right to elect their own officials and directors. The management was retained, however, with five Nicaraguan directors and four Americans.

The American directors were R. F. Loree, president, Philip Tillinghast, vice president, Jeremiah Jenks, and Earle Baillie, a partner of Seligman's. The bank is still incorporated in Connecticut.

BANK AND RAILWAY SECURE LOAN

When the loan was made last summer the Government pledged the stock of both the bank and the railway until its repayment. By the loan agreement one American was added to the directorate in place of a Nicaraguan, giving the American a temporary majority.

When the remainder of the loan is repaid on April 3, as expected, the Government will have the right to displace the entire American personnel and to do as it pleases about the currency. But it is expected that past disasters due to bad credit and currency inflation will restrain it from any unwise action.

Complete ownership of the railway, valued at $3,500,000, was similarly bought by Nicaragua at less than the book value of the shares. The road is managed by the J. G. White Management Corporation, of New York, for $1,400 a month.

The White Co. also acts as purchasing agent on a small commission. White's manager here is a Nicaraguan trained in engineering in the United States. The assistant manager is Carman Diaz, brother of President Diaz. He is said to be both able and conscientious.

The road has been prosperous, paying 6 and 7 per cent, nearly half of which went to the Nicaraguan Government before the purchase and all of which goes to Nicaragua now.

NICARAGUAN TRADE PROSPERS

Nicaragua is prospering at the present time, with the trade balance in her favor. She exports goods yearly valued at $13,000,000 and imports $10,000,000 worth.

The country has an unusually good coffee crop. Good prices and reduction in the Sandino rebel operations have made possible the marketing of most of the crop.

The nation's debt is now $6,000,000, apart from the $15,000,000 claims for damages, many by Americans, as a result of the revolution. A joint high commission headed by an American, Roscoe Hill, is now canvassing the claims, and undoubtedly they will be radically cut, as was the case in 1911, when a claims commission dominated by Americans reduced the claims of American concessionaires from $7,000,000 to $500,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in connection with the article which was asked to be inserted in the RECORD a few moments ago, I ask that immediately following it there be printed a speech delivered by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] before the chamber of commerce at Syracuse last Saturday evening, which was on this very subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH DELIVERED BY SENATOR WALTER E. EDGE, OF NEW JERSEY, BEFORE THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, SYRACUSE, N. Y., SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 14

There is perhaps no national or international controversy so completely misunderstood by the American people as the existing relationship between the United States and Nicaragua.

A few weeks ago the country was shocked on reading press dispatches to the effect that a number of United States marines had been killed from ambush in Nicaragua. Immediately sorrow was mingled with indignation, and the question very naturally asked on every side by friend and critic of the administration, "Why are our marines in Nicaragua? Why are we apparently at war in a friendly country?"

While nothing could be more regrettable than the loss of a single American soldier on duty in Nicaragua or any other part of the world, still the fact remains that our Government is under a solemn contract with both the existing conservative government of Nicaragua and the liberals, who were a short time ago in revolution, to maintain our troops in Nicaragua at least until the forthcoming presidential election is held.

Permit me to review briefly happenings which have preceded the present situation. In doing this I do not propose to go back at all to the question so often debated in the Senate as to whether the United States was justified or otherwise in recognizing the present Diaz administration. We all realize that the assumption of power by Diaz was surrounded by conditions which, I admit, were subject to honest difference of opinion. I will confine my defense of the present situation simply from the time President Coolidge sent Colonel Stimson as his personal representative to Nicaragua and to the obvious fact that the marines are now in Nicaragua and the immediate question before us, Shall they be withdrawn or shall they remain?

In my judgment, to withdraw our marines from Nicaragua at this time would be as reprehensible and indefensible as to repudiate a Government bond. Either the word and definite assurance of the United States is good and to be depended upon or it is not.

Our understanding now is not alone with President Diaz or the conservative government of Nicaragua but with the leaders and accredited representatives of all political parties. The only known exception or faction in disagreement with this contract—Sandino—has been publicly repudiated by his former chief and associates.

The question before the country to-day is not primarily whether the traditions or policy of a century, to the effect that a country ceases to be a nation proud of its sovereignty if it fails to protect its citizens in any civilized country in the world, but rather the question of fact as to whether a signed agreement in the name of the Chief Executive of the Nation with all recognized factions is to be honored at home or otherwise.

Before discussing this situation I want to emphasize that I personally adhere to that school of thought and conviction handed down through administration after administration, proudly proclaimed and protected by every political party that has been in power, that a nation would admit its utter incapacity to govern if it failed to protect its citizens, and to a reasonable extent their property interests, under any flag in the world. However, I repeat, that is not the particular issue which we are facing at this moment.

You ask why we keep our marines in Nicaragua? For the simple reason that we have promised at the request of all factions to prepare for and supervise the next presidential election, and through past experiences we must know that if in the meantime we withdrew our marines, civil war or revolution is bound to ensue. Whether we can withdraw them after the election—and I sincerely hope we can—is, however, a matter to be decided at that time. I have full confidence that the President and the State Department will decide wisely.

Demands are now made that irrespective of contracts and agreements and understandings between our representatives and the representatives of all parties in Nicaragua, that our marines shall be immediately withdrawn and that Nicaragua be left to solve her own problems. In fact, a resolution to that effect has been introduced in the Senate, but I am happy to admit has received little support.

Should we desert Nicaragua at this stage, the liberals would surely revolt in utter despair, and the Republic would be a screaming madhouse in less than a week. Such a move would violate our faith with the liberals, who laid down their arms and rely on our solemn word. In fact, Sandino, the discredited guerrilla, would probably occupy the capital.

We hear much criticism of Colonel Stimson having been sent to Nicaragua; that he was without authority. Can any reasonable man deny the fact that, through his successful negotiations in bringing the rebel army from the field to disarm, that thousands of lives of Nicaraguans were undoubtedly saved, as well as the property of our own citizens and possibly their lives?

The question has been raised as to what authority the President of the United States possessed to agree to or countenance the agreement made by his representative, Colonel Stimson. It occurs to me the question might better be reversed as to what authority Congress or any other tribunal, for that matter, had to prevent the President from entering into such an agreement if in his judgment, considering our own interests as well, it was the wise and proper thing to do. There are many reasons why, in my judgment, there can be no serious question of the President's power and complete justification.

First, as to power. The Constitution delegates to the President alone the power and responsibility of maintaining foreign relations. Certainly no act of Congress can supersede that. The method to be employed is necessarily, under the Constitution, entirely with the Executive, so long as he does not declare war. That right rests alone with Congress.

In considering this responsibility all must admit the close relationship between what is generally known as defensive warfare as compared to offensive hostilities. An Executive sending troops to protect life and property with no intention of offensive warfare, and thus no necessity to ask Congress to declare war, may meet a situation similar to that now confronting us in Nicaragua. What was a purely defensive military movement extending over a period of months with no casualties, as demonstrated by the testimony of marine and naval officers before the Foreign Relations Committee, suddenly, because of self-defense and conditions beyond the control of the marines, necessitates an offensive movement. That is not, in my judgment, a declaration of war. It was the necessary protection of the lives of our own troops and our own citizens. To raise the technical point that we should not have pursued Sandino without securing a declaration of war from Congress is not only impracticable and technical but demonstrates little confidence in the Chief Executive, no matter who he may be or what party he may represent. Of course, Sandino represents no government. Against whom would Congress declare war?

In this present situation, as the sworn testimony demonstrates, our troops were attacked in the night by Sandino and his forces. Several marines were killed. They were defending their own lives, and later they pursued the guerrilla into the mountain fastnesses. I presume, technically, this was offensive warfare, but could the commandant of the marines send word to Congress and ask Congress to give him permission to pursue Sandino because that was offensive warfare and in the meantime huddle together waiting further attacks from the guerrilla chieftain who would have under those conditions an unmolested opportunity to refresh his troops? Again, it can be easily conceived that a situation somewhat similar might occur when Congress was not in session. If we are to follow such a technical interpretation as has been presented, what would happen in that event? The entire criticism is puerile and unworthy an American.

Anyhow, there can never be any practical distinction between defensive and offensive military operations. There is only one safe and human manner to carry out such authority, and that is to give the commanding officer, the lives of the troops being in his keeping, unlimited opportunity to use his best judgment rather than wait for a political body to tell him how to conduct military maneuvers. In such warfare, 10 minutes might mean the safety or the destruction of the American force or an American family.

Then there is the Monroe doctrine, which for over 100 years has been the beacon through both Republican and Democratic administrations, and under which, as is well known, the President of the United States acts in his best judgment to protect the territorial integrity of the Western Hemisphere.

I realize this particular Stimson agreement is perhaps not called for by the strict terms of the Monroe doctrine, but this agreement was the outcome of intervention under the Monroe doctrine, and in the President's judgment and in the judgment of many countrymen, is a decision, if the contract is successfully carried to its conclusion, that will probably make intervention less necessary in the future.

Then there is the consideration of ordinary humanity. A destructive revolution in Nicaragua had been going on for months. Hundreds of lives had been lost, and there was no immediate prospect of a cessation of hostilities. Certainly the negotiation of this agreement stopped those hostilities. A pitched battle was imminent at the time. No one can tell how many lives were saved through the Stimson agreement. True, and most regrettable, the lives of some American soldiers have been given in the effort to carry it out. That the policy of the Government should be criticized because of this deplorable and regrettable fact is unfair, inconsiderate, and inconsistent if we propose maintaining the traditions of centuries and this strong country of ours continues to protect American lives and American property.

Then there is a fourth reason—precedent—as established by the sending of John Lind to Mexico by President Woodrow Wilson.

The question has been raised, Why should the marines pursue or attack Sandino if he was only a bandit? If they must remain there in order to supervise the election, they should have kept out of actual military operations. Apparently the home critics do not take into account that this bandit chief, Sandino, has ambushed and killed American soldiers, has occupied American property, has exacted payment from American citizens, has destroyed American property, and has attacked cities and villages apparently for the sole purpose of ravage and loot. Surely if the American Government has any responsibility, it is to protect our own citizens.

Deploring as we all do the loss of a single American life in Nicaragua, I wonder if the home critics ever realize that through the encouragement they give to such men as Sandino they are unquestionably strengthening him and making it more probable that more American lives will be sacrificed. As a matter of fact, the dispatching of Colonel Stimson was primarily to carry out the very suggestion made by Senator BORAH and other frank critics of the recognition of President Diaz, as the only practical method to stop hostilities and self-destruction in Nicaragua and to assure the Liberals, the party out of power, an honest election.

As to whether the policy of sending our troops to protect American interests in that section of the country where the Monroe doctrine applies is wise or otherwise one must also give consideration to the attitude of other great powers. It is a well-known fact that Great Britain, Italy, and Belgium, all of which have nationals in Nicaragua, advised our Government if we would not protect their citizens, then they would be compelled to do so. Has the time arrived that we should reverse our national policy and permit nations across the sea to take command of situations such as this in the Western Hemisphere?

Of course, it is a well-known axiom that the unselfish arbitrator in any dispute, be it domestic or otherwise, always ultimately occupies the position of being more or less criticized and maligned by both sides. Certainly, however, no responsible element either in Central America or in this country will contend that the United States Government has any imperialistic designs in Nicaragua or any other country in the world. The extent to which we are justified in protecting American property rights is a subject which warrants discussion and debate, but that our efforts to protect such rights are in any way a design to actually control the governments of any country I do not believe is seriously contended by even home critics of the administration policy.

An interesting development of the present criticism of the policy of the United States in Nicaragua is the complete reversal of form on the part of critics at home. In a few months they have turned a flip-flop or a right about face.

When the question of the recognition of President Diaz, the conservative, was before the country and the Senate, these same home critics were vigorous in their denunciation of the State Department. Their entire sympathy was with General Moncada, the leader of the Liberal Party and the commander of the revolutionists, who was waging battle with Diaz and the government we had recognized.

When Colonel Stimson, as President Coolidge's representative, arrived on the scene and succeeded in bringing the waring elements together and General Moncada agreed to lay down his arms as well as the government troops, providing the United States would guarantee a fair presidential election, then our home critics commenced to berate Moncada. He had sold out, some inferred. I wonder who would buy him off? Certainly not the bankers, because, according to the home critics of a few months ago, the Liberal Party is supposed to oppose the American bankers. Certainly not the conservatives, because they naturally desired to retain power, and there had been evidence that some of them, Charmorra at least, opposed the United States protecting the election. Certainly the United States did not buy off Moncada, as, of course, there would be no possible reason for doing so. No; Moncada demonstrated that he really was a patriot and, given an opportunity for a fair contest at a civil election, he was glad to help stop the butchery of fellow citizens on both sides. However, that type of patriotism did not serve the purpose of our home critics, and now their former martyr falls under their ban.

The Liberal Party recently held a convention in Managua, Nicaragua, to nominate a president. This convention took place only a month or so ago, and General Moncada, among other prominent liberals, participated in the convention. Remember, our Government's alleged unfairness to this same Liberal Party had been the subject of our own home critics' tirades for months previous to the Stimson agreement.

General Moncada made a speech at this liberal convention. I wish I had time to read it all. But permit me to read just one paragraph, which demonstrates the difficulty General Moncada, the home critics' idol a few months ago, is now having to understand the new attitude taken by the Heflins, Wheelers, and Dills, as well as other former allies. I quote:

"In the Liberal Party only one window was opened, a light in the far distance, the free election of 1928 guaranteed by the Government at Washington signified the establishment of our protest of 18 years. * * * In the appreciation of all this we have painfully observed how the opinion of those have changed who during the war praised our heroism, who applauded from afar when butcherings took place, but who never helped the heroes with one cent or one cartridge. Those who clamored to the world the justice which accompanied the Nicaraguan Liberals now desire that the American marines, the surety of our liberty, our lives, and property, retire to their own country. This is the humanity and generosity which blazons some representative brothers of America."

This well illustrates the inconsistency of the home critic. Losing Moncada, as the opportunity to be nasty, one of our Senators recently on the floor of the Senate likened Sandino to George Washington—that he was fighting for his country and endeavoring to rid his country of invaders. Let's see about that. Here are the facts:

When General Moncada agreed to lay down his arms, he called his generals together and they acquiesced in his judgment to enter into the agreement proposed by Colonel Stimson and to be guaranteed by the United States Government. Sandino, according to General Moncada, was one of those generals. Nevertheless he went off with his followers, taking their arms with them, and commenced the guerrilla warfare which has at least delayed the peace all had anticipated. Demonstrating that General Moncada was entirely justified in his statement that Sandino had gone back on his word instead of being the patriot he is pictured, only in the United States, permit me to read a translation of a letter written by Sandino in Spanish, a photostatic copy of which I have in my possession, which should completely establish the accuracy of General Moncada's statements and in all fairness should compel a cessation of the sympathy given to Sandino in some quarters of the United States.

MAY 9, 1927.

General JOSE M. MONCADA,

Boaco.

ESTEEMED GENERAL: I take pleasure in informing you that having arrived at this place I have found myself in a difficult position due to the fact that all of my followers have not joined me, since I have found but a few chiefs, the rest of my troops having gone to Jinotega, the place from whence they came. For this reason I feel that my remaining at this place will avail me nothing, all of my followers having disbanded.

I have decided to go to Jinotega again to assemble my men in order to collect all the arms. In this case I shall remain there awaiting your orders.

I likewise delegate my rights in order that you may arrange the matter as may suit you best, informing me of the result at Jinotega, which I shall occupy with my troops.

The disbanding of my men is due to their not finding anything to eat and for this reason they have left. However, I assure you that as soon as I arrive they must all come where I am and then I shall collect all the arms.

(Formal ending.)

(Signed) A. C. SANDINO.

Certainly this letter is undeniable evidence that Sandino over his own signature had agreed to collect the arms from his followers and had delegated his rights in the matter of an armistice to his commanding officer, General Moncada, to "arrange the matter as may suit you best."

Apparently there will always be critics of the Government's policy in its relation to foreign powers no matter who is President of the United States or which political party is in power, or what the policy may be. As is evidenced in the case of Nicaragua, the home critics will shift from one position to another in order that they may find something to criticize. In other words, the critics of the administration do not want peace. They would not have any opportunity to criticize their own country if there was peace. As long as some one, guerrilla or otherwise, will fight and kill our fellow countrymen they are patriots.

If the commanding general of the so-called rebel army can not speak for 95 per cent of his followers, certainly Senators of the United States are in no way commissioned or delegated to speak for him. When there is an opportunity for peace in the country, then some one has been bought off. How can anyone have patience with a situation such as this? It can not be in the interest of humanity, because comparative peace has only come through the policy now being followed by the United States.

There is one other criticism that is frequently heard.

Why should the United States supervise an election in a foreign country that it is none of their affairs?

Generally speaking, right off the bat, I agree the average citizen would take that view. However, the average citizen must consider this question in its relationship to the responsibility and duty of the President to protect American life and property under any flag in the world. If in the Western Hemisphere where under the terms of the Monroe doctrine we have for 100 years maintained close relationships with our neighbors in the south, it is deemed in the interest of peace and the protection of the lives and property of American citizens to supervise an election rather than through armed intervention, is it not in the interests of all concerned to adopt this course?

At least in Nicaragua this policy has stopped a bloody civil war and made friends of the Liberal Party who had heretofore considered us oppressive. In other words, it has made possible an agreement between all factions excepting one small band, repudiated by former associates. The supervising of elections in Central America and the Caribbean is not a new policy. The United States has supervised elections in Panama, in Cuba, in Haiti, Santo Domingo, and Nicaragua. These have occurred during both Republican and Democratic administrations. This policy has been determined by the Chief Executives of those days as a peaceful method through which to assist our southern neighbors and protect our own interests. So it must be understood that the supervision of this election in Nicaragua is in no way an innovation but a form of practical intervention which should bring beneficial results.

Some of the Government's critics confine their fault finding mainly to the charge that the sending of marines to Central American and Caribbean countries is for the protection of the international banker; that loans have been made, and when interest can not be collected, American troops are dispatched for this purpose. Further that loans have been made on such onerous terms that they are usurious.

As a matter of fact, the last loan made to the Nicaraguan Government carried interest at 6 per cent with the necessary lien on various assets of the Nicaraguan Government. I am informed the loan has been rapidly amortized and the amount outstanding is less than half of the original advance.

I am further informed that this loan, which was originally $1,000,000, now less than $500,000, is the only loan owed to American bankers. If this information is correct, then how exaggerated has been the charge of our Government's unholy alliance with American bankers. Why under the laws of the various States of the Union the legal rate of interest runs up as high as 10 per cent in some sections and the contract rate of interest considerably higher. It would not seem under these circumstances that the loans to Nicaragua, at least, were such as justified criticism.

The loans are always for the purpose of building railroads or for the purchase of such supplies and equipment or maintaining of police forces, which, of course, would necessarily be required. So when one really examines and investigates the various charges, they are rapidly dissipated.

I can well understand and thoroughly appreciate keen differences of opinion as to the wisdom and justification of the policies relating to domestic affairs. Men in and out of public life differ as to the tariff; differ on the prohibition issue, differ on farm problems, industrial problems, and many other issues which daily confront us. Such honest and sincere differences of opinion are expected, yes, invited, and in the long run the best solution usually prevails.

But, my friends, when we are dealing with foreign policies, when it is our country and our flag in contact with other countries, is it not possible to close the ranks and give unswerving support to the Chief Executive of the Nation, whatever party he may represent? A divided nation on foreign policies only makes more difficult the protection of American interests in various parts of the world. Surely there is no American who at heart does not want to protect American nationals and interests. It is difficult to understand when reviewing, as I have attempted to do, the situation in Nicaragua, how Americans go out of their way to add to the burdens of the Executive. As a young man, I was always impressed with the old saying, "My country, may she always be right; but right or wrong, my country." To-day it seems to be the slogan of some of our citizens, "our country always wrong."

Any errors of judgment made, and, of course, no Chief Executive in dealing with a foreign nation in a foreign atmosphere can always be right, should be recognized as such. It is impossible to even think much less charge that any man who could be elected President of the United States could have any other intention than fair dealing with our neighbors. I repeat, criticism of domestic policies is expected and can be constructive, but a failure to unite and present a solid front when the United States is in contact with other nations of the world is, in my judgment, impossible of defense.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO LAUSANNE TREATY

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 199), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas for more than 2,500 years the Armenians inhabited what is known as Asia Minor, and for centuries maintained an independent government, but with other Christian nations in Asia Minor and in southeastern Europe ultimately had imposed upon them the cruel and merciless rule of the Turks; and

Whereas the oppressive and inhuman treatment of said Armenians and other Christian peoples by the Turkish Government resulted in military conflicts between Turkey and various European nations, the latter seeking to free such Christian peoples from Turkish political control, or to secure protection for them from Turkish cruelties; and

Whereas the United States and the allied nations, during and following the World War, declared that among the objectives sought were the establishment of an Armenian State within Asia Minor and within the territory which had been occupied by the Armenian race for more than 2,500 years, and the protection of Christian minorities residing in territory under the control of Turkey; and

Whereas the treaty of Sevres made provisions for the realization of such objectives, and an independent Armenian State was set up and given de jure recognition by the United States and the allied nations as well as other governments; and

Whereas the President of the United States was selected by Turkey and the allied nations to fix and determine the boundary between said Armenian States and Turkey, and pursuant to said selection the President fixed and determined the said boundary line, the area of Turkish Armenia as so determined being 40,000 square miles; and

Whereas during the World War Armenia was an ally of the United States and the allied nations and furnished several hundred thousand troops who fought valiantly during the war (sustaining casualties in battle of more than one hundred thousand) and contributed directly to the defeat of the Central Powers in Palestine, Mesopotamia, and in the Caucasus, and indirectly to their defeat on the western front, and following the defection of Russia prevented for eight months the capture by the Central Powers of the Baku oil fields; and

Whereas the allied nations and the United States gave assurances that the rights of Aremnia would be recognized and protected, and the President of the United States on the 8th day of November, 1922, declared that "everything which may be done will be done to protect the Armenian people and preserve to them the rights which the Sevres treaty understood to bestow"; and

Whereas after said Sevres treaty had been entered into various Turkish factions united under Kemal Pasha, and set up a government in opposition to the Turkish Government, and upon gaining political control repudiated said treaty and joined with Soviet Russia in attempting to destroy the Armenian State, and in the execution of their purposes said Kemalists killed hundreds of thousands of Armenians and drove those remaining in Asia Minor and in Turkish Armenia from their homes, confiscating their property and subjecting them to cruel and barbarous treatment, and also killed tens of thousands of persons of Hellenic descent who were residing in Asia Minor and Thrace, and expelled more than a million others from their homes; and

Whereas the supporters of said Kemal Pasha after obtaining political and military control of Turkey, set up a Government under the dictatorship of said Kemal Pasha; that representatives of said Government of the United States and allied powers met at Lausanne in 1922 and 1923 and negotiated treaties commonly called the Lausanne treaties; and

Whereas prior to said conference the United States, through its Secretary of State, laid down seven conditions to be complied with before any treaty would be entered into by the United States with the Turkish Government, and Ambassador Child, who represented the United States at said conference, declared in December, 1922, a number of these essential conditions as laid down by the Secretary of State and implied in the assurance given by the President of the United States; and

Whereas, notwithstanding said declaration and the statement of conditions laid down by said Secretary of State, a treaty with said Kemalists was negotiated by the United States on the 6th day of August, 1923, which abandoned said conditions announced by the Secretary of State and indicated in the assurance of the President of the United States; and

Whereas certain concessions were obtained by citizens of the United States, including a share in the oil fields of Mosul, in the interest of the Standard Oil Co. and the Gulf Refining Co., and it is alleged that said concessions were a matter of consideration in the negotiation of said treaty and influenced the making of said treaty, which contained provisions unfavorable to the United States and its citizens, and contrary to the position taken by the officials of the United States, wherein an independent Armenian State was to be established and the Christian minorities in Turkey were to be protected and their rights secured; and

Whereas within the Province of Van Bitlis and Erzerum, constituting a part of Asia Minor, in which for more than 25 centuries Armenians had their homes, important and valuable undeveloped oil fields exist which the Kemalist Government desires to acquire and permanently incorporate within the boundaries of Turkey as now claimed by said Kemalist Government; and

Whereas said oil fields are within that part of the Armenian State, as its boundaries were defined by the President of the United States and recognized by the allied nations, and constitute one of the chief resources within the boundaries of Turkey as claimed by the Kemalist Government, and are desired by persons and corporations engaged in the oil business outside of Turkey or who are operating extensively in the production and distribution of oil in various parts of the world; and

Whereas after said treaty above referred to was negotiated, it was transmitted by the President of the United States to the Senate for its action thereon, but no hearings were held upon said treaty and no sufficient information submitted by the State Department to the Senate with reference to the treaty and the matters herein referred to sufficient to justify the Senate in ratifying said treaty; and

Whereas prior to and since the signing of said treaty the Kemalist Turkish Government has exhibited a cynical disregard of treaty obligations and has continued its cruel and oppressive course toward Christian subjects of Turkey residing within its borders, and has expelled thousands of Christians of Greek descent, and hundreds of thousands of Armenians who are now without home or country, many of whom have been and now are recipients of financial and other aid from the people of the United States and other countries; and

Whereas the American people are deeply interested in all questions affecting the Near East, and particularly the Armenians and other Christian peoples who resided within the Turkish Empire and the Christian minorities who still survive and are found within the boundaries of Turkey, and are desirous of knowing the facts concerning the negotiation of said treaty of Lausanne, the reasons for abandoning by said treaty the Armenian State and the Armenian people, and assenting to the demands of the Kemalist Government, and are also desirous of knowing whether the Kemalist Government is worthy of being recognized by the United States and is competent to discharge its international obligations and is willing to conform to the standards which guide civilized nations in their relations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, directed to inquire into the matters and things hereinbefore recited, and particularly to ascertain—

(a) What reasons led to the abandonment of the conditions laid down by the Secretary of State October 30, 1922, as conditions precedent to the negotiation of a treaty with Turkey and to the disregard of the assurances contained in the statement of the President of the United States under date of November 8, 1922.

(b) What, if any, action was taken by the State Department in procuring a share in the Mosul oil fields in the interests of the Standard Oil Co. and the Gulf Refining Co.

(c) What discussions took place between the representatives of the United States at said conference and the representatives of the Kemalist Government and allied nations participating in said conference concerning the Turkish Petroleum Co. or other companies interested in oil in the Mosul district or in any part of Turkey, and what, if any, claims or demands were made by representatives of the United States with respect to it or its nationals obtaining an interest in said oil or oil fields.

(d) What notes or other communications were exchanged between the State Department and the representatives of the United States and the representatives of the Kemalist Government concerning oil concessions or interests in any oil fields in Turkey or in the Mosul district, and also between the United States and the allied nations or their representatives, and all persons who represented said nations at said Lausanne conference.

(e) What causes led to the abandonment by the representatives of the United States at the Lausanne conference of the position theretofore taken by the State Department and by the President of the United States with respect to the Armenian State and what reasons led to the signing by the American representatives of said Lausanne treaty.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to submit a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the activities of the three hundred and fifty-odd associations here which undertake to run the Government at so much per each influence exerted. I desire to have inquired into the sources of their finances, what means they use to get the unsophisticated to contribute, the amount of such contributions, and what efforts they make to regulate or control Congress.

As I have said, Mr. President, there are between 300 and 400 of such associations whose names are listed in the telephone directory of Washington, ranging all the way from associations for the hard of hearing to associations for the protection of pedestrians; in fact, nearly every activity of men is capitalized under the name of some kind of an association.

There is one organization, Mr. President, that has something to do with the national parks. That association made an unfavorable report on a project in my State. Members of the association were called before the committee, where it was disclosed that not one of them had ever seen the area or knew anything about it, although they were flooding the country with literature in opposition to it. It developed as to this association, which seemed to be composed largely of three people, that the chairman gets $7,500 a year, that the secretary gets $3,000 a year, and its activities are primarily to get somebody to contribute the money to pay these salaries. It does not hesitate at all to circularize the public with untruths, and then seems to have no shame when the untruths are exposed.

I have in my hand now a circular of another association, which is called the National Reclamation Association, of which George H. Maxwell is executive director, in which it is said:

> The United States Daily for April 6, 1928, on the front page carries a two-column article headed "President wants flood control placed on businesslike basis."

Down further, in another paragraph, it says:

> It is the exact opposite of what is provided for in the half-baked deceptive political makeshift levee hierarchy higher levees death trap bill known as the Jones-Reid bill, now pending in Congress.

There follow some other statements, every one of them being a lie, for a lie may be uttered where one knows the facts and states the opposite, or where, not knowing the facts, he undertakes to assert the facts to be what he says.

I should like to know who finances that sort of propaganda here in the District of Columbia. I am not opposed to free speech, but I am opposed to exercising the privilege to tell a lie at the expense of honest effort. Therefore I am introducing a resolution to have all these fake associations come before a committee and lay before that committee the literature that they use to have people make contributions to them. Then, if they are influencing legislation, I want them to tell in what manner they do it. I want them to say what Member of the Senate or what Member of the House they influence, and by what means they influence him.

As all of you will recall who read A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court, when the King was caught one night when he was out without his official robes and sold into slavery, he brought only $7.50. His complaint was that if his pedigree had been known, he thought he would have brought $25. I am going to make those folks who pretend that they are exerting influence here show what they get for it and what they give in return for it; that is all.

Why, when I introduced an antilobbying bill which passed the Senate, some of them objected to the report and came to see me. One young lady, who persuaded me that she had been very grossly misrepresented, said that their association had nothing to do with legislation. I have discovered her out here in the lobby nearly every day since, calling out Members of the Senate, propagandizing them for something.

A bill that I introduced had for its aim to make the man who gambles at least gamble in his own resources; that seeks to deny to people the right to gamble in the sweat and blood of the 30,000,000 farmers in this country, and likewise affect adversely the consuming public. There has been a lobby here from every State in the Union, calling out Members of the Senate into the lobby to tell them the passage of this bill would destroy the orderly marketing of farm products. I want all these people to tell us who financed them and what induces them to try to constitute themselves a third house of the Congress of the United States and write legislation in lobby rooms. It will be very helpful, and, when the resolution passes, if there is a committee named which will make them show their hand, there will be more "for rent" signs hanging on office buildings down town than have been seen here since the war.

Everybody here knows that these parasites, these leeches that are obtaining money from people away from here under the belief that they can influence legislation, are without power to do it. They are obtaining money under false pretenses. They are living by ill-gotten means just as much as if they had put their hands in people's pockets. They are no better.

I am perfectly willing to concede, and I have always conceded, that there are men and women here who represent associations or combinations that have information that, imparted to committees, is helpful; and nobody would curtail their activities. We are glad to have them. They are not ashamed to say for whom they speak. Their methods are well known. They are entirely honorable; but the activities of these folks like Maxwell and others that send out these lying letters, not because they expect to influence legislation, but because they expect to make somebody away from here think they can do it, and have them contribute to their support, have become a national disgrace.

I want to congratulate the State of Kentucky because the grand jury at Frankfort last week indicted 23 lobbyists. They were officeholders, some of them. They were representatives of nearly every conceivable kind of interest. They belonged to a bipartisan organization. They were just the common leeches that infest every legislative body everywhere, trying to sell an influence they never possessed, obtaining money under false pretenses from people who do not know the facts.

I am not going to ask for the consideration of the resolution now, Mr. President. I want to introduce it, and I shall call it up to-morrow.

I have here a letter signed by Edward Moir and Joseph W. Randall, of the Carded Woolen Manufacturers' Association, so far as I know an entirely reputable association, who are complaining that they themselves, a legitimate business interest, have been prejudiced by lobbyists who have infested Congress. I also have here a letter from the New York Mercantile Exchange, evidently in response to some lobbyist's activity, protesting against a bill and asking the Senate to vote against it, when the date of the letter shows that the bill had been passed three days before they wrote the letter; but this lobbyist, having overslept, stirred them up to expend money and file a protest against legislation that had already passed the Congress. I want to protect that kind of a business against the activities of lobbyists, Mr. President.

I ask to have the resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 197), as follows:

Whereas it is charged that the lobbyists located in and around Washington filch from the American public more money under a false claim that they can influence legislation than the legislative branch of this Government costs the taxpayers; and

Whereas the lobbyists seek by all means to capitalize for themselves every interest and every sentiment of the American public which can be made to yield an unclean dollar for their greedy pockets: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, (1) That a special committee to be appointed by the President of the Senate consisting of three members is hereby authorized.

(2) Said committee is empowered and instructed to inquire into the activities of these lobbying associations and lobbyists.

(3) To ascertain of what their activities consist, how much, and from what source they obtain their revenues.

(4) How much of these moneys they expend and for what purpose and in what manner.

(5) What effort they put forth to affect legislation.

(6) Said committee shall have the power to subpœna witnesses, administer oaths, send for books and papers, to employ a stenographer, and do those things necessary to make the investigation thorough.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

EMPLOYMENT OF FEDERAL PRISONERS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have received a letter this morning from the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers—I assume other Senators have received a similar letter—requesting support for the so-called Hawes-Cooper bill, being Senate bill 1940, now before Congress, and on our calendar.

In this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New Haven (Conn.) Journal-Courier, printed on Saturday last, by the most distinguished editor in Connecticut, Col. N. G. Osborn, who has devoted more of his life to the study of prisons and penology than has any other person in Connecticut, indeed, than any other person of whom I know in the United States.

Furthermore Colonel Osborn is an ardent advocate of the old-fashioned Jeffersonian doctrine of the rights of the States. His editorial is one that, I feel, sure will interest all those who are taking a deep interest in this subject, not only the manufacturers but also the officers of labor organizations and of certain women's organizations that are urging this legislation.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A LEAP IN THE DARK

We learn with amazement that certain of the manufacturers of the State have urged Members of the Connecticut delegation in Congress, Senators and Representatives, to support companion bills in the two branches of that body which brazenly seek to embarrass if not to forbid the employment of prison and reformatory inmates in useful and productive labor. Not only are these bills of doubtful constitutionality but, if made laws, could create in the prisons and reformatories of the country a social condition of a most alarming character, entailing an unknown expense on the taxpayers and rent payers of the State for the upkeep of hundreds in demoralizing idleness and moving back a full half century or more this perplexing and more or less baffling problem of prison reform.

These bills—the Hawes bill in the Senate and the Cooper bill in the House—whatever their surface objects are, supported by misinformed manufacturers and misdirected labor leaders acting in concert with a group of sentimentalists, threaten in reality the prohibition of prison labor of a useful and profitable character—the creation of a social condition behind prison walls which, owing to enforced idleness, would produce most deplorable results. It is a well-established fact that prison idleness is the short and well-paved highway to various forms of mental disease; that employment leads to rehabilitation morally and mentally and travels far in correcting antisocial tendencies in society. Prison and reformatory inmates are not thus employed for any other reason, and where employment offers competition with outside investment it is not because prison officials view that relationship with indifference but because in their efforts to make houses of detention something more spiritual than a den of animals they have not yet found an escape from that phase of administration in behalf of the public good. It is not to be overlooked that prison inmates can not be employed in any form of labor without somewhere offering competition to free capital and labor.

The competition is, in fact, negligible when the other side of the picture is studied. So long as there is crime and there are criminals—whatever the reason in an imperfect civilization—there will rest upon society a burden in defense and protection which must be borne as philosophically as possible and spread about as impartially as possible. No system of prison management has yet been devised which can achieve what the petitioners in behalf of the bills before Congress are deluding themselves can be achieved by prohibitive legislation, though the study of the complicated problem is constantly before the minds of prison officials. Should these bills either of them be made a law, the misled petitioners would find that they had leaped from the frying pan into the fire, and that all they had estimated in the way of improved receipts and wages would be more than offset by increased costs of prison management and consequent increase in appropriations from the State treasury.

That what must be viewed as business and labor greed neglects the more serious considerations of the enterprise from the point of view of the general welfare appals one who knows something of the problem and of the efforts being constantly made to solve it. Nor is this all. That manufacturers and labor leaders, in their zeal to achieve their selfish purpose, not only disregard the perplexities of the problem in which they are directly concerned as taxpayers and rent payers but ignore the manifest unconstitutional means by which they seek to gain their ends is even more amazing. The bills in question defy the fundamental principles of the confederation of sovereign States by conferring on them the power to restrict and forbid the entrance into their separate jurisdictions of goods manufactured in sister States, though no claim is made, nor can one be made, that the product of the prisons is deleterious to either public health or morals. For the first time in the history of the country an attempt is being made by legislative process for a selfish end to destroy the free-trade relations of the States, which lie at the very basis of American prosperity. It may be said that this can later be brought to the attention of the Supreme Court, but such a step can not be taken until property rights have been destroyed—by locking the garage door after the theft of the automobile.

Amazing as this spirit of indifference is to the problem itself and the means taken to solve it, even more amazing is the fact that the petitioners—manufacturers, labor leaders, and the league of women clubs—have never taken the pains to visit the prison or the reformatory to learn for themselves just what the truth is with regard to the condition of which they complain. They have thought of but one angle of the condition and that as it affects, or seems to affect, their own exclusive contentment of mind. We repeat that this is an extraordinary state of mind. It is more than that. It is all but hopeless in its ignorance of what they will suffer in taxes and rent if the houses of detention serve the single purpose of incarceration. That the expense of maintaining the prison at Wethersfield and the reformatory at Cheshire would increase in leaps and bounds should these bills become laws is capable of demonstration. That tremendous damage to the State could be done, and would be done, before a decision could be reached from the Supreme Court is also demonstrable. It is time for the manufacturers, the wage earners, and women enthusiasts to "stop, look, and listen" before taking further steps to advance this inhuman project.

ADDRESS BY HON. THOMAS J. WALSH ON THE OIL SCANDALS

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] made an address before the Harvard Democratic Club April 12, 1928. I ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

On being asked some time ago to address the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the gentleman conveying its courteous invitation proposed that I speak to that dignified body on the oil scandals. It occurred to me, however, that some topic less obviously tinged with politics would better suit the occasion, and so expressing myself I was not a little surprised at the mild insistence with which the suggestion was pressed. It afforded to my mind further confirmation of the view that the revelations recently made before the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, on a more or less incidental issue, have made an even more profound impression upon the public mind than the revolting disclosures of the earlier inquiry, prosecuted some four years ago. It is somewhat curious that it should be so, for nothing has been divulged that surpasses in iniquity or touches more vitally the public interests than the shocking venality, laid bare by the Senate, in the official career of Fall, Daugherty, and Forbes.

Facts have been brought to light which subject individuals high in official or semiofficial station to merited criticism, but no actual corruption has been traced to any such. And yet journals that, moved by partisan considerations, erstwhile remained discreetly silent editorially or sought to minimize the effect of the disclosures by captious criticism of the methods pursued in eliciting the unsavory truth, or by vilification of those who were pursuing the culprits, now scathingly arraign the lesser criminals being featured and demand that the investigation in progress be thorough and relentless.

The motives of those who were more or less prominently concerned in ferreting out the facts were made the subject of much critical comment, in which they were charged with being actuated by no higher purpose than to secure a partisan advantage, as if it made the slightest difference in the guilt of the faithless officials whether the prosecutors were moved by the highest patriotism or acted under impulses of even questionable character.

That it is one of the prime duties of a political party, and particularly of an opposition party, to point out and expose the deficiencies, the delinquencies, and the transgressions of its rival, and that therein lies the chief virtue of party government, was ignored in an effort to convey the impression that the investigations were but reprehensible gestures in the game of politics.

Far from encouraging those carrying the larger share of the burden of bringing to light the misdeeds of the now thoroughly discredited officials, that section of the press allied politically with them found nothing to censure in the effort to "get something on" the Senators pursuing the quest or in the prostitution of the courts to wreak vengeance on one of them through perjured testimony.

After the corrupt character of the Teapot Dome lease had been reasonably well established, the revelations becoming the subject of conversation at a dinner table, a guest standing high in the financial circles of the metropolis remarked, with an air of finality, "It is my judgment the Government made an excellent contract." Nothing about the transaction was, apparently, of any interest to him except whether the Government had made a good bargain or a bad bargain. The probabilities are he had little information on which to base his judgment, so oracularly pronounced. The incident is cited to show the callous indifference of the business world to the shocking conditions that had been revealed.

Evidently in the hope that some of the odium of the leasing of the oil reserves might be lifted from his party, the President, in announcing his purpose to employ special counsel to recover them, after learning that the committee had in executive session directed one of its members to present to the Senate and urge the passage of a resolution directing him to do so, said, in connection with the announcement of his intention to engage a Democratic and a Republican lawyer, "I understand men are involved who belong to both political parties." The obvious effect of such a determination by the Chief Executive was to give more or less implied sanction to the contention that the affair was primarily a political quarrel, and consequently not to be taken too seriously.

Though the black satchel and its contents in crisp bills to the amount $100,000 had already passed in review, the President took occasion to allay any undue haste in arriving at the conclusion that there was any wrongdoing on the part of his trusted Secretary of the Interior by adding that "if there is any guilt it will be punished; if there is any civil liability it will be enforced; if there is any fraud it will be revealed; and if there are any contracts which are illegal they will be canceled."

The assurance to the public that "men are involved who belong to both political parties" was disingenuous. The use of "I understand" suggests such a complicated state of affairs that even the President of the United States found it difficult to make out—indeed, was unable to make out—with certainty whether the culpability, if, indeed, there was any culpability, was not shared by high officials of both parties.

A more recent attempt has been made thus to delude the public into the belief that its wrath should not be visited solely upon the Republican Party, because Mr. Doheny, who got the Elk Hill lease, is, or, rather, was prior to that time, a Democrat. The later effort fell flat; but in the then state of the public mind it did service when first advanced. With what glee, it will be remembered, the apologists for Fall told on the floor of the Senate that Doheny was in 1920, when his honor was unstained, a delegate to the Democratic National Convention and had actually been placed in nomination before the convention for Vice President; another being chosen, however. What of it? Whatever the degree of turpitude justly to be assigned to either Doheny or Sinclair, Fall's part in the revolting transactions must be deemed the graver offense. Neither of the lessees had raised his hand to high heaven and sworn faithfully to serve the public. Neither had betrayed a high and holy trust as did he. Neither of them had been honored by a great political party to sully its fair name. To mollify public opinion, outraged at Fall's perfidy, may not have been the purpose of the President, but his language was calculated to promote that result.

But why refer to the political affiliations of the man who bribed Fall? A political party ought not to be, can not be, held responsible for the moral delinquencies of every member of it, more especially of one never raised by it to a position of honor or emolument. It ought to be held responsible for the official misconduct of men it elevates to high station in the public service. Particularly ought it to be held responsible for a whole series of mercenary transactions and corrupt deals perpetrated not by one but by a group holding by its favor the highest offices in the gift of a great people.

Later on the President, in a letter penned to discountenance an inquiry into the administration of the Treasury Department, indulged in some sweeping criticism of any investigation by the Senate of the official conduct of his appointees, charging that they were thereby denied constitutional rights, a contention the Supreme Court took occasion to refute in its opinion in the case of Mally Daugherty, a brother of the disgraced Attorney General who had, in an effort to shield the latter, declined to appear in obedience to a subpœna of the Senate committee or to produce books of his bank afterwards destroyed by his erring brother. These expressions from the White House, so effective in chilling general reprehension of the prevailing venality, would not have had utterance were not the public conscience already more or less inert.

Just how it comes about that a gratifying change in that respect has ensued it is difficult to say. It may be that the story of the transactions more recently exposed has operated as the last straw that broke the camel's back. Unquestionably the decisions of the Supreme Court canceling the leases had a salutary effect in that all reasonable doubt concerning the corrupt nature of the letting was thereby dissipated. The expression in the opinion in the one case that "the whole transaction was tainted with fraud and corruption," and in the other that Fall "was a faithless public officer," silenced apologists and defenders alike. These terse characterizations found secure lodgment in the minds of readers generally.

The employment by Sinclair of a whole army of detectives to shadow the jury called in the trial of the indictment against him and Fall, to pry into their domestic affairs, to ascertain their business connections and their financial situation, so clearly suggestive of a purpose improperly to influence the verdict, operated powerfully to arraign public opinion against him and incidentally against anyone connected in a questionable way with the perpetrators of the villainy unfolded. Perhaps one versed in mass psychology might find in the lethargic conscience upon which the sordid story first fell, some relation to the upsetting of moral standards through the war. Happily, to whatever cause it may have been due a decidedly keener sensitiveness is now distinctly in evidence.

When Colonel Stewart's press bureau gave out information that he had received numerous telegrams from friends and business associates congratulating him on defying the Senate, it discreetly omitted to give the names of any of the senders, either because the messages were purely fictional or because the authors preferred not to encounter a fiercely antagonistic public sentiment, or because the colonel did not care to subject them to such. John D. Rockefeller, jr., knew or might have known over three years ago of the colonel's part in the Continental Trading Co. transactions, but it was not until recently that he offered any criticism or withheld in any measure his confidence in the chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana.

Let us hope that the result of the primaries in Illinois Tuesday is quite clearly indicative of the improvement in our moral standards. Frank Smith's appeal to State pride proved less effective than his rivals' rallying cry of common decency and sterling honesty. The change in the attitude of the public is in a high degree gratifying. A political philosopher asserts that it is more important that there should be an active sentiment that criminals be brought to the bar of justice and a readiness to help toward that end, than that the guilty should actually be tried and punished. Transgressors, he maintains, there always will be. Human nature is weak and the passions leading to crime inveterate. But among the restraining influences on the criminally inclined none operate so powerfully as the fear of detection and punishment, of which the risk bears quite direct relation to the attitude of the public toward crime in general or toward particular offenses. DeTocqueville extolled the virtue of the people of America in that particular as he found them, in contrast with those of his own country.

In France, he said, one sought by the police acting under orders from a remote central authority is usually aided in escaping from or eluding arrest, while in America, where the enforcement of the criminal law is intrusted to the local authorities, chosen by the people, and pioneer communities appreciate keenly how their safety both as to life and property depend upon observance of the law, everyone aids an officer required to make an arrest that the accused may be brought to trial and his guilt determined.

In the more congenial atmosphere of the present, I venture to review the crooked career of the Continental Trading Co., said by the Supreme Court of the United States to have been obviously "created for some illegitimate purpose," to tell you of the disposition of the Government bonds into which its ill-gotten gains were converted and to submit some observations upon the circumstances under which they soiled the hands of those into whose possession they passed.

As an introduction, the story of how that unhallowed thing came into the picture may well be told. It is a tale that has about it the air of romance. Truth is stranger than fiction.

The special counsel appointed to prosecute the necessary litigation to recover the property leased and to conduct any proper criminal proceedings in connection therewith, justly suspicious of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice still headed by Daugherty, conferred with the President concerning the predicament in which they found themselves. He must have shared their misgivings, though he had up to that time stubbornly resisted all appeals to dismiss the discredited Attorney General for, to his credit, he directed that the Secret Service of the Treasury give whatever aid it could to Messrs. Pomerene and Roberts, Government counsel, in the tremendously important task before them.

A trusted operator was sent to New Mexico, whence had come most of the testimony of an incriminating nature, and to El Paso, to a bank in which city, just across the line in Texas, there was evidence that Liberty bonds had been sent by Sinclair to the amount of $25,000 to the credit of the account of Fall. The remittance was said to have been made as a loan as the two were about to depart on a trip to Russia on business looking to the grant to Sinclair of a concession to prospect for oil on the island of Saghalien.

Being accorded an opportunity to examine Fall's account with the bank, the operator found an entry signifying the receipt by it from or for Fall of Government bonds to the amount of $20,000, the numbers of which were listed on the back of two deposit slips and copied by the investigator. He pried in like manner into the records of a suspended bank at Carrizozo, N. Mex., a small town about 15 miles from the ranch of Fall, at which he did some business, and noted a credit item of $50,000. Again, as when it was disclosed that Fall had paid $94,000 for a neighboring ranch, the question at once arose, where did he get it?

The investigator called on the receiver of the bank for the deposit slips for further information concerning the nature of this credit. It appeared therefrom that the item represented Government bonds, the numbers of which appeared not on the slip, but on one of the books of the bank showing a remittance of them to another bank for sale. By a ruse he was able to make a memorandum of the numbers which fitted in so perfectly with those found to have been in the El Paso bank as, at once, to suggest that they all constituted a block of a relatively large number that must have gone out of the Treasury on a single order. The trained eye of Chief Moran, of the Treasury Secret Service, then noted that not only were the numbers consecutive, but they were large, indicating a relatively recent issue. Inquiry at the office of the register confirmed his guess that they had been issued in exchange for other bonds and the hope that a record had been kept of the source from which those came for which the substitution had been made, proved well founded.

The files of the register's office showed they had been issued with others in exchange for $400,000 of registered bonds at the request of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta. It advised that it acted for the Savannah Steamship Co. That institution freely gave the information that having accumulated a surplus to the amount indicated, which it had invested in registered Liberty bonds, and being desirous of distributing such surplus among its stockholders, it caused the exchange to be effected, receiving coupon bonds in an equal amount which were turned over pro rata as dividends to the holders of its stock, one of whom resided in Atlanta. The trail leading back to that city it was learned there the gentleman receiving the bonds being equally frank and helpfully inclined that his distributive share had been turned in to a local bank which sent them to the National City Bank at New York for sale. It disclosed from its records the brokerage house through which it sold the bonds and from that source it was learned that they had been bought from the brokers by the New York branch of the Dominion Bank of Canada, which after demurring for some time finally admitted that it had acted for the Continental Trading Co. (Ltd.), of Toronto, Canada, represented by one H. S. Osler, a barrister, who after much evasion and more equivocation, not to say mendacious misrepresentations, let drop on persistent questioning by Government counsel an intimation about an oil deal with Col. A. E. Humphreys. Thus was opened up a fertile field of inquiry that yielded abundant but nauseous fruit.

Through a grand-jury inquisition the Dominion Bank was required to disclose the brokerage houses from which it bought some $3,080,000 of 3½ per cent Liberty bonds for the Continental and from such houses was secured the numbers of the bonds. Coupons from some of them reposing in the archives of the Treasury were traced to the First National Bank of Pueblo, Colo., from the officers and records of which it was elicited that such coupons had been detached from a batch of bonds in the sum of $230,500 delivered to it by M. T. Everhart, son-in-law and business associate of Fall, in the month of May, 1922, some 30 days after the Teapot Dome lease was executed, a portion of which had been turned over to the M. D. Thatcher estate to satisfy obligations due from a cattle company owned by Everhart and Fall, another portion applied to the liquidation of a debt of Fall to the bank, and the remainder passed to him or to the credit of his account.

The information concerning the oil deal led to a conference with Colonel Humphreys and his attorney, former Senator Thomas, of Colorado, who told that as a result of a conference on November 16, 1921, in New York, participated in by them, the son of Colonel Humphreys, and Beman G. Dawes—interested with Humphreys in companies controlled by the latter—and Harry F. Sinclair, H. M. Blackmer, Robert W. Stewart, and James E. O'Neil, the Humphreys companies, operating most successfully in a Texas field, agreed to sell to the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co. and the Prairie Oil & Gas Co. 33,333,333 barrels of oil, at $1.50 per barrel. The Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co. was then and is now owned jointly by the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana and by the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., of which Sinclair was the managing head, Stewart occupying the same relation to the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, of whose subsidiary, the Midwest Refining Co., Blackmer was the controlling spirit. O'Neil was the strong man in the Prairie Oil & Gas Co., a subsidiary of the old Standard Oil, at the time it was ordered dissolved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Having thus agreed, Senator Thomas, who was to act as scrivener, was told by some one other than those associated with him, and probably Blackmer, that the Continental Trading Co. (Ltd.) was to be named in the contract as vendee, and to still apprehensions as to the financial responsibility of that company naturally arising, the vendors never having heard of it, they were told that the contract of purchase would be guaranteed by the two companies that until then all had understood to be the purchasers, which assurance was carried out, the guaranty contract on the day following, November 17, 1921, contemporaneously with the execution of sale contract, being signed by Sinclair and Stewart for the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Co. and by O'Neil for the Prairie Oil & Gas Co. Humphreys conveyed the information that notwithstanding the designation of the Continental Trading Co. as the vendee, the oil, as it was produced actually went to the two guaranteeing companies, a fact which almost necessarily implied a purchase by them from the vendee of the Humphreys companies.

The officers of those companies getting the oil were put under the grill when it was divulged that the very same day that the Continental bought the oil at $1.50 per barrel it sold to the two companies standing sponsors for its contract at $1.75 per barrel, and accordingly that on a single day's business, without the investment of a dollar, it stood to reap a profit of something over $8,000,000—25 cents per barrel on 33,333,333 barrels of oil. It did not, however, realize that great sum, its contract having been assigned, in the summer of 1923, to the guaranteeing companies for $400,000, which, with the profits theretofore realized, amounted to enough to enable it to buy from time to time through the Dominion Bank, Liberty bonds of the character heretofore indicated in the sum mentioned, $3,080,000, which were at intervals delivered to Osler.

It was developed that the incorporators of the Continental, as well as its officers other than Osler, were all clerks in his office; that shortly after transferring its highly profitable contract, as just recited, it was dissolved and its records all destroyed.

The Government having instituted suit at Cheyenne, Wyo., to cancel the lease of the Teapot Dome, sought to take the testimony of Osler on letters rogatory, but having responded to some questions of no great consequence he refused to testify further, on the ground that what he knew of the matter had come to his knowledge in his capacity as counsel, though he steadfastly declined to tell who was his "client." The magistrate overruled his objection, ordered him to testify and committed him for his continued refusal. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus, but it was quashed upon a hearing, the reviewing court holding he must answer. From the judgment so entered against him he appealed to the Supreme Court of the Dominion and departed for Africa to hunt lions. Again it was held he was not protected by any privilege of counsel, but meanwhile Judge Kennedy, before whom the suit of the Government was pending, declined to postpone the trial that his testimony might be procured, heard the case, and decided it against the Government, though the decree entered by him was afterwards reversed by the circuit court of appeals and its judgment affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Blackmer and O'Neil likewise disappeared about the time the Wyoming case was to come to trial, seeking sanctuary in France, where they too declined to testify, and where, strange as it may seem, the courts are without compulsory power over a witness refusing to testify. In an effort to force their attendance at the criminal trial of Fall and Sinclair Congress passed an act imposing a penalty not to exceed $100,000 for disregard of a subpœna by a witness in a foreign country, whose attendance is desired by the Government, but O'Neil has eluded every effort to make service upon him of the subpœna, while Blackmer, who was located, is assailing the act as unconstitutional, thus far without success.

Another law enacted by Congress to meet an exigency arising in this historic legislation has brought results. At the trial at Cheyenne and again at the trial in the District of Columbia, which miscarried because of the attempt to tamper with the jury, Everhart, Fall's son-in-law, who turned in to the bank at Pueblo for Fall the $230,500 in bonds, refused to testify on the ground that his evidence might incriminate him. This resource was cut from under him by an act passed at the current session by which the period of the statute of limitations in the case of conspiracies to defraud the United States was reduced to three years, it having been raised to six by an act of 1921, passed at the instance of the then Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty, who represented that otherwise the perpetrators of gigantic war frauds would escape just punishment. It might be remarked in passing that the cry of war frauds, so vociferous in the campaign of 1920, and thereafter, and so influential in enabling the Republican Party to come back into power and to divert attention from the plundering and pilfering that followed, has at last subsided, without a single conviction, and without leaving a stain upon the conduct of any Democratic officials to whom were entrusted the stupendous tasks incident to the prosecution of the war.

Everhart thus being assured of immunity from prosecution he was called before the Committee on Public Lands on its being ordered, in January last, to resume the inquiry it had so successfully prosecuted four years before, and particularly to inquire into the disposition made by the Continental Co. of the bonds purchased by it. He then told that he had obtained the bonds handled by him, with $2,500 worth left with Fall, in all $233,000, from H. F. Sinclair, after a conference participated in by all three, a shallow pretense being made that the bonds represented the purchase price of a third of the stock of the Tres Ritos Land & Cattle Co., theretofore owned in equal parts by Fall and Everhart.

O'Neil being unavailable, officers of his company were called who disclosed that in the year 1925 he had come out of his hiding, had crossed to Montreal, where he summoned one of his associates, confided to him that his physicians had advised him that his death was imminent, and told that he had $800,000 in bonds, which came to him through the Continental Trading Co. and which he thought and always had thought belonged to the Prairie Oil & Gas Co. He expressed a purpose to turn them over to the company, which he did, giving his successor an order on his son in New York for the bonds, which were taken to the main office of the company at Independence, Kans., where they now are, the whole representing the amount which he got with some accrued interest. The trail getting hot, Blackmer sent his lawyer to tell the committee that he holds his share of the swag, to the amount of $763,000, intact in New York, apparently suffering no twinges of conscience like his coconspirator, but having some misgivings as to whether they might not be claimed in a lawsuit by the Midwest Co., paying him at the time he got the bonds and participated in the deal through which they were acquired a salary of $50,000 or perhaps $100,000.

It was disclosed by the files and records of the Dominion Bank and by the testimony of its officers that as Osler took from it from time to time delivery of the bonds, they were, after crediting 2 per cent thereof to his personal account—evidently his commission—by his direction put up in four packages, each containing one-fourth the aggregate in value. One package it is known went to O'Neil, one to Blackmer, and one to Sinclair. Until now no evidence definitely pointing to the disposition of the fourth package has been unearthed, but the conclusion is irresistible that it went to the nominee of Stewart, despite his asseveration that he never made a dollar out of the transaction. He refused to tell, however, what he knew of what had become of the bonds, and no one who knows him or who saw or heard him testify can suppose for a moment that he could have been a participant in the negotiations leading up to the contracts of the Continental, as he was, or have signed them, as he did, with knowledge that he thereby had, that his company was paying $1.75 a barrel for oil which an unknown company without capital or credit had, in his very presence, just bought for $1.50, the three others associated with him getting a fortune out of the transaction, and he getting nothing. For his refusal to tell what he knows the Senate arrested him for contempt; he, too, resorted to habeas corpus, and is out on bail on appeal from the order of the court holding he was unjustified in refusing to answer the questions put to him. Sooner or later the truth will be forced out of him if meanwhile the diligence of the committee, with such aid as an outraged public may extend, shall not be rewarded by indubitable proof as, it is ventured, it will be. If there is no other way, perhaps some stockholders of one of the defrauded companies, the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Co., the Standard of Indiana, or the Prairie Oil & Gas Co., may be induced to start suit against the faithless officer of his company participating in the conspiracy to rob it, and in such suit take the deposition of Mr. Stewart, a proceeding in which he could be compelled to testify, being unable to claim exemption on constitutional grounds, the statute of limitations barring any criminal prosecution.

Mr. Rockefeller may possibly feel under some obligation to render such a public service. Either Blackmer or O'Neil would be amenable to such a suit, each conspirator being answerable for all damage suffered by any company owing to the misdeeds in which he had a part. O'Neil is still liable to the Prairie Oil & Gas Co. for approximately as much more as he has heretofore disgorged. Possibly some high-minded lawyer will volunteer to bring such a suit at the instance of a stockholder whose interest is too small to warrant his paying a liberal fee.

Let us follow Sinclair's loot. Two hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars went to Fall and $260,000 to Will H. Hays, once chairman of the Republican National Committee. Hays, indefatigable in spreading the poison about Democratic war frauds, widely advertised in the campaign of 1920 a purpose to limit donations to that committee to $1,000 from any single contributor. Evidence adduced before the committee easily leads to the conclusion that notwithstanding these professions large sums never reported were received. The returns did not suffice to meet the extravagant expenditures he authorized, and debts were incurred through loans from banks amounting to $1,800,000.

Quitting the Cabinet, he was moved, perhaps spurred by those who had been associated with him, to raise the funds to take up these obligations before the committee was to meet in December, 1923, to make provision for the campaign of the following year. He got from Sinclair the stupendous sum above mentioned in bonds, enough of them shown to have been among those bought by the Continental to warrant the conclusion that they all had come from the same source. The admission had been wrung from Hays at the earlier hearing that Sinclair had contributed $75,000 to make up the deficiency in the account of the committee, but the information that the contribution came in the form of Liberty bonds was conveyed by another witness. Hays at that time professed not to know to what officer of the committee the payment, if so it might be termed, was made.

Having said something about $75,000 being a "maximum" he was pressed for an explanation that was not forthcoming. It was, however, disclosed that the bonds came into the possession of Senator DU PONT and were by him turned over to the Empire Trust Co. of New York, a bank with which he was associated, in partial liquidation of an indebtedness due it from the company.

At the hearing now in progress Hays, perhaps startled by revelations made, appeared and read a statement professing a purpose to "tell all." By it was revealed that in addition to the $75,000 of bonds already told of, Sinclair had delivered to Hays $185,000 more to be "used" to take care of the deficit, the transaction being something in the nature of a loan. Just how the bonds were to be "used" and how the situation was to be improved by paying one loan by another loan, the most persistent cross-examination did not make clear. It was contemplated, however, apparently, that the general campaign then in progress would or might yield enough to take care of the advances made by Sinclair, and possibly to return to him something of his "maximum" contribution of $75,000. Further evidence clearly disclosed, however, how the bonds so liberally supplied by Sinclair were to be "used." Fifty thousand of them were given by Hays to one John T. Pratt, a New York capitalist, since deceased, a member of the Standard Oil group, who thereupon made a contribution to the committee of like amount; $60,000 worth were sent to Fred W. Upham, of Chicago, likewise gone to another world, and $25,000 to John W. Weeks, then Secretary of War, who, too, has passed away. Hays professed entire ignorance of what Upham was to do with the bonds, and specifically denied that he had any knowledge that they were to be distributed to individuals in Chicago, each of whom was on receipt of the same to make a contribution equal to the amount of the bonds received by him. Testimony from Chicago witnesses showed that that was just what had been done with them by Upham.

Hays explained that Pratt afterwards returned to him bonds equal in amount to those he had received, and these, with the $50,000 remaining, never used were returned to Sinclair, leaving the committee indebted to him in the sum of $85,000, for which Hays became personally responsible, putting up with Sinclair securities of his own as a pledge. Sinclair afterwards, however, unwilling that Hays should bear so heavy a burden, having suffered losses through speculations in Sinclair stocks, returned the securities so pledged, making the aggregate of Sinclair's contribution $160,000.

Then followed a dramatic chapter. In an effort to secure further light on the Pratt transaction representatives of his estate were called who produced various documents relating to the affair, including a small sheet of paper, evidently a unit from a memorandum pad, on which were entries in the handwriting of Pratt, not clearly, referring to the transactions, in the lower right-hand corner of which were the names "Weeks," "Andy," "Butler," and "du Pont." It was a reasonable inference that "Andy" meant Andrew W. Mellon, that "Butler" was William M. Butler, succeeding Hays as chairman of the Republican National Committee, and that they were in some manner connected with the bond transaction. Being called Mellon told that Hays had in the latter part of 1923 sent him a package containing $50,000 in Liberty bonds, and had later come to Washington, as he had said over the telephone, on advising the Secretary of the forwarding of the package, he would. Calling on Mr. Secretary Mellon, according to the latter, Hays asked him to make a contribution in the amount of the bonds, which he did, though he declined to keep the bonds, sending them to New York later (Hays being on his way West) by Parker Gilbert as messenger. Butler told that Hays had offered him $25,000 of the bonds, requesting a subscription of like amount, but Butler declined. Hays, being recalled and asked why he had not mentioned in his former testimony his contact with Mellon and Butler in connection with the bonds, answered that he did not because the bonds offered to them had not been used. Hays conceived that he was entirely exculpated because he was unaware of the existence of the Continental Trading Co., or that the bonds in question had come from that company, a fact he took pains to emphasize, and Mr. Mellon likewise disclaimed any knowledge of its existence or its former ownership of the bonds. But he did know that Hays got them from Sinclair for Hays told him so, and he had some information, possibly derived from some other source, that Sinclair had put up in the neighborhood of $300,000 of bonds.

It will be well to bear in mind that the lease of the Teapot Dome to Sinclair had been assailed in the Senate immediately upon the fact of its execution being made public, that an investigation had been ordered, that it was in progress when Hays got the bonds and when part of them were offered to Mellon and Butler. Yea, more, at that very time—about December 1, 1923—the so-called New Mexico witnesses were either on the stand testifying or were under subpœna to appear. It will be recalled that it was they who told about Fall's sudden rise from near bankruptcy to a position of affluence and made a case that smacked of bribery of Fall.

In judging of the degree of culpability properly attributable to Mellon in this affair, so discreditable to American political morals, it is to be borne in mind that he is rated as the third richest man in America, surpassed in wealth, according to common repute, only by John D. Rockefeller and Henry Ford; that all he was asked to give to the fund being raised and all he felt moved to give was $50,000. Yet he knew that Sinclair, who had got a concession from the Government out of which he testified he expected to make $100,000,000 and which was then under attack, had contributed more than five times as much as he (Mellon) put up. Moreover, if he felt any resentment at Hays's proposal that he (Mellon) should lend himself to imposing upon the public by holding out that he had contributed $50,000, when in fact he had not, that he permit his name to be used as a cover to conceal a huge contribution by Sinclair—if he felt any resentment at Hays's taking any such sum from Sinclair, he expressed none. Neither, for that matter, did Butler. However, Mellon did not rebuke Hays for accepting the bonds from Sinclair, he did not admonish him to return them, nor to desist from further attempting to "use" them with more pliable pretended contributors. Neither, for that matter, did Butler. But Mellon's delinquency does not end here. In the following spring the suits were brought to cancel the leases.

The diligent counsel for the Government, aided by the Secret Service of the Treasury, had traced bonds from the Continental Trading Co. to Fall in the amount of $230,500, but had no direct and only rather inconclusive evidence that they had come from Sinclair, a weakness in the chain on the trial that afforded Judge Kennedy an excuse for deciding the case against the Government, now overcome through the loosed testimony of Everhart. It would have been an invaluable piece of evidence in the effort to show the fraudulent character of the Teapot Dome lease, that Sinclair had given to the Republican National Committee bonds in an amount not even approached by any other contributor, so far as Hays was able to recall, and five or six times as large as Mr. Mellon himself gave, which bonds, like those going to Fall, came from the same Continental Trading Co., organized, it may be repeated, in the language of the Supreme Court, "for some illegitimate purpose."

It was only by the bare accident of the production of the fragile Pratt memorandum that it came to light that Mellon knew of the remarkable liberality of Sinclair to the Republican committee. The fact was not even disclosed to the Senate committee, which, being ordered to find out what had become of the bonds, had solicited the aid of the Secretary of the Treasury in its task and was assured by him that the Secret Service would be at his command. While the subordinates of the Secretary were delving through heaps of coupons and laboriously endeavoring to trace them to any of the parties concerned in the Continental Trading Co. deal the head of the Treasury was possessed of information that would have enabled the committee promptly to account for at least one block of $160,000.

There is another circumstance not to be overlooked in this connection. Unquestionably an income tax is due the Government from the Continental Trading Co., whose transactions, carried on wholly within the United States, netted it over $3,000,000 profit, which tax is enforceable against those receiving such profits, at least to the extent to which they shared respectively.

The prosecutor for the committee early in its work called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to this obligation to the Government. It might be expected that the head of the department charged with the collection of the revenues of the Government would have been eager to lay before the committee every fact coming to his knowledge likely to result in disclosing who got the gains of that malodorous company and the amounts realized by each of the distributors.

There may or may not be anything in the coincidence that the Continental came into being, and the deal through which it was enriched was carried on, in the very midst of the negotiations leading up to the leasing of the naval oil reserves, and that the Republican National Committee got a good share of its peculations just about the time the infamy of Teapot Dome and the Elk Hills reserve was being shown. It may be that the student of sociology will find some ground for believing that world-wide conditions were such at that particular time as that the moral fiber of mankind was weakened and the virus of corruption had infected our business as well as our political life. There is here unfolded the sordid story of men standing high in the industrial field, intrusted by confiding stockholders with gigantic interests, robbing the people by whom they were elevated to positions of responsibility and whom they undertook to serve, and one of them, at least, using his share of the plunder to corrupt a high official of his Government and debauch a great political party. Whether such a theory be sound or unsound, all will agree that the occasion calls for an awakening, for a general demand for retribution, if our social order is to be preserved or our institutions perpetuated.

THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY PROJECT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I present an address delivered before the Boston Chamber of Commerce on April 12, 1928, by Senator T. J. WALSH on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I appear before you to-day in disregard of a rule it has been found necessary to adopt, that I may be able to give to my official duties the attention they require, not to deliver any public addresses while the Senate is in session. I have yielded, however, to the courteous but urgent invitation of your committee to speak to you on this occasion primarily because of my desire to canvass with you a subject in which my State and New England, in a way at least represented here have, if I have correctly appraised the situation, a common interest.

I refer to what is generally alluded to as the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, likely, in the near future, to engage the serious consideration of the Congress. I have chosen that particular subject on which to descant to-day not only because of the mutual interest to which reference has been made but because in public hearings, hereafter to be mentioned more particularly, some opposition to the project on the part of Boston business interests was voiced, an attitude reflected in conversation with congressional representatives from this section of the country. Without daring to hope that any argument of mine will bring conviction to your minds favorable to our cause, I yet venture to direct your attention to the great enterprise that further study may induce you generously to forward it.

The opposition of which notice has been taken may, for aught I know, have been entirely dissipated, as it certainly should have been, by a report by the joint New England committee, consisting of five business men of standing and repute from each of these six States, headed by Hon. Charles R. Gow, of this city, unequivocally indorsing the project. Be that as it may, I lay before you its salient features and the considerations that lead to the belief of those in whose name I speak that it ought to be undertaken without delay.

The project contemplates the improvement of the St. Lawrence River and the connecting waters between the Great Lakes so as to permit ocean-going ships to pass without breaking cargo from the sea to the remotest lake ports, to extend the ocean ways a thousand miles westward into the very heart of the continent. Due to the enterprise of the Canadian Government, through the construction of the Welland Canal and works in the St. Lawrence above Montreal, it is now possible for vessels of draft not to exceed 14 feet to proceed in and out of the gulf and to and from the interior, but in these days of Leviathan bottoms the use of ships of such light draft in the transoceanic trade is economically impossible.

It is proposed so to overcome the obstacles to navigation that vessels drawing up to 25 feet may safely and expeditiously make the passage, a depth that will accommodate practically all freighters and at least 88 to 90 per cent of the ships engaged in the foreign trade of the United States. Our neighbors on the north, as a unit in the improved waterway, are now engaged in the construction of an enlarged Welland Canal that will permit the passage from either of the two lower lakes to the other of such ships as those last mentioned, the work to be completed in 1930, at an estimated cost of $115,000,000.

For more than a century statesmen and men of affairs of both countries directly concerned have given thought to the problem of utilizing to the fullest extent possible this natural route of commerce to and from the great West. With the marvelous development of that region, a development that has no parallel in history, the desire to see opened to general navigation the route by which the waters draining into the Great Lakes find their way to the ocean has become intensified, and the demand for action more and more insistent. It is not alone the States whose territory lies in part within the basin of the St. Lawrence but as well all those beyond as far as the Rocky Mountains, whose products find an outlet through the lake ports, that have a direct concern in this great enterprise. It is estimated that 40,000,000 people in the United States and Canada would be the immediate beneficiaries of this contemplated development.

The Secretary of Commerce has asserted that the benefits accruing to them annually from the work will more than equal the total cost of the undertaking. Twenty-two States, all more or less vitally concerned, have associated themselves for the purpose of forwarding it and have formally indorsed the project by resolutions of their legislative assemblies.

As an initial step in the enterprise Congress, in the year 1919, the Dominion Parliament concurring, directed the International Joint Commission to inquire into the economic phases of the problem, at the same time providing for the appointment of a joint board to study the engineering features. The commission referred to consists of three Americans and three Canadians appointed pursuant to the treaty of 1909, its primary purpose being to adjust controversies that may arise involving boundary waters or streams rising in the one country and flowing into the other.

That commission conducted extensive hearings at meetings throughout the country extending from Boston to Boise, Idaho, the expressions being uniformly favorable, except for dissent coming from some citizens of Boston and from representatives of the State of New York, which officially registered its opposition, the only State to do so.

A vast mass of material was assembled by the commission, provided by experts who testified to the tonnage that might be expected, the relative rates of transportation by land and water, the length of the season during which the waterway would be open to navigation, and in relation to other facts relevant to the inquiry, including the market for electrical energy to be developed incidentally, a feature to be referred to more in detail hereafter.

The board of engineers, headed by Col. W. P. Wooten for the United States and by W. A. Bowden, chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, for the Canadian Government, reported favorably on the proposal to improve the navigability of the river with incidental development of the power resources, and the commission, by unanimous action, warmly recommended the negotiation of a treaty to that end. To indicate the enthusiasm with which the commission looked forward to the inauguration of the enterprise, the following paragraphs from its "Summary of conclusions" are quoted:

"To sum up as briefly as possible its conclusions in the matter of the proposed improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Lake Ontario and Montreal, the commission finds nothing in the evidence to warrant the belief that ocean-going vessels of suitable draft could not safely navigate the waters in question as well as the entire waterway from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the head of the Great Lakes, or that such vessels would hesitate to do so if cargoes were available.

"It finds that of the various alternative routes mentioned from the interior to the seaboard, none offers advantages comparable with those of the natural route by way of the St. Lawrence.

"As to the economic practicability of the waterway, the commission finds that, without considering the probability of new traffic created by the opening of a water route to the seaboard, there exists to-day between the region economically tributary to the Great Lakes and overseas points as well as between the same region and the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, a volume of outbound and inbound trade that might reasonably be expected to seek this route sufficient to justify the expense involved in its improvement. * * *

"It finds that the existing means of transportation between the tributary area in the United States and the seaboard are altogether inadequate; that the railroads have not kept pace with the needs of the country, but that this does not apply to the Canadian side of the area, where railway development is still in advance of population and production. * * *

"Experience has demonstrated not only the tremendous importance of water communication to the foreign commerce of any country but also the manifest advantages of linking up rail and water routes. It is beyond question that the phenomenal industrial development of Great Britain in modern times has been due very largely to her ready access to the sea.

"Great Britain has no resources of iron, yet she has built up gigantic steel industries; she grows no cotton, yet she supplies half the world with cotton goods; she produces very little wool, yet her woolen mills have developed into an enormous industry. Her merchant marine sail the seven seas, bringing to her shores the raw materials she needs for her industries, and carrying back the finished products. The sea, that most efficient, most adaptable, most far-reaching, most economical of thoroughfares, possessing practically all the advantages of land transportation with few of its disadvantages, has made Great Britain prosperous.

"And what water transportation has done for Great Britain it has done in greater or less degree for other nations in other times. Access to the sea gave the diminutive Republic of Venice preeminence in the Mediterranean. It transformed little Holland from a comparatively obscure province into a great maritime nation. It gave to Spain her period of greatness. It brought Germany, before the war, within almost measurable distance of supremacy in the foreign trade of the world.

"The conclusion is obvious that, if countries that had for the most part to import their raw materials from abroad were able to build up a great foreign trade because of their ready access to the sea, the region economically tributary to the Great Lakes, with its limitless resources, its raw materials within easy reach, its facilities for industrial expansion, can hardly fail to become an even greater factor in the world's markets than it is to-day, if given a practicable and efficient water route to the sea. * * *

"As elsewhere noted, it was repeatedly stated by those who appeared before the commission that the water power developed on the St. Lawrence would be sufficiently valuable to carry a considerable proportion, if not the whole, of the cost of the undertaking both for navigation and power. * * *

"Finally, the commission is strongly of the opinion that the subject matter of this investigation is one of such extraordinary importance to the people of the two countries and involves engineering problems of such magnitude and diversity that no effort should be spared to secure a plan which will beyond all reasonable doubt obtain from the upper St. Lawrence its maximum efficiency in navigation and power. To this end the commission believes that before any particular scheme is finally adopted, all the available engineering data, including the report and plans of the engineering board and all comments thereon or alternative plans should be referred to a special technical board for careful consideration and report."

In harmony with its conclusions as outlined in the foregoing the commission has recommended, among other things—

"That the Governments of the United States and Canada enter into an arrangement by way of treaty for a scheme of improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario."

In conformity with the recommendation made touching a supplemental inquiry, a commission was created to give further study to the subject, to act in an advisory capacity, each country naming nine members, the American branch being headed by Hon. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, and the Canadian branch by Hon. George Perry Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals. To aid this commission the Department of Commerce was directed to make an exhaustive inquiry into the economical aspects of the project, which it did. Complying even more directly with the suggestion of the earlier commission, a new board of engineers was constituted to undertake the work such commission deemed necessary, the American corps consisting of Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Col. William Kelly, and Col. George B. Pillsbury, of the Army Engineers, the Canadian members being Mr. Duncan W. McLachlan, Minister of Railways and Canals; Mr. Olivier O. Lefebvre, chief engineer of the Quebec Streams Commission; and Brig. Gen. Charles Hamilton Mitchell. This board likewise unanimously indorsed the project, saying, "The scheme (for the improvement of the St. Lawrence waterway) presented in the report of 1921 is, in its broad lines, practicable," and in explanation of the scheme the following was said:

"196. In summary, the plans recommended by the board for the improvement of the river will provide to the best advantage for a navigation route through the 183 miles of river and lake from Lake Ontario to Montreal Harbor, with a total not exceeding 25 miles of restricted canal navigation and with not more than nine locks. It will be crossed by but eight bridges. The plans include power houses with an ultimate installed capacity of from 2,619,000 to 2,730,000 horsepower and permit the eventual development with installed capacity of approximately 5,000,000 horsepower, which is the full power potentiality of the river."

The cost of the project was estimated at $394,000,000 if with a single-stage development, or $423,600,000 if with a two-stage development, including all machinery necessary for power generation to the amount of approximately 2,700,000 horsepower. Of the total cost it was believed the returns to be anticipated from the power generated would warrant fixing the net cost assignable to navigation improvement at $123,000,000 or $148,000,000, depending upon which of two alternative plans should be adopted. The cost of the undertaking to be prosecuted by both governments will naturally be shared by both on a basis to be fixed by treaty, taking into consideration in all probability the expenditures of each heretofore, for the improvement of the waterway, including Canada's large outlay for the construction of the enlarged Welland Canal, and that of the United States for the Sault Canal. The division of the power to be generated will in like manner be provided for.

The American branch of the commission last referred to having the benefit of all previous studies and the investigations of the Board of Engineers becoming its advisers, expressed its conclusions in its report submitted December 27, 1927, in the following language:

"First. The construction of the shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea is imperative both for the relief and for the future development of a vast area in the interior of the continent.

"Second. The shipway should be constructed on the St. Lawrence route, provided suitable agreement can be made for its joint undertaking with the Dominion of Canada.

"Third. That the development of the power resources of the St. Lawrence should be undertaken by appropriate agencies.

"Fourth. That negotiations should be entered into with Canada in an endeavor to arrive at agreement upon all these subjects. In such negotiations the United States should recognize the proper relations of New York to the power development in the international section."

The Canadian division is said to have reported in January last but its conclusions have not yet been made public. In view, however, of the concurrence of the Canadian members of both commissions and of both boards of engineers in the reports submitted by them favorable to the enterprise, there can be no doubt that the belated report is commendatory of the proposal; particularly is this to be expected considering the huge expenditure made and being incurred to enlarge the Welland Canal. It is the view of the Canadian press that this expectation has been fully met in the report thus far withheld.

It is unnecessary to descant upon the illimitable benefits, reasonably to be anticipated from this improved waterway, to the millions now inhabiting and hereafter to make their homes in the vast region to which it will furnish a cheaper transportation route. It is asserted by the Secretary of Commerce that the savings that will be effected and the incidental advantages accruing to them annually will more than pay the entire cost of the project. Business men long engaged in the export-grain trade assert that it will reduce the cost of transporting grain from Chicago or Duluth to northern European ports by from 8 to 10 cents per bushel. Inasmuch as approximately 250,000,000 bushels of wheat or its equivalent in flour are exported annually, the total saving in freight on that commodity alone will be not less than $20,000,000, the equivalent of 4 per cent interest on $500,000,000, more than the total cost of the project making no deduction on account of power development.

In the light of the facts just recited there seems no reason for doubt about the substantial accuracy of the view expressed by Secretary Hoover that the project will pay for itself every year, having in mind the net cost allocable to navigation improvement.

It may help to an understanding of how such a reduction in freight charges can be attained if it is borne in mind that the distance from lake ports to northern European ports is less by the St. Lawrence route than by the usual route through New York by 625 miles. England is in the same latitude as Labrador and a ship sailing down the St. Lawrence is headed almost directly for the British Isles.

The tremendous import to the people of the West of a substantial reduction in freight rates may be difficult of appreciation by people residing in more favored sections as respects transportation. My home city of Helena is 1,100 miles from Minneapolis or Duluth, the terminal markets, so-called, for most of the grain products of Montana, but when they reach either of those cities they are still 1,000 miles or more from tidewater, the transportation charges for that stretch absorbing 18 cents to 27½ cents, depending on whether the carriage is all rail or rail and water. The situation was bad enough always, but it is acute now in consequence of raises accorded the railways during the war and still in large part enjoyed by them. The rate on wheat from Helena to Duluth was, in 1913, 32 cents per hundred, the equivalent of 19.2 cents per bushel. It is now 44½ cents or 26.7 cents per bushel. If one were to devise some plan by which that burden could be reduced to the extent of 10 cents per bushel he would be hailed as a public benefactor and be showered with evidence of the gratitude of a sorely tried people obliged to run the risk ordinarily attendant upon agricultural pursuits and to encounter the ever-constant peril of drouth that confronts that industry in a semiarid country. Even in those sections more favored as to humidity and in closer proximity to markets agriculture has so languished for the last half-dozen years as to give rise to a persistent demand for Federal relief legislation.

It has been shown by indubitable figures that, though the prices of farm products have risen since 1913, the prices of other commodities with which the farmer must provide himself have advanced so much more that a quantity of his products that would then buy $100 worth of goods will now provide him with scarcely more than 80 per cent of the same quantity; in other words, that he is operating under a 20 per cent handicap. Prominent among the causes bringing about this disparity in prices is the protective tariff, generally vigorously upheld in New England and in principle supported by the dominant sentiment in the grain-growing section. The foremost advocates of the so-called McNary-Haugen plan of farm relief are ardent protectionists who seek to secure for the products in which they are interested the same measure of protection accorded to manufactures by the tariff, ineffective in the case of the staple products of the farm of which there is normally an exportable surplus.

They proclaim that the protective system is responsible largely for the condition they seek to relieve, not by scaling down the duties but by a scheme that would artificially raise the price of what they have to sell. Their plan has had scant support from the Representatives in Congress from New England, who contend that it offends against economic law. It would be the part of wisdom in those whose interests are most directly subserved by and who are attached to the policy of protective duties heartily to indorse the project in support of which I address you. Nor can it be overlooked that New England has a very direct interest in the prosperity of the great Northwest, whose purchasing power is limited by excessive transportation charges, and would be immeasurably increased by the opening up of the cheaper St. Lawrence River waterway.

It is the settlement and development of the highly productive hinterland, as everyone must recognize, that has made New England materially great. If Massachusetts ever shared the view of Josiah Quincy, expressed in his speech in the House of Representatives on the bill for the admission of Louisiana into the Union, that New England has no interest in the region beyond the Mississippi, she long ago, as has been attested in numberless ways, and notably in connection with the legislation of Congress, abandoned it and now has a more liberal, enlightened, and national view. If the capital of New England has assisted in developing the resources of the West, as it undoubtedly has, it is equally true that the teeming population of that vast region has been among the most valued customers for the products of her mills and factories. The restriction or reduction of the purchasing power of the territory clamoring for a continuous water outlet to the sea by way of the St. Lawrence would seriously affect New England, and an increase thereof through savings in transportation charges would be reflected in increased business in this section.

Dismissing sentiment which might prompt an individual or a community to rejoice in a great good to many, even at some slight loss to himself or to them, it is reasonable to believe that the loss to the port of Boston by the divergence of some of its export trade, especially in grains, to the new route stressed in the hearings before the commission, would be more than offset. For some reason that particular trade seems to have been suffering a decline, indeed, threatens to pass out of sight. Figures furnished me, compiled from official publications, on the export grain trade of Boston for the past six years as to wheat or its equivalent in flour are shown in the following table:

1925	7,421,321
1926	7,287,300
1927	4,745,810

Portland has apparently suffered in like manner, the corresponding figures for that port, exclusive of 1927, which are not available, being as follows:

1922	17,594,826
1924	14,937,322
1926	7,720,259

The business men of Boston have abundant reason for knowing better than I what the effect of opening this new route to the sea will have on its export trade. It may be pardonable, however, to advert to some considerations leading to the conclusion that the net result can not be to its disadvantage. Opportunity has not been afforded me to make a sufficiently careful study to inform myself of the extent and character of the cargoes originating west of the Hudson carried in ships sailing from New England to overseas ports. It would seem, however, that the tonnage could not be great, seeing that there is by rail a differential against Boston and Portland on first-class domestic traffic from Chicago of 7 cents per 100 pounds in favor of New York, 9 cents in favor of Philadelphia, and 10 cents in favor of Baltimore. But, however that may be, New England will enjoy the advantages of this cheaper route to the great West just as it will to reach New England ports and those of Europe. The all-water route to Duluth or Chicago will, of course, be longer than the rail or rail and lake route, but that it will be the cheaper route can not be doubted when it is remembered that as a rule freight carried by water moves generally from 6 to 10 miles at the cost of the carriage one mile by rail. Vast quantities of the products of New England, bulky and heavy freight like granite in the transport of which time is not an important element, will, it is reasonable to expect, go by the route it is hoped will, in the near future, be opened to commerce. Not alone its ports, but all New England, have profited by the construction of the Panama Canal, through which the products of this section pass to the ever-increasing markets of the Pacific coast, where mid-continent competitors are met on a more nearly equal basis. There seems no reason to doubt that similar advantages will accrue through access to the markets of the Northwest on both sides of the international boundary by the improved St. Lawrence waterway. Nor would the movement by any means be one way. Copper and zinc produced in Montana and Michigan would reach, by this cheaper route, the brass factories of Connecticut and other New England consumers of those metals. Iron and steel from the lake mills would furnish further cargo.

A major consideration, however, is the incidental development of electrical energy within easy transmission distance of all New England in the enormous aggregate of 2,700,000 horsepower and eventually, as the market expands, of 5,000,000 horsepower.

As the crow flies it is less than 200 miles, as I scale the map, from Ogdensburg, in the neighborhood of which the power development will take place, to Boston. Energy for industrial use is conducted over lines in Montana a distance in excess of 250 miles and much farther in California. I am not unaware of the fact that steam power can be produced at the seaboard much more economically than formerly, regardless of the fluctuations in the price of coal, owing to improved methods of utilizing its heat units. But the availability of such an added supply of power, always in demand for use in this highly industrialized section, can not fail to have consequences of tremendous import.

I have seen the statement that the total consumption of power in industry in Massachusetts does not exceed 2,000,000 horsepower annually. The census figures show a constant increase since 1919 in the power developed and used in New England, reaching in 1925 nearly four and one-half million horsepower. It is estimated that the contemplated improvement can not be completed in less than from 8 to 10 years, by which time, according to a report to the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, the power requirements of New England will be 15 or possibly 20 per cent greater than now. It would not be strange if the development of the power possibilities of the St. Lawrence resulted in changes of the most profound character in the business and social life of these States, amounting in the aggregate approximately to the total energy now utilized in all New England.

It must have awakened the keenest concern among you to find immense textile factories spring up throughout the South Atlantic States not only adjacent to the cotton fields but where cheap water power is available to turn the spindles.

No effort has been made to agree upon a division of the power to be generated by works in the international section of the river; but, assuming an equal division to be made, there would be allocated for use in the United States approximately 1,350,000 horsepower. The total amount now being generated at Niagara on both sides of the river is 1,503,000 horsepower—565,000 on the American side and 938,000 on the Canadian. If the energy to be developed were disposed of at the meager price of $15 per horsepower, there would be an annual return of approximately $20,000,000. The part of the estimated cost of the works to be allocated to power development is the difference between $123,000,000 and $394,000,000, or between $148,000,000 and $423,600,000 as the single or the two-stage development shall be prosecuted; that is to say, $271,000,000 in the one case and $275,600,000 in the other. The initial installation will, accordingly, be at a cost of approximately $100 per horsepower, to be still further reduced when the full possibilities are developed. The Niagara installation cost approximately $90 per horsepower, while that at Conowingo, on the Susquehanna, recently completed, has mounted up to $140.

It is asserted that the net revenues accruing from power alone would take care of the interest charge on the investment and provide a sinking fund of amortization.

Every dollar needlessly spent for transportation is a dollar lost. It represents so much of human toil that might have been avoided, so much of the comforts or convenience if not the necessities of life that mankind must forego. And so with power resources undeveloped. Payment must be made in drudgery for neglect to utilize the forces of nature which a beneficent Providence has placed at our command. The project I commend to you would add glory to our Nation and "scatter blessings o'er a smiling land."

AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to offer a resolution and have it read at this time, and ask that consideration of it be taken up at the time the appropriation bill for the Navy is laid before the Senate.

I should like to have the resolution read at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator is not at this time asking unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLAINE. I am introducing it as a resolution to be read at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 198), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to communicate to the Senate a detailed account of the expenditures incurred in the support and navigation of the several ships, war vessels and transports, and aircraft or other implements of war, and the personnel thereof, including officers and men, and all costs in connection with the expedition to the Republic of Nicaragua, from the 4th day of May, 1927, and an account of the expenditures incidental thereto or necessary by reason of such expedition; and that the Secretary of the Navy also report in detail to the Senate how much the expenditures would have been had such ships, war vessels, transports, and aircraft or other implements of war, and the personnel thereof, including officers and men, been in service at the respective home stations or camps; also how many vessels of every description are in service in connection with the present conditions relating to the Republic of Nicaragua; and be it further

Resolved, That action on bill H. R. 12286 be deferred and postponed until a full report is made to the Senate as above directed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he will not amend his resolution by adding to it a direction to the Secretary of the Navy to inform the Senate how many American soldiers have been killed in the war in Nicaragua, and how many Nicaraguan men, women, and children have been killed.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection to such an amendment, if offered.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution at the time the bill making appropriations for the Navy is laid before the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I make a parliamentary inquiry. The resolution will, then, go over until to-morrow?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over one day.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire, then, to give notice that when the bill making appropriations for the Navy is laid before the Senate I shall move that action on it be deferred until there is action upon this resolution.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. BLAINE. I will.

Mr. EDGE. In answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that the Senator perfect his resolution to include the securing of the information as to the number of casualties among those engaged, I will say that on February 11 and 18, 1928, the Committee on Foreign Relations had before them the Secretary of the Navy, the admiral commanding the fleet, Admiral Latimer, and the Commandant of the Marine Corps, General Lejeune, and that full information as to the activities and casualties up to that time, about two months ago, appears in the document I have in my hand, the report of the proceedings before the Committee on Foreign Relations on Senate Resolution 137.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me——

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I have read the document to which the Senator refers. In the first place, I think a careful reading of it will disclose that there is nothing definite about the number of people who have been killed; and it is not quite up to date.

Mr. EDGE. It is not quite up to date.

Mr. NORRIS. The war is going on in Nicaragua every day, and I suppose people are being killed and property is being destroyed and houses are being burned nearly every day. I would like to have the information right up to date.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator—and I hope he will pardon me for so doing—that he can offer his resolution as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, and I think that would be the better parliamentary procedure, and no objection could be interposed to the offer.

While I have the floor, with the Senator's consent, I want to give notice that I shall offer an amendment to the naval appropriation bill providing, "That no part of any amount carried in this bill shall be used to keep or maintain any marines in the Republic of Haiti."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the purpose of the resolution that I have offered is, as it plainly indicates on its face, an effort to obtain information respecting the expenditures by the Navy Department for the Marine Corps, which information is not now in the possession of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. At least it was so indicated in the debate the other day. I can not understand how the Senate can legislate intelligently and conscientiously unless the necessary facts are before this body, from which facts they will be able to determine whether or not the appropriations proposed for that part of the Navy are excessive or insufficient.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. HALE. When we take up the bill I will discuss the matter the Senator has spoken of. I think I can give him information that will show practically the amount that has been expended up to date. The amounts that will come in the deficiency bills in the future will have to be determined when those bills come in. The department knows substantially what it is going to ask for in the next deficiency bill, and, of course, it knows what was included in the bill last November.

I will go further into the question of the additional expenditures for the marines this year, and I think I can make the matter clear to the Senator. It is more or less involved, I will admit.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am seeking full information. I do not want information that simply implies an opinion or a thought or a suggestion. If this administration is so efficient and conducts the affairs of the Government in such a business-like way as we are led to believe, then the administration, acting through the Navy Department, ought to have this information, and have it in detail. There is not a single efficient business or corporation in this country, industrial, mercantile, or of any other character, that can not upon any day determine and lay before the stockholders of that organization the exact financial condition of that industry or that undertaking. The people of the United States are stockholders in this great social organization which we choose to call Government. They are entitled to have laid before their representatives a detailed statement of the expenditures with respect to every question submitted to this body for its action.

In the making of an appropriation——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Under what order is the Senate now acting?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice at this time that I shall submit an amendment to the naval appropriation bill in words as follows:

Provided, That none of the appropriations made in this act shall be used to pay any expenses incurred in connection with acts of hostility against a friendly foreign nation, or any belligerent intervention in the affairs of a foreign nation, or any intervention in the domestic affairs of any foreign nation, unless war has been declared by Congress or unless a state of war actually exists under recognized principles of international law.

The interpretative part of this amendment reads as follows:

The words "acts of hostility" and the words "belligerent intervention" shall include within their meaning the employment of coercion or force in the collection of any pecuniary claim, or any claim of right to any grant or concession for or on behalf of any private citizen, copartnership, or corporation of the United States, against the government of a foreign nation, either upon the initiation of the Government of the United States or upon the invitation of any foreign government existing de jure or de facto.

FOREIGN TRADE IN POTATOES

Mr. GOULD. Mr. President, I am about to offer a resolution, which may need a little explanation, for fear it might be construed as a tariff bill. It will pertain to the staple crop of Maine—potatoes. Maine is not the only State that is interested in this matter. All the Northern States bordering on Canada, from Maine to Idaho, are interested in this resolution.

We became quite prominent in the raising of potatoes in Aroostook County some 30 or 40 years ago. We had a hard struggle. We had numerous difficulties to overcome. We finally secured good railroad facilities into our section and we thought we were all right. We went along, with now and then a year of overproduction, and we had to suffer the consequences, as any State or any section is bound to suffer when there is overproduction in their one staple crop.

On the whole, we were getting along very well until prohibition came about. Prohibition came pretty near ruining our potato business. It looked bad for us for two years after Volstead got his law in action, and that condition came about in this way:

We had a very fair market. When there are less than four bushels of potatoes per capita raised in the United States we are reasonably sure of a fair price. When there are over 400,000,000 bushels raised in the United States we are sure of a low price. In 1919 and 1920, when John Barleycorn had to go out of business, the good farmers of the Middle West looked around to see what to raise next. They could not raise any more grain for the distilleries and breweries, and a great many of them conceived the bright idea that potatoes would be a good thing to raise. Those two years we raised in the United States about 450,000,000 bushels of potatoes.

Our section, which is confined to the potato business, hauled a lot of its potatoes to the dump in the spring after housing them all winter. That is what prohibition did for our potato crop. It caused a very "dry" spell there for us. I do not mean "liquid dry"; I mean there were dry pickings for the potato dealer and the potato producer. The other dry question does not count so much, because we are right on the border of Canada, anyway.

This county of Aroostook, which I represent, it might interest Senators to know, is the most prosperous, the highest rated agricultural county in the United States. The county itself in square miles is just about the size of the State of Massachusetts. When it is realized that only one-third of that county is settled up now, the balance of it being in forest, it must appeal to anyone that for our one crop we need a little protection.

The question arises, What is the necessity of protection? After we recovered from the dry spell we had, after the Volstead Act went into force, we thought we were getting along pretty well. The western man made a failure of raising potatoes, and we had our market back again. But who should come in and take it away from us but the Maritime Provinces.

The best feature of our potato business is something that has been worked up in the last 20 years. Every winter that I have been South I have always come home with the idea that I had found out something, that if we put up pure seed potatoes we could sell immense quantities of them in the South. The result is that up to the last year or two we had worked up a trade with our southern neighbors who want our northern-grown seed to produce early potatoes in the South, until we were selling them anywhere from eleven to fifteen thousand carloads.

This is the best business we had for this reason: The farmer was taking no chances when he planted seed potatoes of certain varieties, because he had them all contracted for in 5, 10, 15, and 20 carload lots to go South. They were contracted before they were planted. They were delivered any time they were wanted, sometimes out of the field, sometimes in December or January or February, according to the section of the South to which they were going. We provided potato houses all along the railroad tracks which were absolutely frost proof. We could ship potatoes to the South at any time they were wanted.

But what happened? Prince Edward Island, the greatest competitor we have, came along and said, "That is pretty good business. We would like to try it ourselves." I have correspondence which shows that 10 years ago they raised very few potatoes that were shipped to the United States. Five years ago the records show they were shipping a good many. To-day they are shipping a great many more. For instance, in 1926 Prince Edward Island raised for our southern market 9,000 acres of seed potatoes. Last year, 1927, they trebled that amount and raised 27,000 acres of potatoes, which came into our markets last fall and winter.

I have taken up this matter with the President, hoping to get the little one-half cent a pound duty which is on potatoes now increased to three-fourths of a cent, thinking it was a short cut to getting another 15 cents a bushel on potatoes; but after going over the matter thoroughly with the President he referred me to the Tariff Commission. I made an appointment with them. I am told by them that in order to get the tariff increased to 50 per cent by the President they must have a thorough investigation. The investigation means that they will have to find out the cost of raising potatoes here in the States and then they will have to go down to Prince Edward Island and through the Maritime Provinces to make an investigation there before they can go any further, and before they can make a recommendation. If they find that our neighbors on Prince Edward Island can raise potatoes cheaper than we can, then the duty will very likely be put on to equalize.

Here is what the Tariff Commission will find when they get around to it: In the first place, they can raise just as good potatoes on Prince Edward Island as we can raise in Maine. They can raise no more per acre, and probably not so many, but they can raise as good potatoes for seed as we can raise. We acknowledge that to start with. Their fertilizer costs them about the same as it does us, $30 a ton, but the Canadian Government returns them $10 a ton bonus, so they own their fertilizer for just two-thirds what we have to pay for ours.

Our section of the Northern States, of course, is all rail from where we produce the potatoes to the market in the South. Prince Edward Island can put potatoes into the southern markets—Savannah, Norfolk, Baltimore, or anywhere along the Atlantic coast—for just half the freight by vessel that we have to pay all rail. This is what the Tariff Commission is going to find out. They will find that potatoes can be raised in Prince Edward Island cheaper than we can produce them because their land is not so valuable, their labor is cheaper, their fertilizer is cheaper, and their freight is cheaper. The resolution which I am about to offer simply provides for a small appropriation to enable the Tariff Commission to make the investigation.

I send to the desk two short items which I ask may be read by the clerk so they may appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

[From Commerce Reports, November 28, 1927]

UNITED STATES FOREIGN TRADE IN POTATOES—THE UNITED STATES SHOWS A DECREASING EXPORTATION AND INCREASING IMPORTATION OF POTATOES, EXPORTS TOTALING 2,033,000 BUSHELS IN 1926 AND IMPORTS REACHING 5,727,900 BUSHELS—HALF OF THE EXPORTS GO TO CUBA AND OVER 90 PER CENT OF THE IMPORTS COME FROM CANADA

(M. A. Wulfert, foodstuffs division)

The United States foreign trade in potatoes in 1926 was characterized by a decline in exports and a large increase in imports. Exports of potatoes gradually dropped during the past five years—from 2,896,565 bushels, valued at $3,216,600, in 1922 to 2,033,105 bushels, valued at $3,496,723, in 1926—while imports varied from 1,774,764 bushels in 1922 to 452,135 bushels in 1924 and 5,727,918 bushels in 1926. The 1926 imports were valued at $8,328,329.

SMALLER SHIPMENTS TO CUBA, OUR CHIEF MARKET

Potatoes are exported from the United States throughout the year, but the heaviest shipments occur from June to October, reaching a peak in July. The principal foreign market for potatoes from the United States is Cuba, which takes about half of the exports. There has been, however, a downward trend in exports to Cuba in the last two years, such shipments decreasing from 2,256,436 bushels in 1924 to 1,088,176 bushels in 1925 and to 985,730 bushels in 1926. This reduction was brought about largely by heavier imports from Canada. Cuba also imports potatoes from the Canary Islands, Spain, Chile, and Belgium. Total imports into Cuba in 1926 amounted to 3,569,587 bushels, 59 per cent of which came from Canada and 34 per cent from the United States. Shipments to Cuba from the United States are highest from June to September and lowest in February and March.

The new Cuban import tariff on potatoes, which became effective October 26, 1927, increased the rate of duty to $1 per 100 kilos (220.46 pounds) gross weight from June 1 to November 30 and $2 per 100 kilos, gross weight, from December 1 to May 31, for potatoes from countries other than the United States. The new rate for potatoes from the United States is 80 cents per 100 kilos, gross weight, from June 1 to November 30, inclusive, and $1.60 from December 1 to May 31, inclusive, per 100 kilos, gross weight.

Exports of potatoes from the United States to the other West Indies have also dropped. Exports in 1924 amounted to 98,415 bushels, in 1925 to 94,904 bushels, and in 1926 to 62,615 bushels.

OTHER NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICAN MARKETS

Canada is a good market for potatoes from the United States, principally in the months of June and July, and practically all the Canadian imports of potatoes come from the United States. Owing to larger domestic supplies in Canada our exports to that country dropped from 919,783 bushels in 1924 to 559,569 bushels in 1925 and to 470,730 bushels in 1926.

Mexico and Panama each take about 8 per cent of the exports of potatoes from the United States, 163,264 bushels and 155,998 bushels, respectively, in 1926. The quantity exported to these countries remained fairly constant during the last five years. The other Central American countries take about 38,000 bushels a year.

The largest markets for potatoes in South America are Colombia and Venezuela, which imported from the United States in 1926, 42,065 and 33,890 bushels, respectively. All the other South American countries together imported from the United States 25,996 bushels in 1926.

[From the Rural New Yorker, April 7, 1928]

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND POTATO GROWERS' ASSOCIATION MEETS

The annual meeting of the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association took place March 4 and March 10. There are 3,000 members. They were, without exception, very much pleased with the year's work. The association handled one-third of all the potatoes shipped out of the Province last year and expects to ship at least another million bushels of certified seed potatoes by the end of April, with probably some table stock included. Nearly all of this certified seed goes to the United States, where it appears to be in very brisk demand.

EXTENDING THE MARKET TERRITORY

The secretary, Mr. Boulter, with a map showed the members in session something very interesting and I think of interest to rural New Yorker readers. "Do you notice this little place (on the map) called Long Island, where our first seed potatoes were marketed? It is pretty small, only the size of Prince Edward Island. Yet in 1922 it looked like the world to us. Gradually we extended down to the State of New Jersey; at the same time we were opening up a market in Virginia around the little area with Norfolk as a center. Across here you will see the peninsula known as the Eastern Shore; small, it is true, and yet the greatest potato-producing section of the world. From this little neck of land were marketed last June and July 22,000 cars of potatoes, possibly more.

"We look to the seed requirements of these sections to take care of our ever-increasing productions. We sought through very valuable representatives in Virginia wider markets. We broke into North Carolina, from that to Georgia, and this year we placed steamers at Wilmington, Savannah, and Charleston. And from these points our representatives proceeded across into Alabama and Tennessee. In Tennessee they used for their certified-seed plantings 85 per cent of Prince Edward Island cobbler stock and 15 per cent Red River cobblers."

Readers can thus see what a vast territory we have opened up for our island seed. We thought one time when we were as far as New York we were a long way from home. At Norfolk we were getting pretty well south, but when you look at the map you must conclude we were only beginning. Our aim—that is, the aim of the Prince Edward Island Potato Association—can be accomplished only through our sales organization, the Southgate Produce Co., operating in Virginia, to place steamers, not only at the Atlantic Ocean ports but to come around the tip of Florida, into the Gulf of Mexico, as far west as New Orleans, and from that point distribute into the several States. The Southgate Co. distributed over a half million bushels of seed in 1927, and they maintain, without cost to our association, a representative, Mr. Thompson, in Charleston, which greatly facilitates the work.

The future possibilities of this great farmers' industry are far-reaching.

J. A. MCDONALD.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. President, I simply wanted the articles read so it may be seen that the people of Prince Edward Island are telling their own stories and almost boasting about getting our trade.

There recently appeared in Commerce Reports an item showing that Canada exported into the United States in 1924 about 333,180 bushels of potatoes, while in 1925 there were 2,307,000, and in 1926 there were 5,327,000 bushels. That is the way their trade is coming in on us. We have to have protection. We are not asking any relief in the way of subsidies, or anything of that kind. All we want is a little protection, and all I am asking at this time by my resolution is an appropriation of $25,000 for the payment of the expenses of the investigation.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GOULD. I yield.

Mr. SACKETT. The Senator seeks to have an investigation of the difference in the cost of production in the State of Maine and in the Maritime Provinces. Does the Senator know whether, in the course of that investigation to secure a higher tariff through the Tariff Commission, the Tariff Commission will be able to consider, under the law, the bonus that is paid by the Canadian Government as a part of the difference in the cost of production?

Mr. GOULD. No, indeed.

Mr. SACKETT. Does the Senator know whether the fortunate situation of the Maritime Provinces which enables them to ship to the South by water all the way could be considered at all in connection with the cost of production?

Mr. GOULD. I think it certainly could.

Mr. SACKETT. That is a difference in freight.

Mr. GOULD. That is a difference in freight; yes.

Mr. SACKETT. Under the tariff law does the Senator think the Tariff Commission could go into that question? Can it go beyond simply the difference in the cost of production at the point of origin?

Mr. GOULD. I was showing where they will get the best of us. I was not undertaking to show just what the commission should report, whether as to freight rates or whatnot.

Mr. SACKETT. I was trying to help the Senator to meet the situation. If the commission can not consider the difference in freight, does not the Senator feel that the situation is such that he ought to introduce a bill to increase the tariff on seed potatoes? The Tariff Commission probably could not help him to any great extent, or not sufficiently to overcome the advantage, and probably it will become necessary on that account, if the industry is going to be protected adequately, to have the duty raised by act of Congress.

Mr. GOULD. If it were possible to raise the duty, we should ask for more than the President is allowed to increase it, provided the proposed investigation shows that we are justified in asking for an increase. He can not raise the duty, which is half a cent a pound now, or 30 cents a bushel, more than 50 per cent of the rate provided by the present law. That would make a duty of 45 cents a bushel, which would not protect us altogether, and that is not all the protection we seek.

Mr. SACKETT. Then, is it worth while to make this investigation and not at the same time introduce a bill providing that the tariff shall actually be increased?

Mr. GOULD. We can not cut off that competition entirely, but we can curtail it to some extent.

Mr. SACKETT. I am afraid the Senator will find, taking into consideration these very necessary items in getting at the difference in the cost of production, that he will not be able to accomplish what he wants.

Mr. GOULD. There are two items alone because of which they can undersell us. More than anything else the investigation is desired to show that the Government returns them $10 a ton on their fertilizer, and the investigation is desired to show that they can actually produce potatoes cheaper there than they can be produced in the United States. Those are two facts that we are facing, and we have got to overcome them in some way or other.

The resolution (S. Res. 200) submited by Mr. GOULD was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Whereas under the present duty on potatoes of one-half of 1 cent per pound established by the tariff act of 1922 the quantity of potatoes imported has increased from 44,000,000 pounds, valued at $1,000,000 in 1923, to over 300,000,000 pounds, valued at more than $5,000,000 in 1927; and

Whereas differences in costs of production in the United States and in the principal competing country apparently are not equalized by the present duty; and

Whereas the potato-growing industry is widely distributed throughout the United States, and in many regions is the most important source of cash income to the farmer; and

Whereas, because of the greatly increased imports of potatoes, an emergency exists in this industry, particularly among producers of seed potatoes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and hereby is, requested to investigate for the purposes of section 315 of the tariff act of 1922 the costs of production of white or Irish potatoes in the United States and in the principal competing country, and to report its findings to the President of the United States.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have been requested to suggest the absence of a quorum when the calendar should be called this morning. So I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, where will the call of the calendar commence?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the calendar will begin with the first bill on the calendar, being Order of Business 42, Senate bill 1182, which will be stated by title.

The bill (S. 1182) to provide for the naming of certain highways through State and Federal cooperation, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY). Let that bill go over.

DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

The bill (S. 1285) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges of the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask that Order of Business No. 653, being the bill (H. R. 9495) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, be substituted for the bill the title of which has just been stated. It is an identical bill in every essential feature; the title is exactly the same, and I move that the substitution be made and that the House bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the House bill named by him be substituted for the Senate bill, and that Senate bill No. 1285 be indefinitely postponed. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9495) to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to further develop the cooperative extension system as inaugurated under the act entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," approved May 8, 1914, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the expenses of the cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics, and the necessary printing and distributing of information in connection with the same, the sum of $980,000 for each year, $20,000 of which shall be paid annually, in the manner hereinafter provided, to each State and the Territory of Hawaii, which shall by action of its legislature assent to the provisions of this act. The payment of such installments of the appropriations hereinbefore made as shall become due to any State or Territory before the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature meeting next after the passage of this act may, in the absence of prior legislative assent, be made upon the assent of the governor hereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year following that in which the foregoing appropriation first becomes available, and for each year thereafter, the sum of $500,000. The additional sums appropriated under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the same conditions and limitations as the additional sums appropriated under such act of May 8, 1914, except that (1) at least 80 per cent of all appropriations under this act shall be utilized for the payment of salaries of extension agents in counties of the several States to further develop the cooperative extension system in agriculture and home economics with men, women, boys, and girls; (2) funds available to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii under the terms of this act shall be so expended that the extension agents appointed under its provisions shall be men and women in fair and just proportions; (3) the restriction on the use of these funds for the promotion of agricultural trains shall not apply.

SEC. 2. The sums appropriated under the provisions of this act shall be in addition to and not in substitution for sums appropriated under such act of May 8, 1914, or sums otherwise annually appropriated for cooperative agriculture extension work.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to the bill now before the Senate. On page 3, line 8, between the word "in" and the world "fair," I move to insert the word "such"; and, in the same line, after the word "proportions," before the semicolon, to insert the words "as may be determined by the State agencies," so that subsection 2 of the bill will read:

(2) Funds available to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii under the terms of this act shall be so expended that the extension agents appointed under its provisions shall be men and women in such fair and just proportions as may be determined by the State agencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has just moved to postpone indefinitely Senate bill known as the Capper-Ketcham bill, and to substitute for it a House bill which deals with the same subject. Several weeks ago the Senate bill was reached during the morning hour and under the unanimous consent rule which, as Senators know, precludes discussion of any moment or amendments of importance. Frequently, as is well known, bills reached on the calendar under this rule are passed over at the request of Senators who favor them in order that there may be further opportunity for consideration and oftentimes for amendments which may be offered.

A number of persons who favored the Senate bill asked me, when it was reached on the calendar, to have it go over in order that its provisions might be considered more fully. It was the opinion of some that the bill did not sufficiently protect the agricultural features or interests in contradistinction to the so-called home-economics feature. There was apprehension that without some amendment to the bill, too large a part of the fund would be devoted to home economics and to the disadvantage of the work and activities of county agents. It was suggested to me that an amendment be offered that would insure an adequate proportion of the appropriation made by the Federal Government, as well as by the State, for the employment of county agents and to meet the expenses incident to their work.

Because of these suggestions I asked that the bill go over in order that this matter might be further considered. Upon investigation I reached the conclusion that the fears expressed were not well founded. Suggestions were also made that the bill might meet with Executive disapproval because it sought to make the maximum appropriation called for permanent, and the Budget Bureau had, as I understand, not given approval to such policy. There was another objection which was urged, not by myself however, to the provision which attempted to apportion those employed under the bill between the sexes. This provision, of course, was an attempt to legislate for the States and impose upon them an obligation to employ a certain proportion of women and a certain proportion of men. I regarded this provision as unwise and as an improper attempt to limit the authority of the States. Of course, women should be selected for various Federal as well as State offices and positions; but I think it unwise, by legislation, to attempt to apportion the positions according to sex, and certainly improper for Congress to attempt to require States, by legislation or administrative procedure, to apportion positions between the sexes. Legislation of this character is bound to lead to unfortunate consequences. It may lead to demands that a certain per cent of Federal employees shall be of certain races.

No attempt should be made by Congress to restrict the right of the States to select appointees under this or other measures according to the laws of such States.

The amendment offered by the Senator is an improvement upon the bill, but it still leaves the bill subject to criticism. However, I am not objecting to the bill and am glad that it will be disposed of at this time.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] called attention to the lobbyists and propagandists who infest Washington and the Capitol. Unfortunately, there is too much truth in the statement made by the Senator. There are hundreds of persons in Washington, particularly when Congress is in session, who seek, by intimidation and threats and other means to secure legislation. Some represent groups or active minorities who are selfishly interested in securing legislation. Many of the lobbyists have Federal jobs or want Federal jobs. Many of them support measures which are unconstitutional or socialistic, or offensively, if not destructively, paternalistic. They would break down States and their sovereignty, and submerge them and all local government under an oppressive Federalism. Some of these lobbyists frame bills which are introduced, and if a Senator or Congressman ventures to inquire into the propriety or validity of such legislation, immediately some lobbyist seeks to coerce or intimidate or persuade the inquiring Senator or Congressman to accept the bill without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t." If the slightest opposition is manifested, then efforts are made to arouse public sentiment in the districts or States from which the Representative or Senator comes, and to accomplish this end, inaccurate and oftentimes false and lying statements are telegraphed or written to persons within such districts and States. Not infrequently, within a few hours after a Senator or Congressman has manifested some objection to a bill backed by lobbyists and selfish interests, telegrams are received by the Senator or Representative, protesting or threatening him if he opposes the bill. Oftentimes a mere inquiry by a Senator or a desire to offer reasonable and proper amendments is reported to his constituents as conclusive evidence of his hostility to the measure, and with a view to securing what is called "backfire" or "home pressure" to coerce or intimidate the Senator into accepting, without the slightest modification, the views of the lobbyists.

The bill which has just been indefinitely postponed was supported by a lobbyist who was offensive and untruthful. I do not know by whom he was sent or how much he was paid for lobbying, but I believe he has a job directly or indirectly under the Federal Government and will have a job under the bill which we are about to pass, or will be pecuniarily benefited by it. This lobbyist made inaccurate statements, and attempted to have pressure brought upon me when I asked, during the morning hour, that the bill be passed, as I desired to ascertain whether the apprehensions of persons engaged in agriculture and who are interested in the county agent side of the bill, were well founded. This lobbyist, as I have stated, began writing letters and sent telegrams to my State to accomplish his improper end.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah the name and residence of that lobbyist?

Mr. KING. His name, I am advised, is Noble, and his headquarters are in Chicago. If he and some other lobbyists would remain at home and mind their own business, it would be better for the people and result in wiser legislation. Sooner or later there will be legislation dealing with lobbyists. Of course, there are questions before Congress of importance, and before legislation is enacted dealing with them, information must be obtained.

There are some organizations who are represented in Washington by persons of character and ability, who furnish to committees of the House and Senate facts and data helpful to Senators and Congressmen in their efforts to enact wise and just laws.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Does not the Senator think, however, that some sort of line ought to be drawn between the legitimate propagandist and the odious lobbyist?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly, but it is somewhat difficult to draw that line. The people have a right to address Congress and to ask for legislation or to oppose legislation. I would be the last to attempt to abridge this right; but, in the language of the Senator, the "odious lobbyist," the absolutely selfish and sinister lobbyist, ought to be differentiated from those who are fairly and honestly engaged in presenting to Congress facts and data connected with matters engaging the attention of the National Legislature.

Mr. BRUCE. It is difficult to draw; but it certainly ought to be drawn, because I do not know any individual to whom I have been so much indebted all my life, as far as my limited public career has been concerned, as the legitimate propagandist. I should be completely in the dark as to how to discharge my public duties if I did not get the assistance at times that I do get from individuals and associations that have a perfect right to approach me and to enlighten me with reference to the merits and demerits of questions in which I happen to be interested officially at the time. How would the Senator draw the line?

Mr. KING. I did not rise for the purpose of discussing that question. We had a bill before us a few days ago dealing with lobbyists——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must announce that the Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not know that we were proceeding under that rule. I would not have interrupted the Senator if I had known it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. No; I was not objecting to its consideration at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that the question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD].

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all I am going to speak on.

I am satisfied that the Senator from Delaware is just as deeply interested in this legislation as the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from Nevada. We all realize what it means, and we want to pass it without delay.

As a matter of fact, this Government years ago established land colleges, which were initiated and supported through the grant of public lands. They have always had a relation to that extent to the United States Government. There has been cooperative work going on between those land colleges, the departments of agriculture of the States, and the Department of Agriculture of the Federal Government looking to making a business out of agriculture, the same as we have brought business methods to other lines of industry. I have watched and studied the work. It has proven of great value. I am not going into the details, because the time does not permit. We have a few minutes only in which to act upon this bill or it must be displaced.

An amendment was offered to this bill in the House which has met great opposition and which has delayed its passage for months and threatened its defeat. The amendment is as follows:

> Funds available to the several States under the terms of this act shall be so expended that the extension agents appointed under its provisions shall be men and women in fair and just proportions.

It is perfectly evident that somebody must determine what proportions are fair and just, unless we mean "equally"; and if we mean "equally," then the impracticability of equally dividing agencies between men and women in every case is perfectly apparent. On the other hand, if they were not divided equally between men and women we would possibly have Comptroller General McCarl down here holding that the money could not be expended, because the act had not been carried out to the letter. I think it would be an exceedingly dangerous proposition to leave the amendment as it is, and I am very happy that the Senator from Delaware, who has looked upon this question seriously from the standpoint of the bill itself, and has considered that it might become inoperative if this amendment were not more definitely described, has offered an amendment providing that the State agencies must determine what is equitable and just. Of course, the appointive power is the one to determine what is equitable and just, and the appointive power is the State agency having charge.

I think the Senator from Delaware should be congratulated upon making such a serious effort to accomplish the perfection of the amendment; and as one of those who are heartily in favor of this bill and who has worked for compromises that would insure its passage, I hope that the Senator from Kansas, having the bill in charge, will accept the amendment, and thus insure the immediate passage of the legislation.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I had hoped that the House bill would go through without any amendment; but I do not see that the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware materially alters the purpose of the original amendment, and therefore I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2447) for the relief of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LOUISE A. WOOD

The bill (S. 61) granting an increase of pension to Louise A. Wood was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I trust that that objection will not be insisted upon by the Senator from Utah. It does seem to me that this great country of ours, when it is dealing with the widow of one of the most distinguished of its soldiers and administrators, should at least be as generous as a foreign country.

I think one of the most beautiful, one of the most inspiring things in human history, is the fact that the Legislative Assembly of Cuba, so far as I know absolutely unsolicited, has settled an annuity of some $6,000 on Mrs. Wood as a token of Cuban sensibility to what her celebrated husband did for Cuba; and it did that, as I recollect, before we ourselves had even taken the initial step toward recognizing the claims of Mrs. Wood's situation upon our own gratitude and generosity.

After all, the annuity provided by this bill is not a large one. Even when it is added to the annuity that has been bestowed upon Mrs. Wood by the Legislative Assembly of Cuba the amount will not be a large one; certainly not an inordinate one. As I understand it, though I have no personal knowledge of the subject except what has been derived from reading the newspapers, General Wood had given himself up for years so unremittingly to the service of his country that he never had the opportunity to leave his widow in a position of pecuniary comfort and ease. Therefore, as I say, I do hope that the Senator from Utah will not continue to assert his objection to this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator knows that there are other Senators who object to this bill. It can not be fully considered under the five-minute rule, and I have, therefore, asked that it go over. However, I may add that I am disinclined to support this measure, not because I do not appreciate the fine character of General Wood and the service which he rendered to his country, but there have been others who have given as conspicuous service to their country as General Wood. There have been from the days of Washington down to the World War many military heroes, men who were conspicuous for their bravery, for their great military achievements, and for the important service rendered by them to their country. We have not rewarded them or their families by bounties or pensions.

It has not been the policy of this country to give to its military leaders gratuities and stipends and pensions, as has been done by monarchial countries. I think there are persons who have rendered service of the highest value to our country who were not military men, and, measured by the benefits derived by the Nation and by the American people, they would be as much entitled to pensions and gifts and gratuities as some of our military heroes. I am not disparaging the great ability and the high character of General Wood. I admired him very much and deplored his premature death. But if we pass this bill I do not see where we can draw the line. It may be that many persons believe that the policy pursued should be reversed and that large gratuities should be paid to the families of our great men; but if so, I think some rule should be laid down and some policy adopted which will be just and prevent discrimination and ground for criticism.

For the present I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. BRUCE. Let me say in that connection that the Senator is not more opposed than I am to reckless pensions. The Senator knows that, because my vote has been invariably cast against all legislation of that kind since I have been a Member of this body. I do think, however, that every nation ought to have some pecuniary recompense where pecuniary recompense is really needed for men or women who have rendered extraordinarily illustrious and fruitful service to their country. That, of course, as we all know, has been the English practice for many generations.

I recall at this moment one most striking illustration of this fact. The Senator will recall that after the death of William Pitt Parliament made an appropriation for the payment of all his debts, recognizing the fact that he had been so constantly engaged in the performance of public duties of one sort or another that he had had no opportunity to accumulate a fortune. So it is only in the case of some conspicuously distinguished individual who has rendered services of an unmistakably exceptional value to his country that I would for a moment think of supporting a pension proposition like this; but I do believe that this case is distinctly exceptional.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course the bill goes over under objection; but I want to join with the Senator from Maryland in his remarks. I think General Wood rendered such conspicuous and distinguished service to his country that it ought to be recognized, and this is about the only way I see in which it can be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds; and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill, being the unfinished business, will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2720) for the relief of David McD. Shearer was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let us have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has expressed a desire to be present when this bill is considered. In his absence, therefore, I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1939) granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. There will be an amendment or two to offer to that bill, the discussion of which will take a few minutes. I suggest that it be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 132) to authorize the President to appoint LeRoy K. Pemberton a first lieutenant, Officers' Reserve Corps, United States Army, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is reported adversely.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] who introduced the bill is absent. I suggest that the bill go over without prejudice until he can be here.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator from California said the other day that he would ask once more, and that was the time he did ask, that these bills go over. I do not understand that he expected to ask it any further. The bills ought to be disposed of.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is not here. I suggest that this bill go over until he can be here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Texas the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2053) to establish a military record for Daniel P. Tafe was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] would like to have that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 133) for the relief of Kenneth B. Turner was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is reported adversely and, without objection, will be passed over.

OKFUSKEE COUNTY, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 7011) to detach Okfuskee County from the northern judicial district of the State of Oklahoma and attach the same to the eastern judicial district of the said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

AMENDMENT OF GOOD ROADS ACT

The bill (S. 2327) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is pending.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee informed me just a day or two ago that he was willing to withdraw that amendment. The bill under consideration is the customary procedure, two years in advance, to authorize appropriations for public highways and for roads in the public forests. It is desired to have those authorizations made some time in advance, in order that the various States may arrange their legislative and financial programs, knowing that they may depend upon certain allotments of Government aid in the construction of highways. I trust that the matter will be considered at this time. It has gone over frequently for further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he is authorized to withdraw the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PHIPPS. I feel that I am authorized to ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee be withdrawn.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if provision is made here such as is contemplated by the western public-land States for appropriations for roads in the forests?

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; that is included, the customary amount, seven and a half million dollars for each year for the fiscal years 1930 and 1931.

Mr. KING. That is substantially the appropriation which has been carried?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is identical with what we have been passing for the past few years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume we have an understanding about this bill. In any event, I will ask that it go over to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is obvious that a bill which looks to an appropriation finally of $400,000,000 ought to receive a little consideration. I suggest that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1266) to create in the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor a division of safety was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The bill (S. 3092) to enable the George Washington Bicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $300,000 to enable the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington, established by the joint resolution approved December 2, 1924, to carry out and give effect to plans approved and recommended by said commission for the following purposes:

For editing, indexing, publication, and distribution of George Washington's writings, a George Washington Bicentennary Series, and miscellaneous manuscripts prepared under the direction of the commission, including maps and illustrations, and all necessary expenses connected therewith; for compensation of the executive secretary, historian, and such assistants as may be needed for clerical and expert services, and for actual and necessary traveling, subsistence, and other expenses incurred by the commissioners and officers in the discharge of their duties, to be expended by the disbursing officer of the commission upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the executive committee of said commission, which approval shall be conclusive upon the General Accounting Office in such amounts and for the purposes herein authorized as the commission, in its discretion, may deem proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

SEC. 2. In carrying out the provisions of this or any other act relating to the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the commission established by the joint resolution approved December 2, 1924, is hereby authorized to procure advice and assistance from any existing governmental agency, including the services of technical and other personnel in the executive departments and independent establishments.

SEC. 3. The unexpended balances of the appropriations for the celebration of the one hundredth and fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill, and of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Battles of Lexington and Concord, are hereby authorized to be reappropriated and made available for the necessary expenses of the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington, which, together with amounts heretofore appropriated for the use of said commission and not expended, are hereby authorized to be reappropriated and made available until expended.

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the joint resolution entitled the "Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the preparation and completion of plans for the comprehensive observance of that greatest of all historic events, the bicentennial of the birthday of George Washington," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 5. That the short name for the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington shall be "The George Washington Bicentennial Commission."

Mr. FESS. I want to offer an amendment to the bill. I move, on page 1, line 11, to strike out the words "a George Washington Bicentennary Series."

Mr. JONES. May we have a brief explanation of the bill? I have not had an opportunity to read the report.

Mr. FESS. The object of the bill is to publish a definitive edition of all of the writings and available letters and general orders of General Washington. I understand there are a thousand letters to be printed. This will be a definitive edition.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether the objections which were heretofore made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] have been met by the amendment just offered?

Mr. FESS. Yes. In addition to that objection, the Senator thought we ought to have the matter handled by the Government. I may say that it will cost considerably more to have it done by the Government, under their estimate, than if it were done outside, but there will be a better distribution of it if it is done by the Government than if it were done by a private publishing house.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator care to advise us whether it meets the approval of Doctor Putnam?

Mr. FESS. It does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RULES IN COMMON-LAW ACTIONS

The bill (S. 759) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to make and publish rules in common-law actions was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. When reached before, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] asked that this bill might go over. A minority report, I understand, is being prepared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LIEUT. ROBERT STANLEY ROBERTSON, JR.

The bill (S. 1377) for the relief of Lieut. Robert Stanley Robertson, jr., United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, after line 6, to insert the words "with pay and allowances of the fourth-pay period, as now prescribed under existing laws, and with credit for all service which he is now entitled to count in the computation of his pay," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Lieut. Robert Stanley Robertson, jr., United States Navy, a lieutenant commander on the retired list of the Navy with pay and allowances of the fourth pay period, as now prescribed under existing laws, and with credit for all service which he is now entitled to count in the computation of his pay: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall entitle Lieut. Robert Stanley Robertson, jr., to any back pay or allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. May we have a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this bill is for the relief of a man who served during the World War, and I think there is only one other case like it. It is simply to give him on the retired list the temporary rank he held during the World War.

Mr. JONES. Is he on the retired list?

Mr. SWANSON. He is on the retired list, but he is on active duty, and has been in active service all the time. Under the law he was put on the retired list. The department has the right, if a man is on the retired list, to call him into active service at any time. In order to prevent injustice to active officers, in 1916, when I prepared the naval bill, I provided that no man could get any salary or hold rank higher than that of lieutenant commander when he was called from the retired list to the active list. Such men were crowding out those on the active list.

Mr. JONES. What relief does the bill give this man?

Mr. SWANSON. It gives him an increase of about $1,000 or $1,500 in his pay; I do not know the exact amount.

Mr. JONES. By way of promotion?

Mr. SWANSON. He is promoted on the retired list to the rank he held during the war on the temporary list. During the war, when the Navy was expanded, as the Senator knows, there were a great many officers added, and those then in the Navy were promoted. They served during the war with temporary rank. We provided that their rank should be temporary, so that the Navy could be reduced in size at the end of the war. This man served during the war, and he has been serving ever since on the active list. He was retired on account of physical disability. The bill simply gives him the same rank that he would have had with his class, practically. There are only two men affected. I think it is right and just that this should be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS IN ALASKA

The bill (S. 2532) to provide for the designation of clerks or employees of the Department of the Interior to serve as registers and receivers in the land offices in Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may designate and require a clerk in any of the land offices in Alaska, or any other suitable employee of the Department of the Interior, subject to the filing of such bond or bonds as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to perform the several duties of register and receiver of such office, with all the powers incident to such duties; and the offices of register and receiver or ex officio register and receiver of the land office or offices named in such designation shall thereupon be abolished: Provided, That the employee so designated in such land office may be paid a compensation not to exceed $3,000 per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, while I was out of the Chamber Senate bill 2532 was passed. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be restored to its status on the calendar. When it is taken up for consideration I desire to discuss the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered and the bill will be reinstated on the calendar.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not think the Senator from Virginia is ready to take up the bill. We want to try to have a day fixed for its consideration. So it had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

The bill (H. R. 10885) to amend sections 23 and 24 of the general leasing act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. 437), was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

JOHN L. ALCOCK

The bill (S. 3308) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of John L. Alcock was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. I objected to this bill the other day, but upon investigation I think it is a meritorious claim, and I have no objection.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out down to and including line 2 on page 2, and to insert: "That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of John L. Alcock, of Baltimore, Md., and to award him compensation for losses or damage, if any, which he may have suffered through action by governmental agencies in commandeering, requisitioning, controlling by compulsion or otherwise, allocating or directing the contracting for, or delivery of, spruce and fir lumber, which he owned, or had sold under firm and binding contracts to others than allied governments; and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for such compensation, with interest thereon, notwithstanding the fact that there was no taking by the United States of any of said spruce or fir lumber for the direct use of the United States, and notwithstanding the contracts made by claimant with representatives of the governments allied with the United States, and notwithstanding the fact that the United States, or any officer, agent, or employee acting in its behalf, controlled, allocated, or directed the delivery of said spruce and fir lumber, or directed or required contracts to be made therefor under color of authority, or committed a tort in doing so," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of John L. Alcock, of Baltimore, Md., and to award him compensation for losses or damage, if any, which he may have suffered through action by governmental agencies in commandeering, requisitioning, controlling by compulsion or otherwise, allocating or directing the contracting for or delivery of spruce and fir lumber, which he owned, or had sold under firm and binding contracts to others than allied governments; and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for such compensation, with interest thereon, notwithstanding the fact that there was no taking by the United States of any of said spruce or fir lumber for the direct use of the United States, and notwithstanding the contracts made by claimant with representatives of the governments allied with the United States, and notwithstanding the fact that the United States, or any officer, agent, or employee acting in its behalf, controlled, allocated, or directed the delivery of said spruce and fir lumber, or directed or required contracts to be made therefor under color of authority, or committed a tort in doing so.

SEC. 2. The Court of Claims in the adjudication of such claim is authorized, in its discretion, to use, in addition to any evidence which may be offered in any suit brought under this act, the pleadings and evidence in the case of John L. Alcock & Co. against United States (61 Ct. Cls. Repts. 312).

SEC. 3. Such claim may be instituted at any time within four months from the approval of this act, notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the bill provide for the rendering of a judgment by the Court of Claims?

Mr. SWANSON. It does not. It simply authorizes the court to find the facts and certify them to Congress.

Mr. JONES. According to the title, it is to render judgment.

Mr. SWANSON. The amendment changes that.

Mr. JONES. Then the title should be amended.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to the title being amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the facts in the claim of John L. Alcock."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 126) for the relief of May Gordon Rodes and Sara Louise Rodes, heirs at law of Tyree Rodes, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LYNN W. FRANKLIN

The bill (H. R. 8651) for the relief of Lynn W. Franklin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The bill (S. 2505) granting increase of pension under the general law to soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and their dependents, for disability incurred in line of duty, and authorizing that the records of the War and Navy Departments be accepted as to incurrence of a disability in service in line of duty was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. There is another amendment to be offered to that bill, and I suggest that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ARMISTICE DAY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal holiday was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

THIRD-CLASS POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 1729) extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the third class, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The bill (H. R. 11022) to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1271, the migratory bird bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I think that some day should be set aside to enable us to take up bills that are objected to on the call of the calendar. For instance, there is a bill in which I am very much interested that has come up again and again and has been objected to and has gone over. This is the bill extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the third class, and for other purposes. So with two or three other bills of very greatest moment in which I and other Senators happen to be interested. I think some time ought to be set aside for taking up objected bills.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator——

Mr. BRUCE. It is not my nature to make threats, but the time may come when I shall have to object with a view of securing a time for the consideration of objected bills.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest to the Senator that to-day we took up the calendar not for the consideration of unobjected bills but under Rule VIII, so that if a bill was objected to any Senator had a right to make a motion to proceed to its consideration. The trouble is, however, that we did not get started until the morning hour had nearly expired.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not know that, or I should have made a motion long ago.

NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT—NATIONAL RIFLE MATCH

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 767, the bill (H. R. 8550) to amend the national defense act. It is the national rifle match bill. The appropriation for these matches has already been made, and it is important that the bill to which I refer shall be passed at this time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will it take any time?

Mr. BROOKHART. No; it will take no time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRUCE. I object, at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland objects.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator, I know, is very much interested in the bill. It is the national rifle match bill, in which the Senator from Maryland is interested.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well, Mr. President, because of my great consideration for the Senator from Iowa, I am very glad to withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States," approved February 14, 1927 (44 U. S. Stat. 1095), which adds an additional paragraph to section 113 of the national defense act, is hereby amended to read as follows: "That there shall be held an annual competition, known as the national matches, for the purpose of competing for a national trophy, medals, and other prizes to be provided, together with a small-arms firing school, which competition and school shall be held annually under such regulations as may be prescribed by the national board for the promotion of rifle practice, which regulations shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War."

SEC. 2. Hereafter the national board for the promotion of rifle practice shall consist of the Assistant Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, one member of the Regular Army to be designated by the Secretary of War, one member from the Navy to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, one member from the Marine Corps to be designated by the commandant of the United States Marine Corps, one member from the Militia Bureau to be designated by the chief of the bureau, one member from each State to be designated by the governor of the State, one member from the District of Columbia to be designated by the commanding general, District of Columbia, and one member from the National Rifle Association of America to be designated by the executive committee thereof. Members of said board shall hold office during the pleasure of the appointing power.

The Assistant Secretary of War shall be president of the board and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy shall be vice president and perform the duties of the president in his absence or upon his request.

Said board is charged with prescribing rules and regulations for the promotion of small-arms practice in the United States, for the conduct of the national matches and the Small Arms Firing School, and also for the conduct of the office of the director of civilian marksmanship, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Said board and its executive committee shall serve without pay except to receive actual traveling and hotel expenses while absent from their respective homes for the performance of their duties and under such regulations as the Secretary of War may direct.

Said board shall meet once annually upon the call of the president of the board, at such time and place as he may designate, for the performance of its duties as prescribed in this act.

Seventeen members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business at such meeting.

At this meeting of the board an executive committee shall be elected of not less than seven nor more than nine members, which said committee shall have supervision over, and carry out the regulations of the board relating to, small-arms practice, the national matches and the Small Arms Firing School, and the director of civilian marksmanship.

SEC. 3. The national matches contemplated in this act shall consist of rifle and pistol matches for the national trophy, medals, and other prizes mentioned in section 1 above, to be open to Army, Navy, Marine Corps, National Guard, or Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia, rifle clubs, and civilians, together with a small-arms firing school to be connected therewith and competitions for which trophies and medals are provided by the National Rifle Association of America; and for the cost and expenditures required for and incident to the conduct of the same, including the personal expenses of the board and executive committee the sum necessary for the above-named purposes is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually as a part of the total sum appropriated for the national defense: Provided, That no competitor shall be entitled to commutation of rations in excess of $1.50 per day, and when meals are furnished no greater expense than that sum per man per day for the period the contest is in progress: Provided further, That in lieu of traveling expense and commutation of rations while traveling the sum of 5 cents per mile may be paid to civilian competitors, and such travel pay for the return trip may be paid in advance of the performance of the travel.

SEC. 4. For the incidental expenses of the national board for the promotion of rifle practice, including books, pamphlets, badges, trophies, prizes, and medals, to be expended for such purposes, the sum of not more than $7,500 is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate resume consideration of the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I would like to make a statement before the Senator commences his speech.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well.

Mr. HALE. In the debate on Friday last, relating to the naval appropriation bill I stated that items in the bill for the Marine Corps were increased over the same items last year by a little over $1,000,000. This seems to be a large sum. It is fair to state, however, that $830,000 was added to last year's bill by reappropriating some unexpended balances which were still in the Treasury. Thus, with those unexpended balances added to last year's bill, there is a difference between last year's bill and this year's House bill of $274,636 only, as shown in the House report. The Senate committee added $93,864 to the bill for appropriations for the Marine Corps making in all $368,320 increase over last year.

Now, $171,916 of this amount, as I said on Friday, is taken up in pay of the Marine Corps and has nothing whatever to do with the foreign expeditions in China and Nicaragua. Neither has the $93,864 which was added for the Marine Corps Reserves. That leaves a balance of $102,540, which would be expended, in all probability, for matters connected with Nicaragua and with China, though part of that sum is made up of contingent expenses and might have to do with other matters. The intention was not to have anything in this bill which referred to those foreign expeditions, but to take care of them through deficiency appropriations. The small increase that is made is unavoidable. It is largely used to make up the depleted stocks on hand in the Marine Corps, to fill out stocks that were depleted on account of the foreign expeditions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Can the Senator tell us how much of the $830,000, which he said was made available through reappropriation of unexpended balances of last year, went to defray any expenses in connection with any of the foreign expeditions of the Marine Corps?

Mr. HALE. None at all. It was simply used in the ordinary current expenses of the Marine Corps for the year. The amount by which it is increased over last year's appropriation which could have been used for those foreign expeditions is somewhere near $100,000—perhaps as much as $102,540—but no more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why does the Senator say that it is felt that it would be better to take care of the increased expenditures, due to the use of the marines for foreign expeditionary purposes, in the deficiency bill rather than in the regular naval appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. Because it is not possible to find out what they are beforehand.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator does not want——

Mr. HALE. I will explain to the Senator what has been done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Are we to deduce from the Senator's statement that the entire cost up to date of the expeditionary use of these troops in China and Nicaragua amount only to $102,000?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no. I will explain that when I explain the deficiency items and the amounts appropriated in the two bills.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Can the Senator give us that information now?

Mr. HALE. I will give the Senator the information.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; but the Senator promised to give it to us when the deficiency bill came before us.

Mr. HALE. I will give it to the Senator within a minute or two, if he will allow me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the bill now under consideration carry appropriations for the maintenance of marines in Haiti?

Mr. HALE. For the general maintenance of the marines, and that includes the maintenance of marines in Haiti.

Mr. KING. It is intended, then, to keep marines in Haiti and provision is made by the bill to keep them there for at least another year?

Mr. HALE. That has always been done.

Mr. KING. It has always been done since we engaged in our imperialistic policy in Haiti.

Mr. HALE. There is no change from last year in that regard.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. In other words, as I understand the Senator, he is presenting purely and simply the naval affairs appropriations and not dealing with the policy of the Government for or against or otherwise in connection with our foreign relations. He is simply dealing with a bill that provides for maintenance and continuation of forces wherever they may be sent.

Mr. HALE. That is quite correct.

Mr. KING. But the Senator from New Jersey must know that if the administration has a policy which involves the sending of our military forces to other lands we must make appropriations, and therefore the Senate has a right, and Congress has a right, to express itself upon the validity and propriety of those appropriations.

Mr. EDGE. I quite agree with the Senator from Utah. There is absolutely no impropriety. I did not mean so to indicate in expressing a view as to foreign policies at any time. Perhaps this is a very proper time. As a matter of fact, I think it is. I think the time has come when we should thrash this matter out.

Mr. KING. And have a "show-down."

Mr. HALE. Last Friday I did not have the figures for the deficiency bill of last year nor for the next deficiency bill. I have secured the figures from the department and shall be very glad to give them to the Senate.

In the deficiency bill approved December 22, 1927, there was an item for general expenses and pay of Marine Corps of $1,943,631. Of this amount $743,631 was on account of expenditures for the mail guards. Those were the marines who were put on mail guard duty in this country. Then $1,000,260 was for pay and general expenses of the Marine Corps in China and $199,740 for pay and general expenses of the Marine Corps in Nicaragua. That was in the deficiency bill approved December 22, 1927.

Estimates have been presented by the department to the Bureau of the Budget for the deficiency bill to come before the Senate at a later time. The estimate is that the deficiency will amount to $3,217,084; that this amount will be divided as follows: One million eight hundred and fifty-two thousand and seventy-four dollars for pay and general expenses of the Marine Corps in China, $1,365,010 for pay and general expenses of the Marine Corps in Nicaragua. The items in the deficiency estimate have been grouped for Nicaragua and China. They cover the following items: Provisions, $546,224; clothing, $689,746; fuel, $194,936; military supplies and equipment, $244,675; repairs of barracks, $283,779; forage, $40,617; miscellaneous supplies and expenses, $1,140,023.

No division has been made between China and Nicaragua, but the division would be pro rated according to the size of the appropriations which I have mentioned; that is, $1,852,074 for China and $1,365,010 for Nicaragua. This would make the total amount which we have spent for the Marine Corps in Nicaragua and which we shall have expended in deficiencies up to the end of the current year, $1,564,750.

The question has been also brought up as to whether there would be any additional expense to the Navy proper on account of this expedition. I can answer that by saying that there would not be so far as Nicaragua is concerned. The special-service squadron which is stationed in the Caribbean has been going to Nicaragua off and on. In that squadron is the Rochester, an old cruiser of about 8,000 tons, the Denver, and the Galveston, cruisers of about 3,000 tons each, and the gunboat Tulsa, which is a smaller boat of, I think, about 1,500 tons. Those ships——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, how were these troops transported? Were they transported in Navy transports or Army transports?

Mr. HALE. They were transported in Navy transports.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The item of transportation is not included in any of the figures that the Senator has given, is it?

Mr. HALE. The Navy transports are moving about all the time. It makes no particular difference on which particular service they are consigned. If additional fuel is used by one ship it is taken out of the quota of some other ship, and the fuel expenditures of that ship are reduced; so that there are no additional fuel expenses for the Navy on account of these expeditions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Did not this movement involve an unusually large number of marines? It is not customary, as I understand, under ordinary conditions, to be moving so many troops about as have been moved at this time.

Mr. HALE. It is not; but as I have stated, there is a certain amount of fuel allowed for the use of the Navy during the year, and when fuel is used for one it is taken away from another, so that it does not at all increase the expenditure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand the Senator from Maine, there have been no additional expenditures for the Navy in connection with the transporting of the troops to Nicaragua or to China?

Mr. HALE. No; there have been no additional expenditures. The special-service squadron in Nicaragua and the ships of the Navy that are in active commission cost about as much in one place as in another.

Adding to the sum of $1,564,750 the $102,540 which is the estimated increase in this bill, we have $1,667,290, which is the total additional expense to the Government on account of the Nicaraguan expedition up to June 30, 1928. That $102,540, furthermore, covers the expense not only for Nicaragua but for China as well. So, if we prorate that amount, it would take off an additional $60,000, making in all $1,607,290.

I think that answers the question which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] brought up in his resolution to-day; and I think, if it is an answer, he will agree with me that there is no particular purpose in the resolution.

Further, I should like to say that this appropriation bill has been deferred to a very late period in the year. It is of the utmost importance that its passage should be expedited. Before the beginning of the fiscal year the Navy has to make contracts for supplies, and it has to know where it stands. The fiscal year beginning in July, there is very little time left for that purpose. So I hope that Senators will help me in expediting the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

SALT CREEK (WYO.) OIL FIELD

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in reference to the leases granted in the Salt Creek field there has been much editorial comment. I have here a copy of an editorial published in the Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, Colo., of the issue of March 31, 1928, with reference to this matter. As is generally known, the Rocky Mountain News is one of the members of the Scripps-Howard group of newspapers. They are rather close to the ground out there, and I do not believe would take the responsibility of an editorial of this sort unless the allegations contained in it were true. I therefore send the editorial to the desk and ask that it may be read at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Rocky Mountain News, March 31, 1928]

SALT CREEK'S BITTER OIL

Keep Teapot Dome and Elk Hills in their class and finish with them and expose all the rottenness.

But do not stop there. Give Salt Creek, Wyo., the thrice over.

Acre for acre, the Salt Creek field has been the richest find on the continent. It has been producing actively 16 years and there are a good many years ahead of it. Actually billions in it.

The greater part of its public-land sections was traded off during the Democratic national régime of 1913–1921, but more particularly during the last year or two of the Wilson administration, when the big man was absent or physically unable to check on things.

Go back to the discovery of the rich field. It becomes an international story. Some comedy and romance; but above all, tragedy. The tragic is showing up now. The romance and the comedy are all gone; the Greek climax is nearing.

Find out all about the preemptors of Salt Creek and what became of them. Several of them victims of mercenaries, one or two with millions which they did not know what to do with, poor fellows!

Learn something of the means taken to be rid of homesteaders and prospectors—a fierce tale in itself.

Find out a whole lot about the passage of the leasing act—a novel in its plots and counterplots.

The intent was good; the result was ignoble.

Find out regarding the limited number of owners and lessees now in the field and in what way they gained possession. A three-volumed novel.

Beyond everything else let the investigators dig deep into the "high-jacking" propositions practiced over the Salt Creek field. This we guarantee will cause the ears of the Nation to prick up. It will be a story of stories. Neither the Teapot Dome nor the California holdup will compare with it. Millions in blackmail!

Or should it be told?

As a lesson in national morality, we believe the whole scandal should be uncovered—"given the air."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have here an editorial of similar tenor published by the Denver News, of Denver, Colo., on the 3d day of April, 1928, which I send to the desk and ask to have read at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Denver (Colo.) News of April 3, 1928]

GO THROUGH WITH IT

Whether or not at this rather late day the United States Government could reclaim much out of the several billion dollars' worth of oil that has gone out of the Salt Creek field to the refineries, or whether the proper department of Government could have a valid claim on what remains of the oil in the public-land sections of the field, is a legal proposition. It might be worth investigation, however.

But if no monetary returns were made to the United States Treasury, the Salt Creek business should be gone into by the Senate investigating committee and by a regularly constituted division of the executive branch of Government as a lesson and as a warning.

It may be that in the end—and it seems a long way off at this writing—no one connected with the Teapot Dome-Elk Hills naval-reserve transactions will be held in jail as punishment; but at that, much has been gained in a moral or ethical way. The defendants have been punished already by a higher law. They are taboo. So far they have escaped the statutory law, but there is a karmic law.

The Teapot Dome business was an incident in the Salt Creek transaction. If it had not been for treasures found in Salt Creek some of the persons mixed up with the Teapot Dome conspiracy would not have been in position to join the Teapot Dome circle—the chips were of the blue variety in the latter. Fortunes were made out of Salt Creek apart from the other transaction. Some of them, doubtless, were honestly made; others are in grave doubt.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I am informed that Robert C. Bell on January 18, 1921, was a special assistant to the Attorney General of the last Democratic administration. On January 18, 1921, Robert C. Bell submitted to the Department of the Interior of the last Democratic administration and to the Attorney General of the United States in that administration a memorandum with reference to the leasing of the Salt Creek oil field. I think it is generally conceded that the Salt Creek field was, and perhaps is to-day, the richest oil field in the world. Mr. Bell had been with the department, as I understand, for several years. He was thoroughly conversant with the fraudulent claims of those asking for leases in the Salt Creek field under the leasing act of February 20, 1920. Mr. Bell submitted his memorandum and made an argument against those leases, showing conclusively, I think, that they represented a tissue of fraud and that if they were granted the United States would lose through fraudulent means most of its great oil resources.

I desire to read just a little of that memorandum—the beginning and close—and then I shall ask that it may be printed entire in the RECORD at the conclusion of my observations in order that it may be made available in full to the American people, who ought to know just what took place in those latter days of the last Democratic administration. I read from a copy of the memorandum:

LEASING SALT CREEK OIL FIELD

Leases to the withdrawn oil lands of the Salt Creek field, Natrona County, Wyo., have been requested under the act of February 25, 1920, by:

Applicant:	Acreage applied for
Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation	5,963
Midwest Oil Co	1,970
Central Wyoming Oil & Development Co	920
Petroleum Maatschappij Salt Creek	160
Salt Creek Consolidated Oil Co	2,347
E. J. Sullivan, trustee	560
Mountain & Gulf Oil Co	960
New York Oil Co	120
New York Oil Co. and Northwestern Oil Co	480
National Petroleum Co	960
Federal Oil & Development Co	320
Parkman Oil Co	160
Total	14,920

These applications should be denied, because:

1. The applicants have been guilty of fraud, had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of fraud, and have not acted honestly and in good faith.

2. The applicants are requesting a greater acreage than the maximum allowed by said act; and the leases, if granted as requested, or at least interests therein, would inure to persons, associations, or corporations for a greater aggregate area or acreage than the maximum in said act provided for.

Now I turn over to the conclusion and read as follows. These are excerpts from the conclusion of the memorandum submitted by Mr. Bell to the Secretary of the Interior at that time in the last Democratic administration:

The paramount reason urged by applicants in support of their claims is that they innocently and in good faith have expended vast sums in the development of the field, but the true facts render this contention impotent, because almost all the capital used, not only for development but also to purchase claims, was the money received for the oil taken by these trespassers from the public lands. So resourceful were these promoters and capitalists that at no time did they risk any considerable part of their own means. They let the property pay for itself and for its development. It will be remembered that the Fitzhugh claims were secured by an agreement to purchase the oil to be produced at 33 cents per barrel, only $10,000 in this case being advanced, and that the Henshaw claims were purchased for $325,000, but this consideration was not paid till it was derived from the oil. Any other capital that was used very largely came from France and Holland. The crowd asking such valuable concessions at the hands of the Government already has become immensely wealthy at its expense. They have no equities worthy of consideration. It is true that stocks have been sold to the public, but surely the Government should not sacrifice the public property, a greatly needed natural resource, to make these oil stocks good.

The Midwest Refining Co. has an absolute monopoly of the Salt Creek field, and in one way or another controls every one of the above-named applicants. It is interested in every acre sought by them, and a lease to anyone of them will inure to its benefit. Its claims are based on titles that are thoroughly saturated with fraud, and from the beginning its promoters, officers, and directors unquestionably have had full knowledge of the fraud. It not only is not acting honestly and in good faith, but it now is compounding fraud by seeking to secure leases on a greater acreage than the maximum allowed by law. For several years it maintained a large force of paid lobbyists, lawyers, and agents at the Capital to secure the passage of the act with the relief provisions included, and evidently it will continue so to do till its subsidiaries have secured leases thereunder. They are not "in the court with clean hands."

Mr. President, I read no more from this memorandum. It is signed by Robert C. Bell, special assistant to the Attorney General. It is dated January 18, 1921. I am informed that, notwithstanding this presentation of the conditions in the Salt Creek field, between that day and the outgoing of the last Democratic administration, March 4, 1921, practically all of the Salt Creek field was leased to private oil interests, and as a result the richest oil field in the world passed out of the control of the United States of America.

Mr. President, at this point I submit the memorandum and ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my observations on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(Memorandum)

LEASING SALT CREEK OIL FIELD

Leases to the withdrawn oil lands of the Salt Creek field, Natrona County, Wyo., have been requested under the act of February 25, 1920, by:

Applicant:	Acreage applied for
Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation	5,963
Midwest Oil Co	1,970
Central Wyoming Oil & Development Co	920
Petroleum Maatschappij Salt Creek	160
Salt Creek Consolidated Oil Co	2,347
E. J. Sullivan, trustee	560
Mountain & Gulf Oil Co	960
New York Oil Co	120
New York Oil Co. and Northwestern Oil Co	480
National Petroleum Co	960
Federal Oil & Development Co	320
Parkman Oil Co	160
Total	14,920

These applications should be denied, because—

1. The applicants have been guilty of fraud, had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of fraud, and have not acted honestly and in good faith.

2. The applicants are requesting a greater acreage than the maximum allowed by said act, and the leases if granted as requested, or at least interests therein, would inure to persons, associations, or corporations for a greater aggregate area or acreage than the maximum in said act provided for.

FRAUD

Section 18 of the act of February 25, 1920, provides:

"No claimant for a lease who has been guilty of any fraud, or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or who has not acted honestly and in good faith, shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section."

All the debates in both the Senate and House of Representatives, all the records of hearings before the Committees on Public Lands and the reports of these committees, show that the question of fraud was a subject of very serious consideration when this act was before Congress. Because of the fact that rights were to be conferred that did not then exist under the law, it was feared that relief might be extended to claimants who were not justly entitled thereto. The above-mentioned provision, which was included in the bill introduced in the Senate, was modified in the House so as to be less stringent, but was adopted in conference and finally enacted. It does not require that a claimant shall be guilty of fraud or shall have actual knowledge of fraud, but only that a claimant shall have had reasonable grounds to know of any fraud, or shall not have acted honestly and in good faith. It now behooves those who administer or interpret this law to give it the effect it was intended to have. This intention of Congress is indicated in the language of Senator Lenroot, as follows:

"But the Senator forgets that this entire section is a section extending a privilege to a certain class of claimants. The Senator well knows that it is this section that has caused the greatest controversy of any portion of the oil leasing legislation. Complaint has constantly been made that legislation which has been proposed in the past has opened the door of relief to fraudulent claimants. This is the strongest provision against fraud that has ever been found in any relief section in an oil leasing bill." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 58, p. 4536.)

The rights asserted by the claimants were initiated under the placer mining laws, a provision of which is as follows:

"Legal subdivisions of 40 acres may be subdivided into 10-acre tracts; and two or more persons, or associations of persons, having contiguous claims of any size, although such claims may be less than 10 acres each, may make joint entry thereof; but no location of a placer claim, made after the 9th day of July, 1870, shall exceed 160 acres for any one person or association of persons, which location shall conform to the United States surveys; and nothing in this section contained shall defeat or impair any bona fide preemption or homestead claim upon agricultural lands, or authorize the sale of the improvements of any bona fide settler to any purchaser." (Act July 9, 1870, 16 Stat. L. 217, 6 Fed. Stat. Ann. 577, sec. 2330.)

Another provision is as follows:

"When placer claims are upon surveyed lands and conform to legal subdivisions no further survey or plat shall be required, and all placer claims located after the 10th day of May, 1872, shall conform as near as practicable with the United States system of public-land surveys, and the rectangular subdivisions of such surveys, and no such location shall include more than 20 acres for each individual claimant; but where placer claims can not be conformed to legal subdivisions, survey and plat shall be made as on unsurveyed lands; and whereby the segregation of mineral land in any legal subdivision a quantity of agricultural land less than 40 acres remains, such fractional portion of agricultural land may be entered by any party qualified by law for homestead or preemption purposes." (Act of May 10, 1872, 17 Stat. L. 94, 6 Fed. Stat. Ann. 579, sec. 2331.)

The object of these provisions is to limit the quantity of placer mineral land which may be located by one person to 20 acres, in order to make a general distribution among as large a number as possible, rather than favor a few individuals who might wish to acquire princely fortunes by securing large tracts of such lands, and to secure the prompt development of such lands as are located; therefore it is contrary to this policy for one person to cover more than 20 acres by one location by the device of using the names of his employees, friends, and relatives as locators.

Regardless of any kind of a definition that might be given for "fraud," the courts repeatedly have held that it is a fraud on the law and on the Government where locations are not made in good faith for the use and benefit of the named locators, each with an interest not to exceed 20 acres. Such a scheme is condemned in the case of Cook v. Klonos et al. (164 Fed. 529), wherein the court said:

"The prohibition contained in section 2331 against the location of 'more than 20 acres for each individual claimant' is direct and positive and limits the amount of ground that any one claimant may appropriate, either individually or in association claim, at the time of the location. * * * The question here is, not whether an individual can purchase mining claims after they have been located and hold them in his own name but whether an individual can, by the use of the names of his friends, relatives, or employees as dummies, locate for his own benefit a greater area of mining ground than that allowed by law. * * * The few restrictions imposed are only intended to prevent the primary location and accumulation of large tracts of land by a few persons, and to encourage the exploration of the mineral resources of the public land by actual bona fide locators. The scheme of using the names of dummy locators in making the locations of a mining claim for the purpose of securing a concealed interest in such claim appears to be contrary to the purpose of the statute; but when this scheme is used to secure an interest in a claim for a single individual, not only concealed but in excess of the limit of 20 acres, it is plainly in violation of the letter of the law, and when, as in this case, all the locators had knowledge of the concealed interest and were parties to the transaction, it rendered the location void."

In the case of Nome & Sinook v. Snyder (187 Fed. 385–388–389) the court said:

"It follows, therefore, with exact logic, that five persons may by means of proper association make valid location of 100 acres in one claim, so that it did not include more than 20 acres to each individual. This does not mean that while the five may, by associating themselves together, locate 100 acres in one claim, 1 or 2 of the 5 can acquire by such location substantially all of the claim, leaving the others with proportionately a very small or nominal interest therein.

"Any scheme or device entered into whereby one individual is to acquire more than that amount or proportion in area constitutes a fraud upon the law, and consequently a fraud upon the Government, from which the title is to be acquired, and any location made in pursuance of such a scheme or device is without legal support and void. The proposition seems to be well established.

"Now, in the case under review, the very articles of agreement put the claimant beyond the pale of the law, while the testimony establishes the illegality of the scheme beyond peradventure. The location, although made in the name of the association, two of the parties thereto were to have but a nominal interest in the claim, one less than one-fifth, and one more than one-half, giving the latter, of course, more than 50 acres proportionately in the claim. So that, regardless of the discovery, regardless of the marketing on the ground, or even the assessment work, the claim was void, and could not avail the locators in any stage."

In the case of the United States v. Brookshire Oil Co. et al (242 Fed. 718–721) the court said:

"It is manifest that Burge could acquire no right in mineral lands as against the Government by such subterfuge, and since the Brookshire Co. was in possession and claiming under him, and as his representative or agent, it necessarily follows that its interests was no greater than his. It is true there is no limitation as to the number of mining claims an individual or association of indvduals may locate, but it is provided that no claim shall exceed 20 acres for each individual (sec. 2331, R. S.; Comp. St. 1916, par. 4630) or 160 acres for any association (sec. 2330, R. S.; Comp. St. 1916, par. 4629). This is a direct and positive limitation of the amount of mining ground any one claimant may appropriate individually or as a member of an association in any one claim, and he can not evade the law by the use of the names of his friends, relatives, or employees. Any device whereby one person is to acquire more than 20 acres, or an association more than 160 acres in area, by one discovery, constitutes a fraud upon the Government and is without legal support and void."

HENSHAW-FITZHUGH LOCATIONS

Preferential rights to leases to nearly all the Salt Creek field, which was withdrawn by Executive order of September 27, 1909, are based on what are generally known as the Henshaw-Fitzhugh locations which were made in the spring of 1910. These locations were void not only because they were made subsequent to the order of withdrawal but also because none of the said locations were made in good faith and for the use and benefit of the named locators, each with an interest not to exceed 20 acres of each tract; in other words, the locators were what are commonly called "dummies." These locations, 120 in number, were made by residents of San Francisco and Oakland, Calif., as follows:

"William G. Henshaw, financier; Hetty T. Henshaw, wife of William G. Henshaw; William M. Fitzhugh, mining operator; and Mary E. Fitzhugh, wife of William M. Fitzhugh."

The name of the four parties above mentioned were used on each of the 120 locations with four of the following, without any apparent method of selection or rotation:

"W. F. Henshaw, brother of William C. Henshaw; Helen W. Henshaw, wife of F. W. Henshaw; Lillie T. Hall, sister of Hetty T. Henshaw; E. N. Hall, husband of Lillie T. Hall; Alla S. Chickering, daughter of William C. Henshaw; Harry Chickering, husband of Alla S. Chickering; Ethel K. Nichols, niece of Hetty T. Henshaw; Henry D. Nichols, husband of Ethel K. Nichols; and H. J. Knowles."

The names of the four following-mentioned parties, all employees of William G. Henshaw, were used, two of them once and two of them twice:

"Charles T. Rudolph, Emil Nusbaumer, William H. Metcalf, and P. C. Black."

William G. Henshaw, a financier, furnished all the money for the enterprise, while William M. Fitzhugh made the locations and was to do such work in the field as was deemed necessary. Evidence is abundant that these two men were the parties in interest and that they received the profits of their operations.

H. J. Knowles freely admits that his name was used as an accommodation to William G. Henshaw, and that he never had any interest in the locations. The use of the names of the majority of these locators cost Henshaw the munificent sum of $12.50 for each time each name was used. But the best evidence of the character of these locations is contained in contracts—of record—between William G. Henshaw and William M. Fitzhugh which purport to define their respective interests. One of the contracts, dated August 15, 1909, recorded May 25, 1911, in Book 2, A. C. & L., 456 Natrona County, Wyo., provided "that Henshaw should have three-fourths and Fitzhugh one-fourth of any profits or property derived from the sale, disposition, or development of any of such property. Said contract further provided that a corporation should be organized to which all properties should be conveyed, and that "in consideration of such conveyances said corporation shall issue to the parties hereto its entire capital stock in the following proportions: To the party of the first part—Fitzhugh—one-quarter thereof, and to the party of the second part—Henshaw—three-quarters thereof." Henshaw did not claim the right to a three-fourths interest because of representing himself and five associates in each location, but because he was furnishing the money for the enterprise, as recited in a paragraph of the contract of August 15, 1909, as follows:

"Said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to advance, from time to time during such period as he shall elect to finance said project as aforesaid, any and all sums of money required to carry the interest of said party of the first part in said lands, leases, property, and corporation, and it is expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that two-quarters of said three-quarters' interest of said party of the second part is the consideration for the promise and covenant on the part of said party of the second part in this paragraph contained."

The contract of August 15, 1909, further provided "that upon the organization of such corporation and issuance of stock thereof the stock to which said party of the first part is entitled shall be issued and delivered to said party of the second part (Henshaw) as trustee, who shall hold the same in trust for said party of the first part for the term of five years, with the power, and said party of the second part is hereby given and granted for said period of five years the full and complete power to manage, control, sell, hypothecate, and dispose of all of said stock so issued as aforesaid, and all the assets and property of said corporation, or any part of either of said stock, assets, or property for the joint benefit of the parties hereto, as their interests are herein set forth, upon such terms and in such manner as the best judgment of said party of the second part may dictate and determine." This provision, it will be perceived, gave Henshaw absolute control of the enterprise.

Because of the uncertainty of this contract applying to the lands of the Salt Creek field, which they had not yet located, a supplement thereto was executed November 16, 1909, as follows:

"This is to certify that the attached contract dated August 15, 1909, between us, the undersigned, is hereby modified to the following effect and extent, to wit: The said Fitzhugh shall have 25 per cent and the said Henshaw shall have 75 per cent of all profits made by the said Henshaw, either directly or indirectly, from all oil lands or oil or gas discovered or produced from any lands or oil or gas interests either may acquire in the State of Wyoming, or either have acquired in the said State. This is intended to cover contracts, leases, conveyances, and other and all manner of methods of acquisition."

It would seem that no further evidence is necessary to prove conclusively the fraudulent scheme of these parties; but if so, it may be found in the record of the case of Wm. M. Fitzhugh et al. v. The Midwest Oil Co. et al., in the District Court of the United States for the District of Arizona, in the testimony of both William G. Henshaw and William M. Fitzhugh. For brevity I will not quote this testimony, but will refer to the "Memorandum on the bona fides of the Fitzhugh-Henshaw group of locators," submitted by A. B. Bouton, Esq., special assistant to the United States attorney, dated March 1, 1920, wherein the pertinent parts may be found. In all the testimony and statements of these parties, in their correspondence and in their contracts, it nowhere appears that any locator, except William G. Henshaw and William M. Fitzhugh, had any interest whatever; and William G. Henshaw claimed the "lion's share" of the profits and the right to control, because he furnished the capital. The contracts were executed by and between William G. Henshaw and William M. Fitzhugh only; and it does not appear that the other locators were represented therein or that their rights, if any, were taken into consideration. The provisions for the distribution of the profits and for the division of the capital stock of the corporation to be organized brand the locators as dummies, the locations illegal, and the whole plan as a fraud on the law and on the Government.

The above analysis of the agreement between Henshaw and Fitzhugh makes the locations bad enough, but let us consider briefly the interpretation thereof by Henshaw and later by his grantees. Henshaw contended that as the agreement of November 16, 1909, provided "The said Fitzhugh shall have 25 per cent, and the said Henshaw shall have 75 per cent, of all profits made by the said Henshaw, either directly or indirectly, from all oil lands or oil or gas discovered or produced from any lands or oil or gas interests either may acquire in the State of Wyoming or either have acquired in the said State," he was entitled to three-fourths of Fitzhugh's one-fourth. Strange as it may seem, he did not admit that his construction would give Fitzhugh a one-fourth interest in his three-fourths. This interpretation, of course, would make Fitzhugh and wife dummies, because it would give Henshaw 30 acres of the 40 acres of each location, presumably the property of Fitzhugh and wife. If it were Henshaw's idea that the agreement entitled Fitzhugh to a one-fourth interest in his (Henshaw's) share (20 acres) of each location (which nowhere appears), still this would make Fitzhugh and wife dummies, as Henshaw would then have an interest in each location equivalent to 45 acres, and Fitzhugh and wife together only 15 acres. This is assuming, of course, that Henshaw's associates each had an interest of 20 acres, which at all times must be done to give the locations validity. If it should be contended that this agreement gave Henshaw and associates a three-fourths interest in the share of Fitzhugh and wife and mutually gave the latter a one-fourth interest in the share of Henshaw and associates, then Henshaw would have had no basis whatever for the "claim" or cause of action against Fitzhugh which he asserted, because the ultimate outcome under such a construction would have resulted in Henshaw getting three-fourths and Fitzhugh one-fourth of each location, which was not Henshaw's position at any time. It is impossible to arrive at any conclusion other than that Henshaw set out to acquire for himself practically all of each location of 160 acres.

The Reed interests, of Denver, Colo.—so called because they were financed and controlled by Verner Z. Reed and associates—purchased the claims of Henshaw and Fitzhugh. The negotiations on behalf of the Reed interests were conducted by Oliver N. Shoup, secretary and general manager of the Reed Investment Co., and Karl C. Schuyler, attorney. Fitzhugh conveyed to the Midwest Oil Co., a Reed company, on June 3, 1911, for a consideration of approximately 33 cents per barrel for the oil. In this transaction it was understood that Shoup and Schuyler should negotiate with Henshaw for a partition or segregation of Fitzhugh's interest in each location; accordingly they went to California and entered into negotiations with Henshaw July 21, 1911, which resulted in the Reed Investment Co. taking an option to purchase Henshaw's interest. Soon thereafter this transaction was completed by conveyance to the nine "little Reed companies."

Notwithstanding the fact that Shoup and Schuyler were the agents, representatives and attorneys of Fitzhugh as well as the Midwest Oil Co., they purchased Henshaw's so-called claim or cause of action above mentioned against Fitzhugh and without Fitzhugh's knowledge.

This claim was taken in the name of one F. P. Evans, who assigned all rights and interests acquired by him to O. H. Shoup, "trustee."

It is stated in an affidavit subscribed and sworn to by Karl C. Schuyler on December 6, 1920, and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior December 7, 1920, that "affiant and said O. H. Shoup also felt that as soon as Fitzhugh's anger subsided he might and probably would be willing to pay the sum of $25,000 to clear the matter up, especially if the claim should be asserted to some one other than the Henshaw interests, and for this reason the details of the transaction were not disclosed to Fitzhugh." At no time was Fitzhugh given an opportunity to settle the matter for $25,000. (Apparently his anger, like Tennyson's brook, ran on forever and forever.) Two years thereafter he was sued on this claim in Natrona County, Wyo., not in the name of Shoup or Schuyler or any of the Reed companies but by the California Oil Lands Co., a concern organized by Shoup and Schuyler in California for the sole purpose of bringing the suit. Not then did they let Fitzhugh know that they had bought the "claim" and were "after him." They still pretended to be his friends and counsellors and that Henshaw was "the villain who still pursued him." They urged him by every conceivable artifice to settle, not for $25,000 but for 19 per cent of what he was to receive for his oil.

Fitzhugh in 1917 learned that he had been deceived, swindled, and defrauded, and soon thereafter filed suit against Shoup, Schuyler, the Midwest Oil Co., et al. in the District Court of the United States for Arizona, alleging the fraud and deceit above stated. This suit was compromised and all the interest in the Salt Creek field purchased for the sum of $2,250,000.

IBA AND OTHER LOCATIONS

A large number of locations on the field were made under the placer mining law prior to the locations made by Henshaw and Fitzhugh. So-called claims of title issuing from these locations have been acquired by the applicants, and it is contended that these claims confer preferential rights to leases. Space will not permit us to detail the facts relative to these numerous locations; in fact, we must be content with stating conclusions only. Evidence is abundant in contracts and documents of record, in statements, affidavits, and sworn testimony, that these locations are fully as bad as those made by Henshaw and Fitzhugh. They were and still are void and in violation of the law, because none of said locations was made and maintained in good faith for the use and benefit of the locators, each with an interest not to exceed 20 acres of each tract, and none of said locations was made in good faith for the purpose of developing the petroleum resources of any of said tracts by the named locators, but were made in every case for the purpose of excluding real prospectors from the land, by a pretense of complying with the law until the locations could be sold at a profit to the real party in interest.

As many as eight locations were made on the same tracts, some as early as February, 1883; but most of them were entirely abandoned. However, the locations made by one Cy Iba, in 1887, are alleged to have some vitality. As evidence of the "dummy" character of these locations, we quote from a power of attorney to Iba from his colocators, as follows:

* * * "and having located the same, to appropriate the same to his sole use, together with all the right, title, and interest in the same, we selling and conveying the same to him as our grantee, for a valuable consideration." * * *

(This is an example of volumes of evidence that might be included herein.)

Iba used the names of more than 100 persons from whom he obtained powers of attorney containing the above-mentioned provision, before the locations were made. None of his colocators ever claimed any interest or received any benefits or profits.

Certain of the above-named applicants before they had settled their differences and joined in their common cause against the United States, alleged and contended, in a number of "adverse" proceedings in the district court of Natrona County, Wyo., that the Iba locations were void and unlawful, because the locators were dummies and the locations were entirely abandoned long prior to the order of withdrawal. Surely these same applicants will not now be permitted to avail themselves of the claims that they once contended were so bad.

The question naturally presenting itself is why were so many locations made, and why were they invariably bad. The reason is simple. Some ambitious individual who had acquired some knowledge of the oil business would hear something about the prospects for oil at Salt Creek. Such an individual, of course, was not content with one location of 20 acres, or a number of locations in which he had an interest of only 20 acres, so he would borrow the names of his friends and relatives and proceed to locate for his own use and benefit vast areas of the public lands. Generally no pretense was made at complying with the law in any respect, except to make the "paper" locations so as to acquire a color of title which might be sold at a profit to some real oil operator or promoter.

For several years delegations appeared before Congressmen, Senators, and other officials beseeching "relief" for the poor, honest, oppressed prospectors, who were much discussed, but in truth unknown to the history of the Salt Creek field. If such ever existed, they have long since, at the behest of the Midwest interests vi et armis or otherwise passed on.

KNOWLEDGE OF FRAUD

The contracts above mentioned, between Henshaw and Fitzhugh, were on record in Natrona County, Wyo., wherein the Salt Creek field is situated; therefore, every applicant basing a claim on the Henshaw-Fitzhugh locations had notice of their contents, and consequently of their fraudulent character. The Iba powers of attorney likewise were of record. Moreover, the applicants had actual knowledge of the fraud, by and through the knowledge, acts, and conduct of their incorporators, officers, and agents.

Shoup and Schuyler from the beginning knew of the scheme of Henshaw and Fitzhugh. Because of the provisions in their contracts, which gave Henshaw control of Fitzhugh's interest, they secured a ratification by Henshaw of their transaction with Fitzhugh in which he conveyed to the Midwest Oil Co. The document signed by Henshaw expressly mentions his agreements with Fitzhugh of August 15, 1909, and November 16, 1909. These agreements are also mentioned in Henshaw's assignment of his "claim" against Fitzhugh to Evans.

Shoup, Schuyler, and Reed organized the Midwest Oil Co., the Reed Investment Co., also the Crescent Oil Co., Control Oil Co., Bluestone Oil Co., Barbados Oil Co., Pinero Oil Co., Seattle Oil Co., California Oil Co., Fitzhugh Oil Co., and Henshaw Oil Co., commonly called the "Reed companies." They became the principal stockholders, officers, and directors; and had the active management and control of all of these companies.

The Midwest Oil Co., which acquired Fitzhugh's interest, is an applicant for leases to 1,970 acres of the field. The Reed companies, which acquired the interest of Henshaw, conveyed to the Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation, an applicant for leases to 5,963 acres of the field. The latter was organized by the same group of promoters, and their knowledge of the fraud was knowledge to this applicant.

The applicants are all subsidiaries of the Midwest Refining Co., all organized by the same promoters and capitalists, all having very largely an identity of officers, stock ownership, management, and control. None of them were strangers to the true situation or innocent purchasers in any sense.

The general rule of law is that notice of a fact acquired by an agent while transacting the business of his principal operates constructively as notice to his principal; and as corporations from their nature can never act except through the instrumentality of agents, this principle applies with peculiar force to them. Notice to or knowledge of an officer or agent of a corporation obtained in the course of his employment, and with respect to a matter within the scope of his authority, or apparent authority, is notice to or knowledge of the corporation. (Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 436; McCaskill Co. v. United States, 216 U. S. 504, 515; Armstrong v. Ashley, 204 U. When a corporation once gets knowledge, it continues to have it even though the officer or agent through whom the knowledge was obtained is no longer in its service. E. 1113 mem.).)

EXCESS ACREAGE

Even should the question of fraud be decided in favor of the applicants, then they are entitled to leases in the Salt Creek field for 3,200 acres only.

Let us examine the so-called "relief" provision of the act, sections 18, 18a, and 19.

Section 18 provides:

"That not more than one-half of the area, but in no case to exceed 3,200 acres, within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field, shall be leased to any one claimant under the provision of this section when the area of such geologic oil structure exceeds 640 acres.

"All leases hereunder shall inure to the benefit of the claimant and all persons claiming through or under him by lease, contract, or otherwise, as their interests may appear; subject, however, to the same limitations as to area and acreage as is provided for claimant in this section.

"That no lease or leases under this section shall be granted, nor shall any interest therein inure, to any person, association, or corporation for a greater aggregate area or acreage than the maximum in this section provided for."

Section 18a does not expressly provide an acreage limitation.

Section 19 provided that certain persons shall be entitled to prospecting permits upon "the same terms and conditions and limitations as to acreage as other permits provided for in this act."

The question is, How great an acreage is an applicant entitled to under the act? Was it contemplated that an applicant should be limited to a lease of 3,200 acres within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field, or that an applicant should be entitled to 3,200 acres under section 18, an unlimited acreage under section 18a, and 2,560 acres under section 19? Of course, the act should be considered and construed as a whole. Undoubtedly the intention of Congress in providing an acreage limitation was to prevent monopoly, to insure competition, and to extend the privileges to the many and not to the few. To accomplish this purpose applicants are limited by the act to a maximum of 3,200 acres. Any other construction would, in effect, invalidate the acreage limitation provisions and circumvent the clear intention of Congress.

The desire to limit the acreage to each applicant is discernible throughout the act. In section 13, the first on "Oil and gas," it is provided that a permit shall be granted to prospect for oil and gas on not to exceed 2,360 acres. Section 14 provides that if the permittee discovers valuable deposits of oil or gas, he shall be entitled to a lease on one-fourth of the land embraced in the permit at a royalty of 5 per cent and shall be entitled to a preference right to a lease on the remainder of the land embraced in the prospecting permit at a royalty of not less than 12½ per cent. Section 17 provides that all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the known geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same not subject to preferential lease may be leased to the highest bidder, in areas not exceeding 640 acres. When it comes to section 18, the first of the so-called relief provisions, Congress, in its liberality in extending a preferred right to honest claimants, goes further than in the preceding sections and increases the limitation to 3,200 acres. Section 18a in the original draft of the act in the House was a part of section 18; and it was by amendment at a late hour of its consideration that it was separated from section 18. All of the provisos of section 18, such as the provision relative to the naval petroleum reserve, the question of fraud, the acreage limitation, etc., were not painstakingly added to 18a; but undoubtedly all these provisions were intended to apply to 18a the same as to 18. In fact, 18a is in a sense another proviso to 18 which authorizes the President to direct the compromise of a controversy by an exchange or division of land (very desirable under certain conditions) or the proceeds of operation. Will the idea be indulged that this section authorizes the President to direct the granting of a lease to a claimant guilty of fraud, or to an unlimited acreage, or that it extends any greater measure of relief in any case than section 18? If so, many of the provisions of the act absolutely are of no avail. It merely authorizes, first, the President to make or direct a settlement, and, second, to make it in a different manner from that authorized by section 18; but it is not intended that such a settlement shall violate the provisions of section 18.

Section 19 is for the purpose of protecting a bona fide claimant who had not made a discovery on or before the passage of the act. It authorizes the granting of prospecting permits to claimants "upon the same terms and conditions and limitations as to acreage as other permits provided for in this act." It further provides, "where any such person has heretofore made such discovery, he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof," clearly indicating that the lease must be granted under section 18 if the facts are such as to bring it within the provisions of that section; and if the claimant already had the maximum under section 18, then of course no further lease could be granted. In this connection it is important to note the provisions of section 18: "That no claimant acquiring any interest in such lands since September 1, 1919, from a claimant on or since said date claiming or holding more than the maximum allowed claimant under this section shall secure a lease thereon or any interest therein, but the inhibition of this proviso shall not apply to an exchange of any interest in such lands made prior to the 1st day of January, 1920, which did not increase or reduce the area or acreage held or claimed in excess of said maximum by either party to the exchange." It will be seen that anyone who claimed an area in excess of 3,200 acres should not receive any benefit from the excess, either by obtaining a lease thereon or by the sale thereof, the idea being that a lease or leases on as much as 3,200 acres would be ample relief to any claimant. When the maximum is granted under section 18, surely an accitional acreage is not permissible under section 18a or 19.

Let us next consider who these applicants are and for what they are asking.

The applicants are "the allied and associated powers." They are closely related by contract, by stock ownership, and by corporate officials and directorates.

By the time oil was being produced in any considerable quantities the Salt Creek field in one way or another had passed largely into the hands of the Midwest Oil Co., the Reed companies and the "Franco" companies (commonly so called because they were organized and controlled by citizens of France, Belgium, and Holland). These companies, for the purpose of combining their claims and interests into one operating company, early in 1914 joined in organizing the Midwest Refining Co., which in the beginning was made the biggest and most powerful of all the concerns interested in the field. It was made the overlord of the domain by contracts between it and its creators, which in substance gave it the exclusive right for a period of 20 years, from January 1, 1914, to possess and mine for oil the lands claimed by these companies respectively, and to possess and operate all pipe lines, refineries, wells, tanks, machinery, and equipment already installed for the extraction, storage, transportation, and refining of oil.

The Midwest Refining Co. agreed in substance to extract the oil from said lands, transport it to the refineries, refine it, sell the refined products, and to pay said companies one-half of the net proceeds of the refined products of the oil extracted from the lands claimed by them, respectively. These contracts are in reality leases. The result, if not one of the chief purposes of the organization of the Midwest Refining Co., was to secure a complete monopoly of the entire product of the field and thereby enable it as the creature and agent of the combining claimants to purchase the crude oil produced from the few remaining tracts of the field at the cheapest possible price. The lands of the field not claimed by said combining companies were in the hands of various small operators, who, in order to dispose of the oil they produced, were forced to enter into long-term contracts to sell such oil to the Midwest Refining Co. at a price arbitrarily fixed by it. Consequently, no lease to any part of this field can be granted that will not inure to the benefit of the Midwest Refining Co. In fact, a lease to any of the applicants above mentioned is indirectly a lease to the Midwest Refining Co.

ANALYSIS STOCK OWNERSHIP

An analysis of stock ownership will throw considerable light on the respective interests of the Midwest Refining Co. and the applicants.

(a) The Mountain Producers Association owns 52 per cent of the stock of the Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation, an applicant for 5,963 acres. The Midwest Refining Co., by owning 32 per cent of the Mountain Producers Association, is interested in these applications to the extent of 992 acres.

(b) The Salt Creek Producers Association owns 60 per cent, possibly 76 per cent, of the stock of the Midwest Oil Co., applicant for 1,970 acres. The Midwest Refining Co., by owning 32 per cent of the stock of the Salt Creek Producers Association, has an interest in these lands equal to 416 acres.

(c) The Wyoming Oil Fields Co. owns all the stock of the Central Wyoming Oil & Development Co., an applicant for 920 acres. The Salt Creek Producers Association owns all of the stock of the Wyoming Oil Fields Co., and the Midwest Refining Co., by owning 32 per cent of the stock of the Salt Creek Producers Association, has an interest in these applications equal to 294 acres.

(d) The Petroleum Maatschappij Salt Creek applied for a lease to 160 acres for the reason that its name had been used in a patent application. It long ago conveyed to the Wyoming Oil Fields Co., whose stock is all owned by the Salt Creek Producers Association; but the Midwest Refining Co., by owning 32 per cent of the stock of the Salt Creek Producers Association, is interested to the extent of 31 acres.

(e) The Salt Creek Consolidated Oil Co. has applied for 2,347 acres, but 50 per cent of its stock is owned by the Wyoming Oil Fields Co., Wyoming Associated Oil Co., and the Midwest Oil Co. The Salt Creek Producers Association owns the Wyoming Oil Fields Co. and 52 per cent of the Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation. The Midwest Refining Co. owns 32 per cent of the Salt Creek Producers Association and the Mountain Producers Association, and is therefore interested in these applications to the extent of 273 acres.

(f) E. J. Sullivan, "trustee," has applied for leases for 560 acres, not disclosing for whom he is acting; by written agreement (not of record), the Salt Creek Consolidated Oil Co. and the E. T. Williams Oil Co. are each to have one-half of the lands if the leases are granted. As stated under (e), 50 per cent of the Salt Creek Consolidated Oil Co. is owned by the Wyoming Oil Fields Co., the Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation, and the Midwest Oil Co., and that the Salt Creek Producers Association owns 66 per cent of the Midwest Oil Co. The Mountain Producers Association owns 52 per cent of the Wyoming Associated Oil Corporation and the Midwest Refining Co. owns 32 per cent of both the Salt Creek Producers Association and the Mountain Producers Association, and therefore has an interest of 32 acres.

(g) The Mountain & Gulf Oil Co. has applied for 960 acres, section 6, township 39 north, range 78 west, and the north half of section 11, township 40 north, range 79 west. The New Bradford Oil Co. (predecessor of the Salt Creek Consolidated Oil Co.) and the Northwestern Oil Co. at one time had an interest in section 6, but we have not the evidence to give the present ownership of this section. The north half of section 11 was leased by the Parkman Oil Co. to B. D. Townsend, one-tenth of the oil being reserved to the Parkman Oil Co. Townsend assigned to the National Petroleum Co., who assigned to the Mountain & Gulf Oil Co., reserving 40 per cent of the net profits. The National Petroleum Co. deeded its interests to the Salt Creek Producers Association. Apparently, then, 10 per cent is owned by the Parkman Oil Co., 36 per cent by the Salt Creek Producers Association, and 54 per cent by the Mountain & Gulf Oil Co. The Midwest Oil Co. owns 95 per cent of the Parkman Oil Co. and the Salt Creek Producers Association owns 66 per cent of the Midwest Oil Co. The Midwest Refining Co. owns 32 per cent of the Salt Creek Producers Association, and therefore has an interest equal to 43 acres.

(h) The New York Oil Co. and the Midwest Oil Co. have applied for 160 acres—the southwest half of section 13, township 39 north, range 79 west. We do not know the facts relative to the interests involved, but have evidence that the New York Oil Co. is now controlled by the Midwest interests.

(i) The New York Oil Co. and the Northwestern Oil Co. are applicants for 480 acres—the southwest half of section 34 and the south half of section 1. The New York Oil Co. has a royalty interest of one-eighth in the southwest quarter of section 34, the balance going to the Northwestern Oil Co., which is owned by the Boston-Wyoming Oil Co., and 41 per cent of the latter is owned by the Midwest Oil Co., which would give it 35⅞ per cent interest in this 160 acres. The New York Oil Co. has a 23¼ per cent interest in the south half of section 1. The Midwest Oil Co. has a 10¾ per cent interest, plus the 41 per cent of the interest of the Boston-Wyoming, which makes its total interest in the south half of section 1, 28¾ per cent, or 149.3 acres. The Salt Creek Producers Association, owning 66 per cent of the Midwest Oil Co. would have an interest equal to 98 acres and the Midwest Refining Co., owning 32 per cent of the Salt Creek Producers Association, would have 31 acres.

(j) The National Petroleum Co. has applied for 960 acres formerly claimed by the Parkman Oil Co., who leased to B. D. Townsend, who assigned to the National Petroleum Co. This lease was assigned by the National Petroleum Co. to T. A. Dines, a vice president of the Midwest Refining Co., and we assume that any interest acquired by him went direct to the Midwest Refining Co. The National Petroleum Co. retained a 40 per cent interest. Therefore 10 per cent goes to the Parkman Oil Co., 36 per cent to the National Petroleum Co., and 54 per cent to T. A. Dines. The Midwest Oil Co., owning 95 per cent of the Parkman Oil Co., the Salt Creek Producers' Association, owning 66 per cent of the Midwest Oil Co., and the Midwest Refining Co., owning 32 per cent of the Salt Creek Producers' Association, plus the Dines' share, would have an interest equal to 538 acres.

(k) The Federal Oil & Development Co. has applied for 320 acres, which was leased by it to B. D. Townsend, reserving a royalty of 15 per cent. This lease was assigned by Townsend to the National Petroleum Co., who assigned the northeast one-half of section 13 to T. A. Dines, and the southeast one-fourth of section 13 to the Mountain & Gulf Oil Co., reserving in each instance a royalty of 40 per cent of the net profits. The National Petroleum Co. and Dines then conveyed to the Salt Creek Producers' Association for stock in the latter.

Then the Federal Oil & Development Co. holds an interest of 15 per cent, the Mountain & Gulf Oil Co. 25½ per cent, and the Salt Creek Producers' Association 59½ per cent, the interest of the latter being 190 acres, of which the Midwest Refining Co. is credited with 32 per cent, or 61 acres.

(1) The Parkman Oil Co. has applied for 160 acres, which it leased October 1, 1915, to B. D. Townsend, reserving a 10 per cent royalty; Townsend assigning to the National Petroleum Co., and it assigned to T. A. Dines, reserving 40 per cent of the net profits. The National Petroleum Co. and Dines then conveyed to the Salt Creek Producers' Association. The Midwest Oil Co. owns 95 per cent of the Parkman Oil Co.; the Salt Creek Producers owning 66 per cent of the Midwest Oil Co. and all the interest of the National Petroleum Co. and Dines, has an interest of 154 acres, of which 32 per cent, or 49 acres, is credited to the Midwest Refining Co.

By using the above-mentioned percentages of stock ownership, the acreage applied for by the respective claimants, and the total acreage applied for, we compile the following:

CONCLUSION

The paramount reason urged by applicants in support of their claims is that they innocently and in good faith have expended vast sums in the development of the field, but the true facts render this contention impotent, because almost all the capital used, not only for development but also to purchase claims, was the money received for the oil taken by these trespassers from the public lands. So resourceful were these promoters and capitalists that at no time did they risk any considerable part of their own means. They let the property pay for itself and for its development. It will be remembered that the Fitzhugh claims were secured by an agreement to purchase the oil to be produced, at 33 cents per barrel, only $10,000 in this case being advanced; and that the Henshaw claims were purchased for $325,000, but this consideration was not paid till it was derived from the oil. Any other capital that was used very largely came from France and Holland. The crowd asking such valuable concessions at the hands of the Government already have become immensely wealthy at its expense. They have no equities worthy of consideration. It is true that stocks have been sold to the public, but surely the Government should not sacrifice the public property, a greatly needed natural resource, to make these oil stocks good.

The Midwest Refining Co. has an absolute monopoly of the Salt Creek field, and in one way or another controls every one of the above-named applicants. It is interested in every acre sought by them, and a lease to any one of them will inure to its benefit. Its claims are based on titles that are thoroughly saturated with fraud, and from the beginning its promoters, officers, and directors unquestionably have had full knowledge of the fraud. It not only is not acting honestly and in good faith, but it now is compounding fraud by seeking to secure leases on a greater acreage than the maximum allowed by law. For several years it maintained a large force of paid lobbyists, lawyers, and agents at the Capitol to secure the passage of the act with the relief provisions included, and, evidently, it will continue so to do till its subsidiaries have secured leases thereunder. They are not "in the court with clean hands."

When the leasing bill was before Congress it was emphatically asserted and maintained that the Standard Oil Co. had no interest whatever in the Midwest Refining Co. or the applicants, and that it was not concerned with the relief provisions, but now it is conceded that the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana absolutely controls the Midwest Refining Co. Only a little while ago the Government was courageously engaged in "dissolving" the Standard Oil Co., but now it is requested to dispense relief to this object of charity and to bestow upon it leases to the most valuable known oil acreage in the world—public property of the value of at least $1,000,000,000. Is this the character of claimant Congress intended to relieve?

The relief provisions extend rights and privileges to claimants which they did not have under the preexisting law and enable them to take advantage of claims they could not establish or defend in the courts; therefore, the law very justly confines the relief to honest claimants and limits them to leases on a maximum of 3,200 acres.

This matter demands the most careful consideration, and, under the circumstances, leases should not be granted on an ex parte showing, but a hearing before the register and receiver of the local land office in Wyoming should be ordered, so that all the evidence pro et con may be taken, a complete record made, presented, and fully considered before a final action is taken.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT C. BELL,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Why are we in Nicaragua?" written by the distinguished junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], published in Volume II, No. 5, the May, 1928, issue of the periodical known as Plain Talk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

WHY ARE WE IN NICARAGUA?

By Senator BURTON K. WHEELER

(Was the Pan American conference at Habana a sincere effort to cultivate a golden rule among the countries of the Americas, or was it a smoke screen to make Wall Street exploitation look well? Why have our marines killed 600 Nicaraguan "bandits," and do bandits run in such large numbers anywhere? Is our State Department in Washington or down-town New York? Senator WHEELER asks these questions—and answers them.)

When President Coolidge recently opened the Sixth Pan American Conference at Habana he solemnly declared that in its relations with neighboring Latin-American Republics the United States was actuated only by the principles of the golden rule. At every opportunity since Charles E. Hughes and other "official spokesmen" have stressed the beneficent effects of our former "occupations" of other Caribbean Republics, reiterated that our "intervention" in Nicaragua was a step reluctantly taken only after repeated requests from both political factions of Nicaragua, and promised that we would withdraw as soon as the people of that unhappy Republic prove they can conduct their own affairs without endangering "American lives and American property."

As an American citizen, I would be proud and happy to indorse these protestations if I could accept them at their face value. Certainly, no fault can be found with the moral accents of the language employed by President Coolidge and Mr. Hughes. That is quite perfect. But many a beautiful theory is shipwrecked on the sharp shores of fact, and I must confess that I, for one, can not reconcile our recent behavior in Nicaragua with the golden rule of the gentle Nazarene, who laid down the precept, "Do unto others as ye would have others do unto you."

On the very day that President Coolidge told Latin-American delegates that our only motive was their welfare, American bombing planes were showering death and destruction over defenseless Nicaraguan villages and American marines, in overwhelming force, were hunting down the puny forces of General Sandino. For more than a year Nicaraguan ports have been blocked by United States battleships and many widely scattered sections of Nicaragua have been invaded by United States marines on battle bent. Officers of the Marine Corps recently gave out a statement that more than 600 Nicaraguans had been slain by our armed forces. Every few days the press contains brief accounts of fresh detachments of marines embarking, and giant bombing planes—following the route taken by Lindbergh in his "good-will flight"—take off for Nicaragua on their errand of destruction. President Coolidge may talk about the golden rule and Mr. Hughes may wax eloquent over "international amity," but for all practical purposes we are—and have been for more than a year—waging war on no small scale against a substantial proportion of the people of Nicaragua.

Why are armed forces of the United States carrying on an undeclared war against Nicaragua? This is a problem that is puzzling many Members of Congress—which, under the Constitution, has the sole right to declare war—and a large and growing number of citizens of the United States are asking the same question and searching in vain for a satisfactory explanation.

It was generally supposed that President Coolidge would defend, or at least deign to explain his "private war" against Nicaragua in his address at the opening of the Pan American conference. He dealt only in platitudinous generalities, and since then Mr. Hughes has exercised all his diplomatic talents to keep the conference from so much as verging upon the topic of intervention. Pressure—polite, but unmistakable pressure—has been exerted to prevent other South and Central American delegates from speaking out of turn. The whole conference has been a make-believe, a sham, revolving around certain inconsequential points, while underneath a great and growing resentment simmers among the press and people of the nations to our south over our bullying policy of "dollar diplomacy."

Certainly, "dollar diplomacy" is the only phrase which accurately describes our almost uninterrupted record of interference with the internal affairs of Nicaragua for the past 18 years, and when the whole sordid story of our relations with Nicaragua is written every American who holds true to our traditions will hang his head in shame. From the beginning—back in 1909—our interference in Nicaragua has been in behalf of certain Wall Street banking interests who sought profitable investments at unfair terms.

Brown Bros., J. & W. Seligman & Co., and more recently the Guaranty Trust Co., all of New York, are the flies in the Nicaraguan ointment. Other American concession seekers and holders—notably, the La Luz & Los Angeles Mining Co.—have played a part, but the State Department policy has been built around the concessions of Nicaragua to Brown Bros., J. & W. Seligman Co., and the Guaranty Trust Co.

For the past 14 years these bankers, or their subsidiaries, have owned and controlled the majority stock of the Nicaraguan National Bank and the Nicaraguan National Railroad—two immensely profitable public utilities—which were reorganized as American corporations under the laws of the States of Maine and Connecticut and granted blanket concessions which gave them control of nearly every basic phase of the economic life of the Nicaraguan people. These are the two most remarkable concessions that have ever been granted in the history of any country, I think—with the possible exception of the case of Haiti, where extraordinary grants were made to the National City Bank folk.

What a rank injustice that the Nicaraguan National Bank and National Railroad, both institutions which were operating long before our bankers appeared on the scene, should be reincorporated in this country and have to pay State and local taxes and an income tax to the United States Government! And why should the national revenue of Nicaragua be kept on deposit in New York banks, often not drawing interest, while the Nicaraguan Government is compelled to pay as high as 9 per cent of that amount to forced loans?

An American collects the customs of Nicaragua at a salary of $10,000 a year. Another $10,000-a-year American is "high commissioner." Another $10,000-a-year American is inspector general of internal revenue. Two Americans, one drawing $12,000 and the other $10,000 a year, control the Nicaraguan Mixed Claims Commission. A retired United States Marine officer is commander in chief of the Nicaraguan National Guard and all of its 92 officers are citizens of the United States. Americans manage the national bank and the national railroad. Americans supervise the Nicaraguan elections and high-priced "sanitary experts," "fiscal advisors," and attorneys have cost the Nicaraguan people countless thousands of dollars in the last 17 years while they have been denied the fundamental human right of conducting their own affairs.

Wholesale graft has characterized the Wall Street-State Department control of Nicaragua. The operating expenses of the Nicaraguan railroad were increased from $30,000 to $300,000 per year, and road-bed and rolling stock were allowed to deteriorate. Freight rates were raised 60 per cent and passenger rates 100 per cent. Customs duties, both import and export, were increased on an average of 100 per cent and many new taxes imposed.

Señor José Castellon, a Nicaraguan economist, estimates that the banker exploitation of Nicaragua has cost its people $33,000,000 in the last 15 years—and it must be remembered that Nicaragua is hardly half the area of many of our Western States and has a population of only 600,000. Our bankers originally intervened in Nicaragua on the plea they would fund the Nicaraguan debt and speedily discharge it if allowed to collect the customs receipts. Under the rule of the bankers the Nicaraguan debt has actually increased. Certain American banking firms and concession holders are making very fat profits in Nicaragua, but conditions among native business men are intolerable and many Nicaraguans have been compelled to leave their country to find work—and possibly to escape the tyranny of our Wall Street-State Department-Marine Corps rule.

The policy carried on by successive Secretaries of State in the past 17 years has literally gutted the sovereignty of Nicaragua. The new Larned History says that the Knox-Castrilla treaty—which was twice rejected by the Senate of the United States, although its terms were substantially enforced and constitute the policy of Secretary Kellogg and President Coolidge at this moment, was to reduce Nicaragua to an American protectorate. Every political, every economic phase of the life of its people is under the merciless heel of the State Department and the Wall Street bankers. Every strategic post, fiscal and military, is in the hands of State Department appointees. Nicaragua is at this moment in the bitterest bondage in which any free people ever found themselves.

Briefly, of course, I will relate the history of our intervention in Nicaragua.

The beginning of Nicaragua's misfortunes dates from 1909 when the State Department, then under Philander C. Knox, not only encouraged but actually aided a revolutionary movement which overthrew President Zelaya. Zelaya was speedily suppressing the revolution until United States marines were landed to prevent him from capturing Bluefields. The State Department also withdrew its recognition. Zelaya left the country and Dr. José Madriz, a distinguished jurist who had served on the Central American Court of Justice, was chosen as his successor by the Nicaraguan Congress.

General Estrada, who had started the revolt against Zelaya, continued fighting against Madriz. United States marines remained in Nicaragua, establishing "neutral zones," which handicapped the Nicaraguan government troops, and on September 10, 1910, Estrada captured the capital, proclaimed himself provisional president and asked official recognition from the United States. Before this was granted, Thomas Dawson, minister at Panama, was sent to Nicaragua to take charge of the situation. Dawson insisted, according to sworn testimony of Thomas P. Moffat, then American consul at Managua, that Adolfa Diaz be named as vice president. Diaz was then a clerk in the La Luz & Los Angeles Mining Co. Estrada had to agree to be recognized. They then were "elected" president and vice president by a hand-picked assembly and recognized by President Taft.

Estrada raised some objection to sanctioning the loans desired by the New York bankers. Two Nicaraguan assemblies had rejected the contracts and public opinion overwhelmingly opposed the concessions. A revolution headed by Mena, an Indian general, promptly broke out against Estrada, and according to sworn testimony Elliott C. Northcott, American minister at Nicaragua, told Estrada he would have to leave the country and surrender the presidency. Estrada did leave and thus Diaz succeeded to the presidency. He was promptly recognized and when the whole country sprang to arms against him 3,000 American marines were landed and put down the uprising with a heavy loss of life.

Then, while Nicaragua was still under control of American marines, with the constitutional rights of free speech and free press suspended, with a majority of the electorate disfranchised by executive decree, while marine officers in uniform openly campaigned for Diaz, a farcical "election" was held to sanction the accomplished facts and Diaz was declared the unanimous choice for president.

During the two-year period that witnessed the rapid changes chronicled above, executive degrees were written or amended by the State Department and United States diplomatic agents in Nicaragua issued instructions to Nicaraguan army officers, selected the candidates put forward at farcical elections, and vetoed articles in the proposed Nicaraguan constitution then being drawn by a constitutional assembly.

Diaz remained in office from 1912 until 1916—protected by United States marines who constantly remained at Managua—and it was during the régime of this $1,200-a-year clerk in Secretary of State Knox's corporation that the Nicaraguan National Bank and National Railroad were surrendered to the New York bankers. Diaz and his followers also looted the public treasury on an extensive scale, paying themselves several million dollars for alleged "revolutionary claims."

Diaz was followed by Emiliano Chamorro, who also was "elected unanimously" after B. L. Jefferson, American minister, called in all opposing candidates and bluntly informed them that no one would be recognized by the United States who would not pledge himself to the rule of the bankers. Unwilling to make such dishonorable pledges, the other candidates withdrew and Chamorro had the field to himself. American marines remained in Nicaragua and marine officers testified before the Senate that at least three-quarters of the Nicaraguan people opposed Chamorro. Col. Smedley Butler went so far as to state that Chamorro could not remain in the country 24 hours without the support of American marines.

In 1920 Gen. Emiliano Chamorro was succeeded by his uncle, Diego M. Chamorro. This election, too, was vitiated by fraud. Chamorro supporters controlled the polls and supervised the counting of the ballots. Mr. Miller, a "special observer" sent by the United States State Department, frankly admitted that "fraud undoubtedly did take place in the registration and counting of votes" and added that "a fair election could not have been held under the existing election laws."

President Diego Chamorro died unexpectedly in 1923 and was succeeded by Vice President Martinez. At this time, largely because its resources were being drained by graft, extravagance, and systematic exploitation, the economic situation in Nicaragua had become acute. Many business houses failed, the small native farmers were heavily mortgaged, and unemployment was general. President Martinez called a conference of well-known men from all walks of life, and the consensus of opinion was that the Nicaraguan Government should try to regain control of the national bank and national railroad.

With the consent of the State Department, President Martinez paid $1,750,000 for 51 per cent of the stock of the Nicaraguan National Railroad and $300,000 for 51 per cent of the Nicaraguan National Bank. The price for both utilities was virtually double what the Nicaraguan Government had received in 1913. Martinez retained three Americans on the board of directors of the bank and the railroad and replaced the others by native Nicaraguans residing in the United States. The J. G. White Management Corporation was allowed to continue to operate the railroad. It was impossible at that time to dissolve the American corporations and to transact all the bank and railroad business in Nicaragua, as the Nicaraguan Congress had not yet passed the necessary legislation.

The State Department frowned upon the candidacy of Martinez for reelection, although Diaz had succeeded himself, so a coalition of Conservatives and Liberals nominated Solerzano for President and Doctor Sacasa for Vice President. They were pledged to carry out the program instituted by Martinez and completely nationalize the bank and railroad. Emiliano Chamorro, former President, represented the Wall Street group and frankly declared that if elected he would resell the bank and railroad to the bankers. Therefore the election presented clear-cut issues and, as H. A. Dodd, American supervisor, reported it, "the fairest election held in Nicaragua for 15 years," it may fairly be presumed to have reflected the desires of the Nicaraguan people.

Solerzano and Sacasa received approximately 48,000 votes and Chamorro received approximately 28,000 votes. It was the first election since 1909 in which the people of Nicaragua had been allowed to express their opinion at the polls with the slightest assurance that their votes would be counted honestly.

United States marines had been continuously in Nicaragua ever since 1909, in spite of protests by United States Congressmen and the Nicaraguan people, but it was not until Solerzano and Sacasa were elected that the State Department served notice that the marines would be withdrawn on January 1, 1925, the date the new régime was to take office. There is little doubt that the withdrawal of the marines was designed to throw a cloud of disfavor over the Solerzano-Sacasa régime and, furthermore, under the circumstances, with every American official in Nicaragua actively campaigning for the return of the bank and the railroad, it could only be construed as an invitation for a revolution. In fact, so thoroughly were the Nicaraguans themselves convinced of this that President Solerzano petitioned the State Department to keep the marines in Nicaragua. They were left seven months at his request, and then suddenly withdrawn in August, 1925.

Immediately after the inauguration of Solerzano and Sacasa the New York bankers tried to force a new loan upon the Nicaraguan Government, with the usual security of a mortgage upon the national bank and railroad. This failed. Offers were then made to buy the bank outright. Great pressure was brought to bear upon President Solerzano. Predictions were made that if he did not sell the bank the Nicaraguan currency would depreciate and economic ruin follow. Practically all of the high-salaried Americans occupying the key positions in Nicaragua helped this propaganda.

Solerzano, though wavering at first, finally decided to carry out his campaign pledges. He definitely refused to sell the bank and cabled his fiscal agent in New York to cancel the contract which the J. G. White Corporation had to manage the railroad. This was on October 3, 1925, and there is good ground for believing that when President Solerzano made this definite move to dispense with the services of the J. G. White Management Corporation the financial group in New York realized at last the Government of Nicaragua was in the hands of Nicaraguans who meant to put an end to the exploitation of their country, and this group of American financiers then and there decided to put an end to the Solerzano-Sacasa régime.

On October 23, General Chamorro, who was defeated for the Presidency less than a year before by an overwhelming vote, seized the fortress of Managua, the capital, imprisoned President Solerzano, and finally forced him to resign under duress; chased Vice President Sacasa out of the country; jailed members of the supreme court and hundreds of others; expelled members of Congress, and declared his own friends seated in their stead.

The State Department did not recognize Chamorro. He was held to have violated the five-power pact signed in Washington in 1923 by the Central American Republics, which stipulated that no President of any Central American Republic who obtained power by a revolution or coup d'état should be recognized by other Central American Republics. The United States did not sign the five-power pact, but President Coolidge admitted that this Government had a moral obligation to apply its principles in order to encourage Central American States to prevent revolution, and in his speech before Congress on January 10, 1927, the President said this was the reason why Chamorro was not recognized.

President Coolidge omitted to state that Adolfo Diaz, whom he promptly recognized when Chamorro stepped down, also had violated the five-power pact, and we were under the same moral obligation not to recognize his wholly illegal usurpation. It is a notorious fact in Nicaragua that Diaz and Chamorro were confederates in the coup d'état which overthrew Solerzano and Sacasa. The fact has never been denied or even questioned.

In a cablegram from San Jose, Costa Rica, December 23, 1926, by the Associated Press and published in La Prensa, the Spanish daily in New York City, General Chamorro, who was passing through the city to represent the Diaz government as special emissary to Europe, frankly admitted as much. The dispatch quotes him as follows:

"Adolfo Diaz aided me in the first coup against the constituted government of President Solerzano, and it is surprising that he was recognized by the United States while they denied me such recognition."

The rump Congress which "elected" Diaz, after notice had been served on Chamorro that he would not be recognized, was surrounded by troops under Chamorro, who was commander in chief of the army. No delegate not personally acceptable to Chamorro was allowed to enter, and at least 18 were denied their seats. Chamorro continued to act as commander in chief of the army three weeks after Diaz was "elected," and then left as special emissary to Europe.

President Coolidge and our State Department trampled underfoot our national honor when they recognized Adolfo Diaz as President of Nicaragua. To do this they had to violate the letter and spirit of a treaty which our Government sponsored. They had to override the letter and spirit of the Nicaraguan constitution which we also sponsored. They had to lend themselves to all manner of legal trickery and political chicanery in the vain hope of making the worse appear the better in the eyes of the people of Nicaragua, who justly despise this pet puppet of our State Department. And when the Nicaraguan people refused to accept this tool, Diaz, who already had exploited them for six years backed by the might of the American marines, President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg began rushing warships, marines, and bombing planes to the little country to force their brutal policy.

The State Department has been using Diaz off and on ever since it assisted in fomenting the 1909 revolution which deposed Zelaya. He is one of its two handy men. The other is Emiliano Chamorro. Diaz has finally won out because he is the more pliant tool. Neither Diaz nor Chamorro has any sense of public honor. They regard treason as a perfectly legitimate get-rich-quick game. They see no reason whatever why, if by use of force and foreign money, they get into position to sell out their country they should not do so. It would be unfair to Judas Iscariot or Benedict Arnold to compare these men with them. For neither Judas nor Benedict was a glutton for treason. They only played the rôle of traitor once and one of the two, at least, quickly repented of his act. Neither was a "hard-boiled" traitor.

There is no secret about the character of these two men. It is common knowledge throughout Central and South America. The truth as to the total lack of character of either Diaz or Chamorro has been blazoned abroad. It is impossible, without reflecting upon the intelligence of President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg, to suppose that either of them labors under any delusion as to the moral unfitness of Diaz for the office into which he was thrust and in which the armed support alone of the United States keeps him. Yet President Coolidge told the delegates to the Pan American Conference that in its relations with Latin-American Republics the United States is actuated only by the principles of the Golden Rule. Possibly he meant the golden rule of the Wall Street bankers. In that event his words were literally true.

Three days after Diaz was chosen by the rump congress under Chamorro's control he was recognized by the United States and five days later Robert F. Loree, president of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York—also president of the National Bank of Nicaragua—loaned Diaz $300,000, the entire capital stock of the Nicaraguan National Bank, and as security Diaz pledged 51 per cent of the stock of the Nicaraguan Railroad. The terms of the loan provided that unless repaid within 15 months the collateral was to be sold at public auction in New York City, where the stock of the railroad has no quoted value on any exchange.

United States marines, who had been suddenly withdrawn two months before Chamorro's coup d'état, did not interfere while the legally elected president of Nicaragua was imprisoned and the legally elected vice president compelled to flee the country. But soon after Diaz was illegally named president by the rump congress our marines were rushed back to Nicaragua and, by declaring "neutral zones" whenever the liberals had won or were about to win a victory, prevented the Sacasa forces from quickly driving out the usurper. An embargo was placed upon shipments of arms intended for the liberals, although Diaz actually was advanced credits by the United States Government for the purpose of buying munitions; medical supplies intended for wounded Liberal soldiers were held up, and large quantities of munitions were taken from the Liberals and destroyed. Despite these handicaps the Liberals continued to make headway.

Then, after Congress adjourned last March, President Coolidge sent Henry L. Stimson to Nicaragua as his "personal representative." Stimson called the Liberal leaders into conference and informed them that unless they laid down their arms the whole force of the marines would be employed to disarm them. On the other hand, if the arms were surrendered, the Liberals, I am informed, were promised that $10 would be paid in gold for each rifle.

The Nicaraguans realized, of course, that they could not cope with the marines and accepted the offer. But Diaz had no money to pay for the surrendered rifles, whereupon the State Department induced the Guaranty Trust Co. to lend $1,000,000 to the Diaz régime. The terms of this loan required Nicaragua to mortgage the national bank—the railroad already was back under the control of the Wall Street bankers—to pledge the entire receipts of the new export tax on coffee and the new import duties on tobacco and liquor; to give the Guaranty Trust Co. a five-year option on all new loans; and to transfer the deposits and revenues of the national bank and railroad to the keeping of the New York bankers. Also provided for was the appointment of another high-salaried American to act as "inspector general of internal revenue," and it was directed that the money loaned be distributed by an American-controlled commission.

This new loan will have expired by the time this article sees print, but it is perfectly safe to predict that the Diaz régime will default on payment of both debts, in which event the Nicaraguan National Bank and the Nicaraguan National Railroad will again be completely under the control of Wall Street bankers and the greater portion of the revenue from Nicaragua's only two profit-paying public utilities will be diverted to the enrichment of private investors in the United States. It is only necessary to add that the chief of the Latin-American division of our State Department at the time the Solerzano-Sacasa government was overthrown by Chamorro and Diaz was a former employee of the very Well Street bankers who controlled the Nicaraguan National Bank and Railroad. This gentleman has since resigned from the State Department and found reemployment with his banker friends.

At the present writing American bombing planes are terrorizing the tiny villages of the Nicaraguan natives and American marines in overwhelming force are relentlessly engaged in hunting down the gallant remnant of Nicaraguan Liberals who are still fighting under the leadership of General Sandino. Our press commonly refers to Sandino and his men as bandits, but I, for one, can not help thinking that they are actuated by exactly the same principles of liberty and free government for which our forefathers fought in 1776. Indeed, it is not too much to state that one would seek in vain in the history of our struggle for independence for a parallel to the brazen tyranny of the State Department in its dealings with the people of Nicaragua. George III never dared to perpetrate upon the American Colonies such fiscal and political iniquities—to say nothing of ruthless force—as our State Department has not hesitated to inflict upon the defenseless people of Nicaragua.

The chief responsibility for this crime against liberty and republicanism and good morals must rest upon the executive department of our Government, into whose hands in an especial sense the good repute of our country is committed. But no American citizen now living who knows the facts and remains silent while this gross injustice is being done can escape some measure of the responsibility. It seems to me that President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg have been recreant to the fundamental principles of free government to which this Nation was dedicated at its birth.

I dare to hope that the conscience of America will be fully aroused before it is too late to repair the wrong we are doing. Once the national conscience is aroused—the same divine power that brought to the ground the slave oligarchy when it seemed most firmly entrenched—the doom of dollar diplomacy such as has disgraced us in Nicaragua will be sealed. From that moment we will again begin to cherish a decent respect for the opinion of mankind. We will by our own initiative move away from this policy of aggrandizement in Latin America and return to the true traditions of Americanism as voiced by Washington, Jefferson, Monroe, and Lincoln.

I venture to look in another direction for help against the moral aberration of dollar diplomacy. This is to the hard common sense of legitimate American business men. I say legitimate business men because there is a world of difference between the legitimate business which goes into the markets of the world with clean hands, asking no governmental favors but only a fair field, and the wholly illegitimate business that looks to our State Department for unfair concessions and then asks for battleships and marines to protect its ill-gotten gains.

I trust the common sense of legitimate American business men will realize before it is too late the utter folly of our present policy toward Latin America. Our trade with Europe is percentually on the decline and Central and South America offer by far the most inviting fields for future disposal of our surplus products of farm and factory. We can not make the most of this market if a little clique of international bankers, seeking extortionate profits, poison the peoples of South America against us by persuading the State Department to act as it has acted in Nicaragua. The Coolidge-Kellogg policy already has raised a storm of denunciation throughout Latin America, and if persisted in will do much to sweep away the friendly foundations of trade which were painstakingly laid by legitimate American business men.

Even if I should be disappointed in my hope that the American conscience will be aroused from its lethargy in time to save the day for American honor, and even if the hard common sense of American business men engaged in legitimate commerce does not assert itself to halt a policy so harmful to our trade with Latin America, I am still positive that the end of dollar diplomacy is near.

At this age, when the voice of nationalism is being lifted higher and higher throughout the world than ever before, it is foolish to suppose that we can impose upon the allied nations of South and Central America a colonial system of peon states. Logically, our present policy leads straight in that direction, but it is a path that ends at the brink of a precipice. Let us not, unless we want to forfeit our own self-respect, and the friendship of the whole world, substitute for the motto that "Righteousness exalteth a nation" any maxim of junkerism that means "The world be damned."

This world does not intend to be damned by any imperial individual of any imperial nation. That kind of junkerism, however, camouflaged by hypocritical pretenses to suit the times, will not win us either honor or permanent prosperity. It will only serve to bring us to dishonor, and, in the end, when we have been morally isolated, to certain merited destruction. History is strewn with the wreckage of great empires which sought to subjugate smaller states. Imperialism inevitably leads to ruin. After all, the universe in which we live is a moral universe. In the end, right and not might, justice and not injustice, and truth instead of lies, prevail.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I move that action upon the pending bill be deferred until we are supplied with the information called for in the resolution that I submitted some time ago. In order to bring that motion within the rules, I move that action on this bill be postponed until to-morrow after the close of the morning business; and I also give notice that if that motion prevails I shall make the same motion from day to day until we can have a proper consideration of the resolution which I submitted this morning.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he is not satisfied with the information I have just given the Senate. I think it covers every point embodied in his resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. I listened attentively to the information that the Senator divulged this morning. I do not believe that it is in sufficient detail, nor do I believe that it gives the information we are seeking.

Mr. HALE. How could it be in more detail? It is in the same detail that is given to the Budget officer by the Navy Department.

Mr. BLAINE. I find no way by which we can make a comparison between the cost of maintaining this belligerent arm of the Navy and the cost of maintaining the Navy under peace conditions.

Mr. HALE. I have just shown the difference between the cost of maintaining the Marine Corps as we have been doing it without the foreign service and the cost with the foreign service.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not convinced that all the items of cost are included in the figures presented by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. The information was very clear. I do not object to the Senator getting any information he wants, so long as it does not delay the passage of the bill, which, rather than being delayed, should be expedited.

Mr. BLAINE. Moreover, there ought to be an opportunity to study this question. I want to say to the Senator from Maine that I have no disposition to delay action upon this appropriation bill, but I think there is something more important than that involved. I think the whole destiny of our Nation depends upon whether the policy of using force in peace times against friendly nations adopted by this administration is going to be the policy of America for all time to come.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I observe the Senator's anxiety for information, and his anxiety in some way to conclude these matters in Nicaragua; but I suggest to him that it would appear absurd, when under the law we are providing in the usual way the necessary appropriations for annual supplies, for instance, for the service of these men, their food and clothing, and the whole system of appropriation, that that shall be delayed from time to time to decide a question, as the Senator says, of policy. Surely the appropriation bills are in no wise expected to express a policy, other than to fulfill our duties under the law.

If the Senator wishes more information, I think he should get it through direct legislation, without undertaking indirectly to discommode thousands of men who are working for the Government under an agreement by which they are to be provided with certain commodities. Of course, if the Senator wants to have the bill passed over for a day, I assume he might get that permission without any difficulty; but if he desires to put it over from day to day I should enter an objection to that right now, because, in my judgment, we can not afford to resolve ourselves into a suspecting body for the purpose of doing that which we really are not called upon to do.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a minute to make a suggestion?

Mr. BLAINE. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator. I want to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that there are not any thousands of men depending for their living or sustenance upon whether this bill goes over a day or two, or, for that matter, a month. They have been provided for in a former bill. This bill has reference to the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1928. There will be no suffering; nobody will suffer if this bill goes over for a short time.

Mr. WARREN. When the Senator speaks of the bill going over I suppose he means to have it go over for this session.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator has that purpose he should announce it, of course.

Mr. BLAINE. My motion was to postpone the consideration of the bill——

Mr. WARREN. From day to day, until the Senator receives some information that he asks for and perhaps is not satisfied with when it is presented.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator is anticipating what my satisfaction may or may not be.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BLAINE. My information, when I obtain it, may be very satisfactory. If there is any delay in presenting that information to the Senate, it will not be at this end of the Government. It will be at the executive end of the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. What is the matter with the information the Senator received this morning?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, as I could examine it from the statement made by the Senator from Maine, I am very frank to state that I was unable to make an intelligent comparison. This question of budget making and making of statements for an appropriation is not entirely unfamiliar to me. I want to say, Mr. President, that there is no difficulty, if the desire is there, to present most any showing that those who are interested desire to present. I do not mean that the chairman of the committee had any untoward desires, but I want to say that to pass an appropriation bill involving additional increases of money in the twinkling of an eye, without the opportunity to investigate and to analyze the proposals, is not fair to the taxpayers of America.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I am going to make a suggestion. The Senator desires certain information, and he is entitled to have it; I fully realize that. His resolution will give it to him. I hope the resolution will pass with the last resolve left out, which provides that this bill shall not be disposed of until the information is furnished. I suggest to the Senator that he leave that out of his resolution, and I dare say that to-morrow, or the day after to-morrow, the information can be furnished. Then we can proceed with the bill.

There is no chance to pass this bill, under the rules of the Senate, if the Senator objects, and if the information does not come promptly the Senator will have the power to speak and delay the passage of the bill. But in the manner in which he phrases the resolution Senators will have to consent that information that is satisfactory to the Senator from Wisconsin must be furnished before they will vote on the bill. I would not be willing to be put in that attitude. It seems to me that the thing that is right and proper is to pass the Senator's resolution asking for the information. But I have never known a Senator to ask for information and couple with the request a provision as to when we may consider and dispose of a bill.

This bill can not be disposed of, can not be voted on, until the Senator's consent is obtained, under the rules of the Senate. Why does he not have his resolution passed unanimously to-day and sent to the department this evening, and I have no doubt that in a day or two the information will be furnished him?

Mr. HALE. I have just given the Senator the information he has asked for.

Mr. SWANSON. He is entitled to the information, irrespective of the chairman of a committee. I am not willing to say that this is the beginning and the end of information. I am for the passage of this resolution if the Senator will leave out that part which states that the bill is to be delayed until the information is furnished. Let the Senate determine whether it will delay it or not. It seems to me the right and just thing to do is to pass the Senator's resolution asking for this information, to which he is entitled. At 3 o'clock we are to have exercises under a special order, and this bill can not be disposed of until the Senator consents to it, under the rules of the Senate. It seems to me the right thing to do is for the Senator to leave out that part of his resolution and to get the information.

I hope the Senator will consent to that. I trust the resolution will pass with that left out.

Mr. BLAINE. I appreciate what the Senator from Virginia has said. My only purpose in placing the last provision in the resolution was to have an assurance that we would have the information before we acted upon the bill. That was the only purpose. If it is the request of the Senator that that clause be stricken out, and that the resolution pass without it, I accept his amendment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the resolution stated with that clause eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution with the clause referred to eliminated.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 198) as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to communicate to the Senate a detailed account of the expenditures incurred in the support and navigation of the several ships, war vessels, and transports, and aircraft or other implements of war, and the personnel thereof, including officers and men, and all costs, in connection with the expedition to the Republic of Nicaragua, from the 4th day of May, 1927, and an account of the expenditures incidental thereto or necessary by reason of such expedition; and that the Secretary of the Navy also report in detail to the Senate how much the expenditures would have been had such ships, war vessels, transports, and aircraft or other implements of war, and the personnel thereof, including officers and men, been in service at the respective home stations or camps; also how many vessels of every description are in service in connection with the present conditions relating to the Republic of Nicaragua.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand the design of this resolution is to secure information relative to the extra cost of what we have been doing in Nicaragua.

Mr. BLAINE. In effect; yes. The first paragraph of the resolution is intended to get a detailed statement of the entire cost of all those operations, and a detailed statement of the cost of the marines at the home stations is asked. Then it becomes a mathematical question for each one to determine as to how much this expedition is costing.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the purpose of this is to ascertain the extra cost to the Government on account of the intervention, or interference, whatever you call it, in Nicaragua.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Secretary of the Navy complies with the resolution, should it be adopted, that will be the result.

Mr. SWANSON. That is all that is desired, and I urge that that pass. I think that the Senator is entitled to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is that all that is desired? The Senator from Wisconsin has not answered that question yet.

Mr. BORAH. He said yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to suggest an amendment to the resolution. I suggested it this morning, and I have been preparing it. I want to suggest that in addition to what the Secretary is asked to report, he be asked also to report the number of American soldiers killed and wounded, the number of Nicaraguans killed and wounded, the number of women and children in Nicaragua killed and wounded, and the number of Nicaraguan homes destroyed or burned.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I made a similar request to the department, and they tell me that 21 marines have been killed since the expedition first went to Nicaragua, and 44 have been wounded. It is impossible to give the number of native Nicaraguans who have killed. The department has not that information.

Mr. NORRIS. They can tell the number of towns they have destroyed, and the number of homes that have been burned. I should think they could give an idea as to the number of Nicaraguans killed.

Mr. HALE. The Senator would not want to hold up the passage of the naval appropriation bill to get that information?

Mr. NORRIS. No. They can give it to us in 15 minutes.

Mr. BORAH. As far as the information the Senator is calling for is concerned, they can furnish that in a very short time, because they have data. It has already been given to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it will not take any length of time at all to get it.

Mr. HALE. Can they give information about the number of Nicaraguans killed?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; they can give what they believe to be a correct estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. That is as far as we can go.

Mr. EDGE. That is all they can do under any circumstances.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit, General Lejeune, the Secretary of the Navy, and Admiral Latimer, all were fully quizzed in an investigation made in regard to this matter by the Committee on Foreign Relations, a report of which has been printed. If the Senator wants it up to date and in a compact form, it can be furnished, I think, as the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has said, very quickly, and I have no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. I have read the report to which the Senator refers. Some of the information I think is very unsatisfactory, very indefinite. I have so far not heard—and they ought to be able to tell this—how many homes have been destroyed and burned. It is reported that a great many have been. I would be glad to find out that there were none. What I want to know, and what I think the Senate ought to know, is the plain, unvarnished truth, and nothing else.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the Senator's request is a reasonable one and one which can be complied with very readily; that is to say, in so far as they have any information at all they can furnish it very readily, and I am satisfied that they will be able to do so within 48 hours.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the resolution be amended. I think the Senator from Wisconsin would have no objection to the amendment I have suggested being added.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no objection.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection, Mr. President, to the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to communicate to the Senate a detailed account of the expenditures incurred in the support and navigation of the several ships, war vessels, and transports, and aircraft or other implements of war, and the personnel thereof, including officers and men, and all costs, in connection with the expedition to the Republic of Nicaragua from the 4th day of May, 1927, and an account of the expenditures incidental thereto or necessary by reason of such expedition; and that the Secretary of the Navy also report in detail to the Senate how much the expenditures would have been had such ships, war vessels, transports, and aircraft, or other implements of war, and the personnel thereof, including officers and men, been in service at the respective home stations or camps; also how many vessels of every description are in service in connection with the present conditions relating to the Republic of Nicaragua, the number of American soldiers killed or wounded, the number of Nicaraguans killed or wounded, the number of women and children in Nicaragua killed or wounded, and the number of Nicaraguan homes destroyed or burned.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may have the Senator's attention further, I think the information from the 1st of January up to date, or as nearly up to date as possible, is undoubtedly in order. In looking over the report from the Navy Department I notice that it contains a list of the casualties to noncombatants in Nicaragua and a list of casualties to combatants, and also where any planes have visited towns, or any bombs have been exploded. So I suppose we will get the information asked for.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, as long as the Senator is after information, I would suggest that he ask for some more information. We went into Nicaragua, we were told, to protect the interests of the United States against the Government of Mexico and the Government of Russia. We were told that the leaders of the revolutionists were being used as tools by the Soviet Government of Russia and the Government of Mexico.

It now transpires that there has been a change of sentiment on the part of these people. They are our friends now. They have evidently left the service of the Government of Mexico and the Government of Russia and are our friends now. Now we are there to protect the men we went down to protect ourselves against. We did not go in, in the first place, to carry on an election. That became an incident after we had disposed of the Government of Russia and the Government of Mexico.

It would be interesting to know what was done to alienate these people who are our friends now, and to get whom into office we maintain armed forces. It would be interesting to know what was done to alienate them from the service of the Government of Mexico and the Government of Russia, as they were a year ago when we went in there, we were told, and as was given as the main purpose for our going in there. As the Senator is after information, he might also ask for some information on that point.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I think the information asked by the Senator from Wisconsin is right and proper, and his resolution ought to have been passed, as amended by the Senator from Nebraska. I am not going to consent to have information furnished bringing Mexico into this matter. We have peaceful relations with Mexico, and I do not think they ought to be disturbed. I see no occasion for seeking information to get the Mexican controversy renewed, or revived, and made another disturbing factor. I am satisfied that the Senator from Minnesota, who is usually of a peaceful, splendid turn of mind and a patriotic man, does not wish to have the old Mexican matter thrashed over again. Consequently, I would object.

Mr. BORAH. I understood that the Senator from Minnesota was simply humorous.

Mr. SWANSON. If he was humorous, I can not tell when he is serious and when he is humorous. He is very able both ways. He knows how to disguise his purpose so that even a shrewd man can not perceive it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TENNESSEE EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Nashville, April 11, 1928.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Pursuant to the action of the sixty-fourth session of the Legislature of Tennessee there has been erected in Statuary Hall, Capitol of the United States, a statue of Andrew Jackson, a citizen of Tennessee and seventh President of the United States of America.

In behalf of the people of the State of Tennessee it is my pleasure and great privilege to present to the Government representing the people of the United States of America this statue of Tennessee's famous son and one of America's greatest generals and Presidents.

It would be superfluous for me to enumerate to your patriotic body of learned statesmen, familiar as you are with the history-making epoch made glorious with the name and fame of Andrew Jackson and of his life and achievements involving his record as a Congressman and Senator of the United States, major general of the United States Army, and President of the United States, and the far-reaching influence of his life and of his deeds in American history.

It is sufficient only for me to say that the State of Tennessee, realizing this, and feeling that a statue should be placed among America's immortals in her hall of fame, has had this statue erected, and hereby presents it to the great Government he did so much to create and preserve, and respectfully asks your acceptance of same.

Yours very truly,

HENRY H. HORTON, Governor.

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, we have had many great men in our country, and the names of many of them to-day are oftener upon the lips of our countrymen than is the name of Andrew Jackson, but, Mr. President, I believe there is no man whom our country has produced who deserves more from his country than Andrew Jackson.

There never was a greater or more unselfish patriot, nor one who gave at all times more unsparingly or more effectively for his country.

He was born in 1767 of poor parents who had come to America from Ireland in 1765 for the purpose of escaping the oppressions of the British. Shortly after settling in America the father died, and later the whole family was to suffer even a more dire calamity in this far-off America at the hands of the British than they could possibly have experienced had they remained in Ireland. Before the Revolutionary War was over two brothers of Andrew had been killed by the British, and his mother had died as a result of the war. Andrew fought for more than a year in the Revolutionary Army, having joined that Army at the tender age of 13 years. He was in several battles, and was thus one of the youngest soldiers who ever went to war.

He was left an orphan at 14 years of age and had no blood kin in America, and with practically no resources and but little education he was compelled to make his way at these tender years by his own unaided efforts.

To such distinction did he finally rise that the place of his birth has been the subject of heated controversy and long discussions, and many chapters of history have been written to show the exact spot where he was born. Having been born at or near the Waxhaws, on the North Carolina and South Carolina line, both of these States claim him.

But it matters not so much where he was born nor where he lived for the first few years of his life, but it was where he lived and made his home and where he became great that mostly interests us.

It was in that romantic country known as Tennessee, across the Allegheny Mountains, in the great valley of the Mississippi River—that marvelous land in that unparalleled bluegrass region and unsurpassed hunting ground of the Shawnees, the Cherokees, the Creeks, the Choctaws, and the Chickasaw Indians—that he made his home, and there he lived and died.

This new and undeveloped country gave him the arena and the greatest opportunity to be found anywhere on the continent of America to display his peculiar and remarkable talents. It was to the beautiful valleys of Tennessee and the Cumberland that this mighty man of destiny wended his way at the age of 20 to write his name imperishably upon the pages of history.

His talents and his courage were such that he was soon known in this new land as the great pioneer, and the settlers looked to him as their leader and their protector.

When the State of Tennessee was formed in 1796 Jackson was elected its first Representative in the Congress of the United States. One year later he was appointed a Senator from Tennessee.

The duties of a Congressman and a Senator were irksome to his adventurous and impetuous soul. He longed for the outdoor life and the great, free, romantic land of Tennessee, which answered the call of the wild and the adventurous in his nature, and so he resigned his seat in the Senate after two years' service and returned to Tennessee.

He was one of the few men who ever resigned from the Senate of the United States of his own accord. He was one of the few men who ever resigned from the Supreme Court of Tennessee, where he had done a great service in bringing law and order to the new and turbulent State from 1799 to 1803.

During his service as a Representative in Congress he showed himself to belong to the school of Thomas Jefferson, of whom he was a devoted follower, and such was his courage and his idea of democracy and duty to the people that, notwithstanding his love and admiration for Washington, he refused to vote for the congratulatory address on the retirement of Washington from the Presidency in 1797 because he thought it smacked too much of royalty.

Jackson covered himself with imperishable renown and glory as the commander of the Tennessee volunteers and militia in the Creek war of 1813 and 1814.

This was one of the most important and bloody wars ever waged against the Indians on this continent. Jackson commanded more than 3,000 troops in this war, and his troops suffered incredible hardships, but in six months this formidable tribe of Indians, who were aided and encouraged by the British and the Spanish in Florida, were brought to submission and their power was forever broken.

To the eternal credit and glory of Tennessee be it said she agreed to stand sponsor for the payment of this large force which was used in driving the dreaded savage from the confines of the present States of Alabama and Mississippi.

In this war Jackson had gained such renown by his indomitable perseverance, courage, determination, iron will, and fortitude in enduring hardships that he was acclaimed throughout the Nation for his great achievements. He was made a major general in the Regular Army of the United States, and after having taken Pensacola, then held by the Spaniards, he was ordered to the defense of New Orleans.

New Orleans at that time was the only city of importance in the Mississippi Valley and was threatened with a great attack by the British. It was the key to the navigation of the Mississippi River, and under no circumstances could the United States afford to lose this important point.

To give you an idea of the importance which the British attached to it, it is only necessary to say that while the British in all their operations against America in the War of 1812 had never employed all together more than 20,000 men, yet in this case an expedition had been planned to sail from the island of Jamaica consisting of 50 vessels carrying 12,000 veteran troops of Wellington and 1,000 cannon under Sir Edward Pakenham, a veteran of the Peninsula War in Spain and Portugal, who had fought under Wellington and who had conquered and driven from Spain the veteran soldiers of Napoleon. In addition there were nearly 10,000 sailors who were also to be thrown into that battle.

Jackson arrived at New Orleans on December 1 and such was the vigor of his measures that in a few days the courage and confidence of the citizens were restored.

His force consisted of some 800 regulars and other troops composed of volunteers and militia from Tennessee and Kentucky and Louisiana, amounting altogether to about 6,000 men, most of them equipped only with rifles and muskets and shotguns which they were in the habit of using at home, and many of them with no arms at all. In fact, it was as heterogeneous and undisciplined a lot of soldiers as ever went to battle.

Jackson had announced that he would attack the foe at all costs as soon as they landed on American soil. He swore "By the Eternal" that the foe should not be allowed to remain on the sacred soil of his country.

The British thought the Americans would not dare attack. Little did they know the commander who was pitted against them.

About 12 o'clock in the dead of night on the 23d of December Jackson launched a terrific attack upon the British, which took them wholly by surprise. A great victory was gained and a still greater moral advantage. The British lost 46 killed, 167 wounded, and 64 prisoners. The American loss was about half that number.

Jackson had determined to make his stand behind a small canal called the Rodriguez Canal, and he put every available hand to work deepening and widening this canal and piling the dirt and cotton bales upon one side where he could use them as a breastwork.

For four nights Jackson did not sleep but worked incessantly, using every means at hand to strengthen his defenses.

Sir Edward Pakenham arrived and took command of the British on Christmas Day.

On the morning of January 1 Pakenham opened a terrific fire and cannonade upon Jackson's position, but the British were repulsed with heavy loss.

January 8, the fateful day for the British and for the glory of America and of Jackson, opened with a heavy fog. The British attacked with General Pakenham leading his troops as if on parade.

His troops stationed on the canal, Jackson walked incessantly up and down behind his lines encouraging his troops and directing them to hold their fire until the British came so close that the men could see the whites of their eyes. The battle raged for 25 minutes. The sharpshooters of Jackson from Tennessee and Kentucky did terrible execution. The slaughter was appalling. During this short period of 25 minutes 700 British soldiers fell dead, 1,500 were wounded, and 500 were taken prisoners.

Pakenham was killed, followed by General Gibbs, who was next in command; then General Keane fell, being severely, but not fatally, wounded. When the smoke cleared away the Americans found that they had lost but 7 men killed and 13 wounded.

The British retreated in disorder and left the field of battle, and shortly thereafter left the country; and thus was won eternal glory for America and the Presidency of the United States and immortality for Andrew Jackson.

The people of our country for more than a hundred years by common consent each year on the anniversary of this battle have assembled together and celebrated the most remarkable victory ever gained on a battle field in recorded history—the Battle of New Orleans—and to honor the most extraordinary man that ever appeared on the horizon of this Republic—Gen. Andrew Jackson.

Up to the time of the Battle of New Orleans the War of 1812 was a great humiliation and disappointment to the American people, as they had won no battle of importance on land during the war, and even the Capitol at Washington had been taken by British troops and burned.

The whole Nation rejoiced over this remarkable battle as being the most glorious victory that had ever been gained by American arms and was balm to their wounds and pride.

Andrew Jackson's career as President was a stormy one, as his whole life had been.

He was President during one of the most critical and exciting times in the history of the Republic.

Elected as a Democrat, he had pitted against him during his whole presidential career that great triumvirate that has gone down in the annals of our country as three of the greatest men who ever sat in the Senate of the United States—Clay, Calhoun, and Webster. Day after day and year after year the battle between these three giants in the Senate arena and President Jackson in the Executive Mansion was waged with unremitting vigor, fury, and bitterness.

Jackson asked no quarter and gave none, and although these men have never been surpassed in oratory and statesmanship and political sagacity by any men who have lived in our country and although Jackson was called the backwoods President by many, he finally triumphed over them in every political battle in which they were engaged.

We can not speak of Jackson except in superlatives. He never did things as other men did them. He was successful in every serious undertaking of his life. It is said he fought a hundred battles, personal and otherwise, but even in his fights and duels he always came off a victor. He never was subordinate to any man. He never served an apprenticeship. He seems to have been born to command. A lawyer, planter, United States district attorney, Congressman, twice United States Senator, justice of the supreme court of his State, never an officer until he was made a major general of militia; never a leader in battle until he led an army; never in the Regular Army until made a major general; the Governor of Florida; the victor and hero of New Orleans; the victor in the Seminole War; and twice the President of the United States, and dictator of two of his successors.

Absolute master of every situation and the controller of the destinies of the Republic for 20 years, so much so that the period from 1825 to 1845 is called the Jacksonian era of the Republic.

Not a great student, but the greatest letter writer of his time; and his State papers are believed to be unsurpassed by any President who has sat in the presidential chair; the greatest Democrat of his time and of all times, Thomas Jefferson excepted.

His will was nearer law in the United States of America for 20 years than that of any other man for even one year. He has been more maligned, abused, and vilified than any man who ever sat in the presidential chair; yet, he never was finally defeated in anything in public or private life.

A man with many faults, it is true, but they were largely the result of environment and the influences and customs of his time.

The most moral and the most continent of men, the tenderest of husbands and the most loving of fathers to his adopted children. Like Washington, God did not give him children because He evidently wanted no comparisons.

He had a will that was as adamant as the rocks of his beloved Tennessee, and an honesty as great, and as scrupulous a regard for truth as any man that lived; the only man who ever rivaled Washington in the affection of all the people, and the most magnetic and popular man that ever held public office in America.

Theodore Roosevelt was the only man of the nineteenth century who ever approached him in magnetism and popularity before the American people.

He hated show and sham and centralization of power and great and overpowering wealth, privilege, and monopoly, believing them inimical to the best interests of the American people.

He believed with all his heart and soul in the rights of the States, but when the Union was threatened, and when what he called his own native State—South Carolina—threatened to go out of the Union, he showed that, while he loved the States he loved the Constitution of the United States more, and at the crucial time when the country was in a great state of excitement as to what his course would be he appeared at a banquet in this proud city of Washington and, rising in his seat and giving his toast, he spoke these memorable words:

The Federal Union—it must be preserved.

We have heard of others who have gotten great and everlasting credit for preserving the Union, and while all proper credit should be given to them, Mr. President, I feel that the speaking of these few short words at that time by Andrew Jackson and other things which he did preserved the Union then, and was the means of keeping that sentiment and that determination to preserve it in the minds of the American people until it culminated in lasting success at Appomattox more than 30 years afterwards.

Had there been another than the lion-hearted Jackson in the presidential chair, there might be another tale to tell to-day.

Mr. President, I say it without fear of successful contradiction that Andrew Jackson was the most remarkable and colorful man this country has produced.

No other President died as Jackson died.

It may be said that the power of his will was such that he even determined the day and hour of his death. When he was ready to die he drew his mantle about him, surrounded himself with his friends and loved ones, delivered them a sermon, bade them all an affectionate farewell, expressed the hope that he should meet them all in Heaven, black and white alike, and then, and not until then, did Jackson die.

Mr. President, while he belongs to the Nation, Tennessee claims Jackson. He is her patron saint. His memory is enshrined in the hearts of her people and his ashes rest in her bosom.

Near the banks of the beautiful Cumberland River, and near the capital city of Nashville, in that lovely and fertile valley, is the home he loved so well, the stately mansion which he called the Hermitage, preserved by the loving hands of the ladies of the Hermitage Association of Tennessee. Near by in the garden of his home is the shrine of Tennessee, a mecca for all patriotic Americans, and in this lovely old garden is to be found the simple monument which marks the last resting place of Andrew Jackson and his beloved wife lying by his side.

He scorned the gift of the sarcophagus of a Roman emperor and preferred a simple tomb and an unpretentious epitaph:

General Andrew Jackson—born March 15, 1767; died June 8, 1845.

The inscription on Mrs. Jackson's tomb was written by Jackson himself, and in view of some of the ungenerous things that were said of her during Jackson's lifetime and the unchivalrous and unfair criticisms that have been made I wish to quote this inscription here as an example to the men of this age of what a chivalrous and noble gentleman and great American thought of his wife in the long ago when this Republic was still young.

The inscription is as follows:

Here lie the remains of Mrs. Rachel Jackson, wife of President Jackson, who died on the 22d day of December, 1825, age 61 years. Her face was fair, her person pleasing, her temper amiable, her heart kindly. She delighted in relieving the wants of her fellow creatures and cultivated that divine pleasure by the most liberal and unpretending methods; to the poor she was a benefactor, to the rich an example, to the wretched a comforter, to the prosperous an ornament; her piety went hand in hand with her benevolence, and she thanked her Creator for permitting her to do good. A being so gentle and so virtuous that slander might wound but could not dishonor. Even death, when he bore her from the arms of her husband, could but transport her to the bosom of God.

In this day of divorces and unhappy marriages I would that all men and women could live as happily together as this great man and this pure and noble and gentle woman lived in the long ago.

Mr. President, I believe if you will study the life of Jackson from the cradle to the grave and the period in which he lived you will find it more thrilling than any novel; that you will learn to appreciate more and more what we owe to the men and women of the pioneer days.

The State of Tennessee is proud to place the statue of her distinguished son in Statuary Hall to be numbered there with the great men of our Nation and of the earth.

To the student who makes an examination of the record of his life it is apparent that few men who have figured largely in public affairs have exhibited more conspicuously the elements of true greatness. He was great in every walk of life.

As a pioneer he was foremost in building his State. As a soldier, as a citizen, and as a statesman he did inestimable service for his country.

As President of the United States, he threw down the bars and for the first time let the people have an effective share in the government of the Nation. He destroyed a sinister alliance between politics and finance that was swiftly reducing the people to economic serfdom. He shattered the nullification movement, thereby postponing for nearly 30 years the day when half a million of men had to die for the preservation of the Union.

Mr. President, let his enemies say what they will, he was a great American, who stood four square to all the world and earned his right to stand forever in America's hall of fame.

Whatever his shortcomings, he was nevertheless always the true chevalier. He was ever the hero and the idol of the people, and never did man more nobly deserve the loyalty that the common people always gave him.

If he lived to-day, he would be fighting the battles of the people as of old, and there is every reason to believe that the America of the twentieth century would hail him as rapturously and follow him as devotedly as it hailed and followed him as its leader 100 years ago.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I deem it a great privilege to have been asked to say a few words on this occasion about Andrew Jackson. No series of biographies relating to either American soldiers or statesmen would be complete that did not include him, for his name is indelibly associated with some of the most important events in both the military and civil history of the United States.

Moreover, his character is marked by such salient and vivid traits and his career by such startling and dramatic incidents, that he can justly be pronounced one of the most interesting of all the men who have won conspicuous fame in our national annals.

Some one has said that it is curious to reflect that among all the millions of human beings who have peopled the world since its creation there has, perhaps, not been another person so unique, so purely the creature of individual idiosyncrasies, as John Randolph of Roanoke; that the same thought might almost be hazarded of Andrew Jackson.

He was unquestionably subject to many shortcomings and limitations. When the poverty to which he was born, his meager stock of education, and the rude and lawless nature of his early environment are taken into account, the amazing thing is that his deficiencies should not have been greater than they were.

So far as syntax and spelling are concerned, he was notably illiterate. When Harvard College made him a doctor of laws, John Quincy Adams said that he would not be present to witness her disgrace in conferring the highest literary honors upon a barbarian who could not write a sentence of grammar and hardly could spell his own name. In reading Jackson's letters my own attention has been called to the fact that on one occasion he even misspelled the name of Calhoun, and on another the name of Nashville, though in the one case few names had oftener been on his lips than that of Calhoun; and in the other his famous home, the Hermitage, was in the immediate vicinity of Nashville. However, John Quincy Adams should not have forgotten, and we should not forget, that if battles were won and public policies consummated by grammarians only, Marlborough, Napoleon, and Washington would not be the immortal personages that they are.

Few men, too, have ever been endowed with such a high-strung nature as Jackson. From the time that a brutal British officer inflicted ineffaceable wounds on his body, because he refused to black this officer's boots, until his final retirement from public life his existence was, with a few brief intervals, one long gladiatorial combat.

One of his enemies claimed that, in the course of his life, Jackson had been engaged in some 100 duels, street fights, and brawls of one kind or another. This is, doubtless, an exaggeration, but certainly few careers in civil life have ever been marked by such unremitting pugnacity as Jackson's in the early history of Tennessee. At one time he and John Sevier went about "gunning for each other," to use a slang phrase of our own time. He fought a duel, though a bloodless one, with Waightstill Avery, a fellow practitioner of the law. In one of the most tragic duels in American history, he killed Charles Dickinson and received a wound himself, from which he never really recovered. In an irregular encounter with Thomas H. Benton and his brother Jesse, he incurred injuries which reduced his health, for a time, to the lowest point of depletion, and the original cause of these injuries was the fact that, in an unfortunate moment, he had consented to become the second of a duelist with whom Jesse Benton had taken to the field. At one time, the popularity of Jackson in Tennessee was seriously impaired by the general feeling that he was too quarrelsome and dangerous even for its lax code of law and order. Such an aggressive nature as this, of course, was bound to assert itself, unhappily at times, even after it had passed to a wider theater of action than primitive Tennessee. No matter how grave the measure of responsibility that rested upon him, down to his last days, no one could violate Jackson's acute sense of personal dignity, or excite his antagonism in any way without arousing in him a spirit of uncompromising, unrelenting resentment that made every fight with him, small or great, a duel to the death. "He went," Thomas H. Benton often observed of him, for "a clean victory or a clean defeat."

When his passions were thoroughly awakened, his imperious temperament brooked no restraint whatever. Under those circumstances, his unbending Scotch-Irish will can be compared to nothing so fitly as to concrete reinforced with iron rods. Even the respect that he owed, in the light of international laws and usages, to His Christian Majesty the King of Spain, or the fear that he might naturally have entertained of the retaliatory power of His Majesty, the King of Great Britain and Ireland, meant but little to him. When he was a major general in the Army of the United States, if the President would but give the word, he stood ready to seize the entire Spanish Territory of Florida, without a moment's hesitation. As it was, he did not scruple, later, to seize and hold for a time St. Marks, one of its most important posts. He hung, unjustly, as is now generally agreed, in Florida, a British subject, Arbuthnot, for alleged espionage and other offenses, and, with what might at least be deemed rash sternness, had another British subject, in Florida, Ambrister, shot. In 1821, when still irritated by the delay in the delivery of Florida to him as its American Governor by Spain, he even clapped the handsome and polite Colonel Callava, the Spanish Governor of Pensacola, into a calaboose.

After the Battle of New Orleans, while that city was still under the martial law, established by him, he hurried off Judge Dominick A. Hall, a Federal judge, to imprisonment, in the custody of a file of soldiers, because he had sanctioned the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus against him.

He was so blinded by partisanship when his feelings were fully enlisted in behalf of an individual that after his first suspicions of Burr's designs in the Southwest had been laid by the latter's deceitful assurances he did not stop short during Burr's trial of making harangues in the streets of Richmond in defense of that unscrupulous, if not treasonable adventurer.

When the wives of the members of his Cabinet and Vice President Calhoun and his own niece, Mrs. Donelson, refused to accord social recognition to Mrs. Eaton because of her dubious reputation, he insisted upon her being given all the rights and privileges of unquestioned innocence.

Few names are oftener blended than those of Jefferson and Jackson, but it is interesting to recall the fact that for Jackson, apparently, Jefferson never entertained anything except dislike and distrust.

In 1824 he said of Jackson:

> When I was President of the Senate he was a Senator, and he could never speak on account of the rashness of his feelings. I have seen him attempt it repeatedly and as often choke with rage.

Indeed, Jefferson has been said to have declared that Jackson was one of the most unfit men that he knew of for the Presidency.

> He has had—

He is reported to have affirmed—

> very little respect for laws or constitutions, and is, in fact, an able military chief. His passions are terrible. * * * He is a dangerous man.

We have described Jackson at his worst. Of Jackson at his best, it is hard to speak too highly. It is sometimes said of a man that he has the defects of his virtues. Of Jackson it can be truly said that he had all the virtues of his defects. It is difficult to conceive of courage or fortitude more superb than his. He met danger on the dueling field, in the wilderness, in battle, as far as we can see, with a heart to which fear was a total stranger. He conducted his campaign against the Creeks when, as the result of the wounds inflicted upon him in his collision with the Bentons, he could scarcely, from sheer weakness and pain, contrive to sit in his saddle. Always after that event his health was very frail; yet no peril could daunt him, no obstacle could arrest him, no amount of resistance could withstand him; except, perhaps, that set up by the ladies of Washington to the social acceptance of Mrs. Eaton; and here, perhaps, he met defeat only because he could not trample women under his feet as he might have done men. After he killed Dickinson he once declared that he would have hit him even if he himself had been shot through the heart. In his struggle with the Bank of the United States he exclaimed grimly, "The bank, Mr. Van Buren, is trying to kill me, but I will kill it," and so he did. Death itself was a small matter to him compared with the frustration of any serious aim on which he had set his heart. His integrity was punctilious in the highest degree. He paid a debt even if he had to cut pecuniary comfort to the bone to do it. He was chaste, temperate, and intensely domestic in his habits. His romantic devotion to his wife Rachel and to her relations is among the commonplaces of American history. He was a kind master. He was, if anything, too loyal and steadfast a friend. There was not a trace of vanity, bluster, deceit, or double-dealing in his composition. Under ordinary circumstances he was attentive to advice and prompt to acknowledge error. Like most good haters, he had a rich reserve of compassion and affection for any call upon the gentler elements of his nature. He loved children. After a battle in one of his campaigns a little Indian boy was found with the arms of his dead mother still about him. "All his relations are dead; kill him, too," said the Indian women whom Jackson besought to give the child nourishment. This piteous answer went to the heart of the general, and he took the boy under his protection and brought him up in his home as if he were his own son. Benton tells us how he came upon Jackson in the twilight of a wet, chilly evening and found him sitting alone before the fire with a lamb and a child between his knees. As is true of many individuals of his intense character, in his nature vials of wrath and wellsprings of unutterable tenderness were found side by side. In no man was the truth of Bayard Taylor's beautiful lines ever better exemplified:

> The bravest are the tenderest,
> The loving are the daring.

Nor could there be a graver mistake than to think of Jackson as a mere frontiersman or roughneck. Indisputable testimony to his impressive and winning presence has come down to us. One of the handsomest and most elegant gentleman that I have ever met was the late Gen. Joseph R. Anderson, of Richmond, Va.; and he was in the habit of declaring that of all the men that he had known Andrew Jackson had the most courtly manners. He was a natural soldier, a natural statesman, and a natural gentleman. Among his warmest friends and admirers were refined women.

The sharp contrasts apparent in the private character of Jackson are also visible in his public character. He lacked the education, the moral discipline, and the mental training essential to the highest achievements of sober statesmanship. He carried his antagonistic spirit, his arbitrary will, and his inveterate partialities and prejudices into his public as well as his private relations. Tolerance and compromise, two of the things which enter so largely into the successful administration of public affairs, were deeply repugnant to his self-willed disposition. To him political opponents and personal enemies were one. He detested Calhoun. The most that he would concede to Clay was that he was "a magnanimous rascal." For the lack of mental culture his State papers had to be reduced to form by other persons. His fierce partisan temper is at least partly responsible for the abuses of patronage which sprang up at Washington when he came to the National Capital with the hungry office-seeking Demos at his heels. Before his day the United States was a republic. Since his day it has been a democracy, with all the failings that a democracy, as distinguished from a republic, has.

But Jackson's political career, too, had its merits, and merits sufficiently noble to make him a great party leader and the idol of the American people. If his written words were not always those of the scholar, the glowing thoughts that ran off from his impetuous pen were, even after they had been dressed up in academic English by Edward Livingston, or some one else, all his own. Despite their grammatical imperfections they went to their mark as surely as Jackson's bullet sped to Dickinson's vitals. He brought to public affairs not a little of the instinctive sagacity which he brought to his military exploits and a trust in the good sense and good feeling of the mass of men as unwavering as Jefferson's or Lincoln's. Nor should we forget that one of his closest and ablest political associates—Van Buren—has told us that Jackson was one of the calmest and most self-contained of men when facing a real public crisis. His patriotism was ardent and impassioned. He loved American ideals and institutions as they could be loved only by a man who bore British scars on his head and hand, had inhaled the free air of the western wilderness, and had ascended from the lowest levels of human fortune to the highest.

The possession of power and boundless popularity had no effect upon his prejudice against the reeligibility of the President. Indeed, notwithstanding his fervid temperament and unfaltering self-confidence he seems to have been moved in his career to a singularly limited degree by political ambition. He cared quite as much for the Hermitage as he did for the White House. His real, lasting interests centered about his Tennessee home, his lands, his crops, the friends of his early manhood. His political convictions were not always maintained with entire consistency. It is a nice question whether his war upon the Bank of the United States did not do fully as much harm as good. Its value consisted mainly in the early warning that it gave to American plutocracy that American democracy includes the money king as well as all other kings in its political excommunication. Unquestionably the countenance that Jackson gave to what came to be known as the spoils system of politics helped to beget many of the administrative scandals that have attended the practical workings of our Government. But it can not be denied that he never gave his assent while President to a public policy that he did not honestly believe to be for the best interests of his country. In his transparent sincerity of character, in the unfailing courage with which he asserted his political beliefs, and in the popular faith in the entire disinterestedness of his public motives, as well as in his keen intuitive political insight, are to be found the explanation of the fact that he earned the unmeasured confidence of the American people, never failed to carry his point so long as he chose to remain on the public stage, and left that stage with the plaudits of an adoring multitude ringing in his ears. In his time he was pitted against some of the ablest men in our political history—such as Webster, Calhoun, and Clay—but there was not one of them who did not go down under his impetuous onset as tenpins go down before the rush of a ball in a bowling alley. Even when he incurred censure for one of his acts it was certain to be expunged by popular favor in process of time. The fine imposed upon him for contempt of court by Judge Hall after his release was refunded to him years afterwards with interest by Congress. When a resolution censuring him was adopted by the United States Senate his friends never rested until black lines of cancellation had been drawn around the record relating to it in the Senate Journal.

Jackson issued victoriously from all his important political contests, and his military career was attended by the same unvarying success. Though of only a few years' duration altogether it was long enough to demonstrate that he was a soldier from his birth.

All his operations were characterized, in the highest degree, by an innate genius for war that enabled him, almost unerringly, to realize the practical means by which his objects were to be accomplished; by sleepless energy; by rapidity and firmness of decision; by boldness tempered by the proper measure of prudence; by an heroic spirit, which rose superior even to famine and mutiny in his own ranks; and by that personal ascendancy, partly the fruit of sympathetic fellowship and partly the fruit of rigorous, yet judicious, discipline which is the supreme token of true generalship.

Anything better directed or deadlier than his descent on the Creeks at Horseshoe Bend, it would be hard to imagine. His victories were always so crushing that none of them can be said to have been dearly bought. When the Indian dead at Horseshoe Bend were counted, they were computed to number some 757 individuals, as against 55 of Jackson's men killed, and 146 wounded; and of these more than half were Indian allies of his.

On that ever-memorable day, the 8th of January, 1815, when Jackson found himself confronted at New Orleans, by some of the bravest and most highly disciplined soldiers of the British Army, the withering fire of his artillerymen and riflemen in 25 minutes took a bloody toll of 700 British dead, 1,400 British wounded, and 500 British prisoners, at an expense to Jackson's forces of only 8 killed and 13 wounded. Among the British dead and wounded of that day were 3 major generals, 8 colonels and lieutenant colonels, 6 majors, 18 captains, and 54 subalterns. Among the dead was Sir Edward Pakenham, the gallant commander of the British Army.

To grasp how infinitely superior in point of military resource and skill Jackson was to any of our other generals in the War of 1812, one has but to read the whole story of the British attack upon New Orleans in 1814 and 1815. The tireless activity, the keen intelligence exhibited by Jackson at every stage of the attack, his own night attack on the British, his effective use as an agency of defense of the Mississippi River, the good judgment that he showed in the selection of his ground, the skillful disposition that he made of his forces, and the celerity with which he met every turn in the vicissitudes of the British assault, all stamp him as a great commander.

Nor would any review of Jackson's military achievements be complete that did not mention the uncommon degree of efficiency evidenced by his military operations in Florida both before and after the Battle of New Orleans.

It is not given to many individuals to be a brilliant soldier, a renowned President, and a famous party leader, but, despite his infirmities of education and temper, all of these things it can be truly said Jackson was.

Every year on the 8th day of January the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans is commemorated in the United States with due ceremony.

The enthusiasm kindled by the political leadership of Jackson in the breasts of his faithful followers was so intense that at every presidential election a certain number of Democrats are still jocularly supposed to cast their votes for him.

And even if all the other executive acts of Andrew Jackson should be forgotten, the people of the United States will never forget the Jefferson Day toast offered by him which chilled the first stirrings of disunion during his presidential career: "Our Federal Union, it must be preserved"; nor the noble and powerful proclamation against the nullification of the Federal Constitution which did more to implant a sense of inviolable nationality in the bosom of the American people than anything in our history except the closing scenes of the Civil War at Appomattox.

We can only trust that this national spirit will be forever maintained by a patriotic vow on the part of the American people as stern and immutable as the tremendous oath which Jackson sometimes uttered when announcing his inflexible resolves: "By the Eternal!"

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, Members of the Senate accustomed to listening to addresses delivered in the Chamber will appreciate an innovation where the occasion is to turn away from material matters, in which we talk about the industrial greatness of the Nation, to study for a time the real source of the real greatness of our country. I think without doubt that greatness will be generally conceded to be in the character of our leaders. That is not only true in political life but it is true in every activity of life. Here in this Chamber, where day after day we are discussing the material greatness that is detailed by the figures of the wealth of the Nation, I think it very fitting and appropriate that we turn aside to consider for a moment a character like Andrew Jackson.

When I study this character, as I must do it, rather from the standpoint of history, I can recognize certain important contributions which were made by this leadership to our national system. I recognize qualities of leadership in Andrew Jackson that were very uncommon. When I run over the list of the Presidents who preceded him and note what is regarded as mental characteristics which qualify for the Presidency and then study the life of Jackson in contrast, I find it a very interesting study. All of those, unless it would be Washington, would have been regarded classical in their education, very erudite in their acquisition of knowledge from the sources of higher learning. Quite different in the character of Jackson. He, on the other hand, was self-educated, and while people speak of him as a pioneer, he probably was the best representative of signal achievement of his time or the best that could be realized under the conditions under which he lived.

The source of his popularity is somewhat difficult to ascertain. The measure of his popularity is in a maximum degree when contrasted with others. In 1828, 100 years ago, when he was a candidate the second time for the Presidency, he fell heir to the tremendous popular impulse that was due to the fact that it appeared he had been counted out for the Presidency in 1824, when in that year there were four contending candidates. These men were of the type of John Quincy Adams, the scholar of his day; William H. Crawford, a great statesman; and "Harry of the West," Henry Clay, regarded at that time as one of the most vivaciously eloquent and popular men in America. Jackson received more electoral votes than any one of them; indeed, 15 more than the man next to him, John Quincy Adams, but the election went to the House of Representatives, and Adams was chosen.

The resentment that welled up from the country, because of what appeared to be a defeat by a minority candidate of the most popular hero in America, made his election in 1828, four years later, an assured fact.

As all who are acquainted with the era and these leaders would recognize, men of the type of Jefferson, the scholarly Democrat, the great draftsman, probably the greatest representative of liberty in government the world ever knew, had not confidence in Jackson. He was afraid of what appeared to be Jackson's impulses. He recognized his remarkable contribution as a leader in war and the place that he had filled as a successful victor in war, and the debt we owe as a Nation to what he did in 1815 and even in Florida after that time. Yet Jefferson was somewhat fearful of an administration under the leadership of a man of the type of Jackson. While it is true that Jefferson died in 1826, on the 4th of July, the same date that John Adams, a great compatriot died, Jackson was a leading figure at that time. While Jackson was not elected President until two years later in 1828, Jefferson could very easily read the signs of the times and know the possibilities of the American Republic under our popular method of campaigns and elections.

I look upon Jackson, as President during those eight years, as one of the great figures in American history. One of the most spectacular, if not the most dramatic, incidents in our national life was when Jackson led the fight to defeat the United States bank, and succeeded by ordering all the deposits removed from the central bank to the 89 State banks. There was a trio, or what we call in history a triumvirate, in the Senate which organized in opposition to the President. That triumvirate was led by the distinguished Democrat of South Carolina, aided by the brilliant Whig of Kentucky, reinforced by the brilliant Whig of Massachusetts. Of those three, while Clay would be regarded the most popular, Webster probably the most powerful orator, I regard John C. Calhoun as one of the keenest thinkers and best representatives of a peculiar type of government, State sovereignty, that we had at that time or any time before or since. At one time it was so arranged that when the President nominated Van Buren as ambassador to Great Britain, the confirmation in this body was to result in a tie. At the time, presiding over this body as the President of the Senate, was John C. Calhoun. When the tie vote was reached on the confirmation of Martin Van Buren, an heir later on to Andrew Jackson, the tie was broken by John C. Calhoun voting to reject the appointment; and, although Martin Van Buren had gone to London to enter upon his duties, it was the vote of the great Democrat from South Carolina, who did not like the President of the United States, that recalled Van Buren.

That is only one incident to indicate the intensity of feeling which was developing here in Washington between the leadership in this body and the White House. When, on the removal of these deposits, this triumvirate moved against Jackson, they succeeded in putting a resolution of censure on the records of the Senate. As has been stated, under the leadership of Thomas H. Benton, another one of our great Senators, the fight to expunge that resolution was continued until 1837, when it was finally taken off the record. But it did not in any way lessen the feeling between the great leader of South Carolina and the great President of the Nation.

I suppose the most dramatic incident in that era was when, on the threat of South Carolina to secede Jackson made his famous proclamation. I think that that State paper, bearing the name of Livingston, which represents the opinion of Jackson, is one of the strongest arguments for the perpetuity of this Nation that is extant in American history. If I were called upon to state what we, as a Nation, owe to Jackson as a political leader the facts would be numerous, the debt would be great, and the incidents would not at all be confined to any one decade.

He was a very remarkable personality. Admirably adapted to the work of a great soldier, all of his impulses were in that direction; and yet this wonderful soldier, who would make us think of blood and thunder, was as simple and kind in his attitude in his home, and was as chivalrous in the drawing room where ladies were assembled as the most refined individual of that or any other time. That beautiful relationship that is so well understood between him and the wife makes me think of that remarkable incident in the life of John Stuart Mill, the great philosopher of Britain, who when the helpmate died had her buried in the yard at the home so that every day he could go out and commune with the beloved one who had gone. I always think of that relationship when I think of Jackson and his beloved wife.

Yet out of that relationship, because Jesse Benton had made an offensive remark, a duel took place between Jackson and Benton, showing the contrast between what appeared to be the impetuous, strenuous vigor of volition and unconquerable will, on the one hand, and, on the other, the deepest, most tender pathos of which we have any record.

Senators, I look upon Jackson, his life, and influence, as one of the sources of the great riches of American political life. I think the Senate does a very proper thing now and then to halt its proceedings to pay tribute to the real source of the real wealth of America—her great men and her great leaders.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the strength and glory of a nation consists in the manhood of its men and the womanhood of its women. No man is truly great who does not possess the elements of heroic courage and manly honor. Jackson was blessed with both. It was my good fortune on yesterday to witness the unveiling of the Jackson statute in America's hall of fame. The program of the occasion was beautifully conducted by Tennessee's gifted and eloquent daughter, Mrs. Gillentine. The President of the United States delivered a fine and strong address on that occasion. Mr. Claude J. Bowers, the editor of the New York World, who has written a history of "Jackson and His Time," delivered a splendid address; in fact, all of the addresses were good.

Andrew Jackson was a wonderful man. He was truly a great American. He was able, conscientious, and absolutely fearless. He did not permit anything to stand between him and the discharge of his duty. He feared God and God only. I read a history of him when I was a boy. I was born within 12 miles of the spot where he fought the decisive battle with the Creek Nation, at Horseshoe Bend, on the Tallapoosa River, in Alabama. I have many times visited the Horseshoe Bend! I have seen the deep trench constructed midway between the heel and toe of the Horseshoe in which the Indians hid themselves when waiting for Jackson and his men to attack them in their last mighty stronghold. Major Montgomery, leading the Jackson forces, mounted the breastworks, built of logs across the heel of the Horseshoe by the Indians under the supervision of Colonel Rogers, a British officer. The Creek Indians were supplied with guns and ammunition by the British and they made their last stand at Horseshoe Bend.

Across it were built the breastworks with sweet-gum logs, with portholes cut through, so that the Indians could fire at Jackson and his men standing and another line of them could fire lying down.

Jackson gave orders to attack them. Major Montgomery, for whom the capital of Alabama is named, standing on the breastworks, leading and directing his men, was shot through the head and instantly killed. The brilliant and daring Sam Houston, who was later Governor of Tennessee and President of the Republic of Texas, was shot through the thigh with an arrow as he mounted the breastworks. He demanded that his men draw the arrow from the wound. They tore his flesh terribly and he bled profusely. They took him back to the tent. And when Jackson learned that he had been wounded and had been carried to the tent, he went to him, knelt down by his cot, held his hand, and begged him to stay there and not to venture out any more; that he had lost so much blood that further activity on his part might prove fatal. Houston listened and said nothing, but when Jackson went back to his men on the firing line Houston slipped out of the tent and directed his men to fire into the Indians between the clefts of the rocks along the riverside.

He was severely wounded two or three times; shot through the right shoulder with a rifle in the hands of a Creek Indian. Jackson's victory was complete. Parton in his history tells us that that was the decisive battle with the Creek Nation, and that in that battle Jackson broke the power of the red man in North America. There were those prominent in that day who dreaded and feared the red man and his dangerous wilderness warfare. Jackson was not one of them.

Mr. President, it has been said by some one that the really heroic and fearless man is not afraid to fight alone; that "wolves hunt in packs, but the lion hunts alone." That describes Jackson. He was a lion, and wherever duty called he dared, if need be, to fight alone. He trusted God implicitly; was true to his own convictions and had faith in himself. When once he determined that the cause was just and that he should support it, no power of man or devils could turn him away from the path of duty. He did not stop to ask who would go with him into the conflict. He was ready to take his stand and do his duty at any cost. We need his noble and courageous spirit in our country to-day, when political corruption is rampant in the Republic and when the greedy money power again needs to be curbed, as Jackson curbed it in his day.

He dared to meet in open combat the powerful and arrogant forces of the United States Bank. The avaricious money power of his time had set up headquarters at the Capitol. Nicholas Biddle, who was the chosen mouthpiece of the money lords of his day, was here with satellites encamped at the Capitol. He was spending vast sums of money entertaining and influencing Members of the House and Senate; he was the lord and master of the political situation at the Capitol until Jackson appeared on the scene. When Jackson saw that the money power was not only manipulating the Nation's money supply and credit to the enrichment of the few and to the hurt of the many, he challenged them to national combat here in the Capitol. There was pending in Congress at the time a measure of great importance to the country and to Jackson's administration, and Nicholas Biddle dared to send word to Jackson that unless he permitted the bank bill, which would renew the charter of the United States Bank, to be tied in with the Jackson measure he would defeat Jackson's bill.

When they bore that message to Jackson the light of battle blazed in his eye and he said, "Have they got power enough to defeat my bill?" He was told that they claimed to have that power. "Well," he said, "that is too much power for any one set of men to have in this country, and I will take it from them"; and he did take it from them.

Such a fight as Jackson waged in that instance has got to be made every now and then to keep the Government in the hands of the people. Jackson saw the necessity had arisen, the time had arrived for that power to be smashed, for those who wielded it to be taught banking institutions were valuable agencies in serving the business needs of the people and that they were not created primarily for the benefit of the bankers, but to accommodate and serve the needs of the men and women in all the walks of life engaged in business of every kind; that the people were not to become slaves to the money power, but that the money power was to be so handled and controlled that it would benefit everybody that came in contact with it, and at the same time yield a good profit to and benefit those who operated the banks.

Jackson never had any desire to deny them that right, but when he found that the United States bank had gathered in and concentrated here powers from the various States, and had concentrated vast wealth here at the Capitol, he said, "It is now a dangerous agency; it must be smashed"; and he smashed it.

Mr. President, we have a similar condition now, and the country and its Congress have got to deal with it soon. The concentration of wealth in New York City, in Wall Street, the wildcat gambling in stocks and bonds and farm products on the exchanges have created a Monte Carlo and a dazed and drunken, staggering Babylon with which this Nation has got to deal. Whence will come a Jackson? He has got to come at this time out of the West or the South. This issue has got to be met, and God will raise up the leader, and the hour is ripe for his coming.

If all public men had the courage of their convictions and the devotion to duty that Jackson had, what a glorious country this would be. Whenever his country stood on one side of an issue and sinister interests on the other, Jackson was always on the side of his country.

He was clean, outspoken, and fearless in all the engagements of his private and public life. No cloud of scandal hangs on his horizon. No act of dishonor darkens his name.

Mr. President, his bitter enemies in the old days who hated him because he whipped them in his battle with the United States Bank tried to make him appear as an ignoramus; but those who knew the truth, including Bowers' history—one of the best I have ever read of him—said that he was not such a man. It is true that he did not have the college advantages and university advantages that some public men had; but, like Lincoln and Tom Watson of Georgia—who did not have many advantages that the college afforded, but who educated themselves at their firesides and were learning and storing their minds with useful knowledge all the time—Jackson was an educated man, a well-informed man, when he first went to Congress; and when he was judge of the Supreme Court of Tennessee his decisions show him to be a man of learning and that all of those reflections made upon him by his enemies were unwarranted.

He was a man of sound judgment; of deep convictions; of unfailing courage and unimpeachable integrity. He was truly a great leader. It made no difference to him that the problem was a difficult one and that the road to its solution was long and rough. He tackled the problem and entered upon the road the moment he was convinced that the cause was just and that duty pointed the way. He knew he was right, and he knew that in the end he would convert the country to his view. When truth and right and justice were involved he never stopped to count the cost. He pointed the way and led to victory. He served his day and generation well, as an Alabamian and as an American I delight to honor him. In 1914 I was instrumental in passing through Congress a bill that caused the erection of a monument at the Horseshoe Bend in Alabama to Jackson and his men. Fortunate indeed are we that we can claim him as countryman and feel the quickening inspiration of his heroic example to high-minded, noble endeavor; and fortunate indeed is the great State of Tennessee in being able to claim him as her illustrious son and as her contribution to the Valhalla of American fame. And I congratulate Tennessee, the State that Jackson loved and served so well, upon the fine ability, honor, and standing of the two splendid patriots who answer to the name of Tennessee in this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on yesterday there was unveiled in the Capitol a bronze statue of Andrew Jackson, It was placed in our national Hall of Fame. It was fitting that this should be done by the State of Tennessee, from which he came, and which he served so well; but, Mr. President, it did not take a bronze statue to give enduring fame to Andrew Jackson. His life, his worth, his character, his deeds, had already, long before, enshrined themselves in the hearts of the people of this Nation, where they will live as long as the Nation endures.

If anyone should ask the question, "Who are the 10 first greatest men of this Republic?" Perhaps 9 out of 10 of the persons asked, if they were familiar with their country's history, would include Andrew Jackson in that 10, and many of them would put him near the forefront.

He was not a man gifted in letters. He did not have the literary versatility of a Jefferson. He did not have the literary versatility of a John Quincy Adams. He did not have the literary versatility of a modern like Woodrow Wilson. What he did have, however, was a hard common sense, an almost unequaled natural ability, a wonderful physical and moral courage, a physical and moral courage that is perhaps unsurpassed in the history of this Republic; and he had a will to do that was invincible.

These qualities were what made Andrew Jackson the great man that he was; and it was these qualities that make him live in history to-day and will always as long as the deeds of great men are revered.

I am not going to attempt to review—it has already been better done by others—the various stages of his eventful life. I will recall simply that he first came into the national picture as the hero of New Orleans, where he won one of the greatest military victories of the ages. Our country had lost the war up to that time, and peace had already been declared; but he redeemed our country by winning that victory before the news of the close of the war had come to him. He made a great fame thereby; and afterward, in the conquest of Florida, and before, in the conquest of the Indians, he had made a wonderful military fame. But these, in my judgment, were not the things that gave Andrew Jackson his enduring fame.

His spectacular race for the Presidency in 1824, in which he far outdistanced his competitors and broke up the whole method of presidential succession, his defeat only being accomplished by an unholy combination in the House of Representatives, gave him his first great political fame. It is true that he had been Senator from Tennessee, in 1797, and Senator again in 1823 and 1824, but he did not take a conspicuous place in this body. Both of his terms of office were too short for him to become a leader here. The race in 1824 paved the way for his success in 1828 and his reelection in 1832.

As President he followed Jefferson as the champion of the masses as opposed to the classes. In substantially his entire term of eight years he was engaged in a terrible political warfare. For the most part, he had an adverse majority against him in the Senate, but he never faltered, never hesitated, never quit. Afterwards he was vindicated as probably no other President was ever vindicated in our history, and his political enemies put completely to rout, and most of them were absolutely destroyed. But none of these things brought him his enduring fame.

Mr. President, in my opinion, there are two remarkable things that occurred in his career that made Jackson truly great. One of these was his fight, after he became President, with the Bank of the United States. In that fight he settled for a long time two great questions. One of them was, "Shall any corporation or organization or combination of men be erected within this Government that is stronger than the Government itself?" The other was, in that connection, "Shall fraud and corruption and chicanery and dishonesty control this Government?" To both of these questions Jackson thundered the answer, "No!"

When he found that these were the issue, he entered into the fight with all his heart and soul and with all his might; and it took him virtually both terms of his administration to win those fights. He won them both, however, and settled for all time that though fraud and wrong and dishonesty and corruption may flourish for a season in America, an Andrew Jackson will ever arise to destroy it, and he did destroy it; and I hope his example will be looked to through the present and coming ages whenever any organization appears and for dishonest and corrupt reasons undertakes to run this Government, as that corrupt and dishonest organization, the United States Bank, undertook to run it in Jackson's day.

There was one other victory in Mr. Jackson's career that seems to me to place him in the very front rank of our truly great men. It was not a military victory. It was not even a victory of statesmanship, strictly speaking, though in a sense it was. It was a victory won at a dinner party—a dinner party given by his enemies, to which he was invited.

It will be remembered that when Mr. Jackson came on the political scene he upset many traditions in this Republic. He upset the accustomed and ordinary succession to the Presidency, and he aroused the ire of powerful men and rivals. Three of those men have been referred to here this afternoon.

One of them was Clay, and one was Calhoun, and the other was Webster. Up to that good hour they had never agreed on any subject; indeed they had been fighting one another for a generation; they all differed on both principle and policy; they were each bitterly opposed to the other; but when Mr. Jackson became President these rivals buried their differences, they joined their forces, and all against Mr. Jackson, with the result that after years of bitter warfare when the battle was over Andrew Jackson had won, and his enemies, put to rout and shame, were annihilated.

It was during this stormy period, not long after the death of Mr. Jefferson, that Mr. Jackson's enemies gave a dinner party in honor of Mr. Jefferson's birthday—a custom that is still preserved in our party. It was the first Jefferson Day anniversary, and the principal theme of Mr. Jackson's enemies was nullification of Federal laws, as argued by Mr. Calhoun. Nullification! Ah, this man of experience, this man of undaunted courage, this man of keen intellectuality, saw what was coming, and prepared for it. All of the speakers there were there for the purpose of furthering the idea of nullification of Federal law; and it is claimed by historians that Mr. Jackson was invited for the purpose, by inference at least, of committing him directly or inferentially to that doctrine. He was not even put on the program; but, being President of the United States, he was invited and expected to propose a toast. His enemies were jubilant. It was believed that they had at last gotten "the old man"; but when all had spoken the President rose, and, looking into the face of one of his greatest political enemies, said:

> I propose this toast: The Federal Union—it must and shall be preserved!

In my humble judgment, that toast has had the most wonderful effect upon the history of this Nation of any utterance that was ever made by any American citizen; and it gave to Mr. Jackson the greatest part of his enduring fame. Every one who heard him knew that he meant every word he said, and that there was going to be no nullification of Federal law; and there was not. It was one of his greatest victories. Greater than any of his military victories, greater than any of his political victories, as marvelous as they were, greater than any of his personal victories, greater than any of his victories of statesmanship, was this victory won by that great man at this dinner party.

In so far as the history of this Government is concerned, in so far as the history of the American people is concerned, in so far as the destiny of this Nation is concerned, that single utterance has had the most far-reaching effect upon our Nation of any utterance or of any act of any American ever recorded. With a man like Jackson behind it, it put an end to nullification and it established for all time the commanding position of the Federal Union.

But for that utterance the Union might have speedily disintegrated. The forces of disintegration were stronger then than they ever were before or ever were afterwards. It was the personality and courage of Jackson that deferred the inevitable conflict for 30 years to a time when the forces of union were far stronger.

Andrew Jackson was a natural-born leader of men. While he had a violent temper, he was admittedly a gentleman. He was a patriot through and through. His physical courage knew no limit, and his moral courage was coextensive with his physical courage. He was a thinker and a doer. He loved his friends and hated his enemies. Coming from humble beginning, he made himself probably the strongest man that ever occupied the Presidency.

Mr. President, I am proud to come from the State that gave Andrew Jackson to this Republic. In my judgment, he was one of the greatest of all of our Presidents. He was perhaps the most successful President in getting through his every measure. He had his enemies. He never gave any quarter and he never asked any quarter. Whenever they put up their flag he was ready to fight, and he fought, and he won every fight.

His kindly private life is a monument and an inspiration to everyone who believes in the purity and uprightness of the family life in America. His political life could well be emulated by the most ambitious of our citizens. His career as a citizen, as a statesman, as a builder in part of this great Republic, as a Congresman, a Senator, a judge, and as President was and will be an inspiration to men as long as time shall endure.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, Andrew Jackson was great in two great fields—in that of military and in that of statesmanship. The spirit of Andrew Jackson rose all unaware in the Senate to-day. Without thinking of this as a day of memorial to his name, the last act of the Senate before entering into this service was to pass a bill making permanent the national rifle matches of the United States. The report on that bill gives as one of the reasons for the passage of the bill the great victory of Jackson's riflemen at New Orleans.

Mr. President, Jackson's victory in the economic field to my mind far outranks his victories on the field of battle; and I want to mention specifically the greatest fight Jackson made. I think Jackson was the one and only President of the United States who, from his own choice, never did surrender to special privilege in that great office. Even Lincoln was compelled to surrender to some extent to the war profiteer. Washington was somewhat in sympathy with the special privilege class of the United States. Roosevelt, who stands next to Jackson for his persistence against them, did in a few instances yield to their power. But Jackson never did.

Jackson's fight against the central bank of the United States was the most determined and most successful fight against special privilege in all the history of our country and in all the history of the world. That institution was organized and conducted for the purpose of collecting together the savings of the people of the United States, to be used as the financial support of every industry and every institution that preyed upon the labor and earnings of the American people. Jackson set his hand against it, and he never yielded until it was uprooted.

Mr. President, nearly a hundred years have gone by since that memorable battle, and again we have built up in the United States a great financial institution. This time it is backed up by provisions of law, and again it is collecting the savings of the people of the United States into a great central reservoir for speculators and gamblers and profiteers and exploiters of the labor and the toil of this country. Not since the days of Jackson himself have we so much needed another Jackson as we need one at this moment in the United States.

This financial gambling institution became a menace to this country before 1913, when the Federal reserve law was passed. The author of that law, in presenting it to the House of Representatives, said that brokers' loans had become a cancer, in our economic life, and that they proposed to cut the cancer out. At the time that was said, the brokers' loans totaled about $766,000,000, a vast sum of the savings of the people to be collected into one reservoir for the purpose of conducting the greatest gambling business ever organized in this world, a business that is changing all our business into enterprises of risk and uncertainty parallel to gambling itself.

It was truly said it was a gigantic cancer. The law was passed to cut the cancer out. A few days ago a check on brokers' loans showed them to be, according to newspaper reports, $4,680,000,000. The cancer is six times as big as when it was cut out, and the United States of America, at this moment, awaits an Andrew Jackson to operate upon that cancer that is destroying the economic life of the common people of our country.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 17, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, April 16, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful Father, Thou who art without the birth of dawn or the death of dark, because of grateful memories we are encouraged to approach Thee. Thou art the pledge of all our joys and the surety of all our hopes. Take our wills, renew their strength, and blend them with Thine. Reclaim us from any ways of wrong, and under the gentle pressure of Thy Holy Spirit bless us with the heart that forgives; may hate never become the fatal weakness of our characters. Deaden our fears and lighten our hearts and take us by the hand and lead us on. Should evil approach, may we overcome it with good, and know that this kind of a life can do everything else but fail. In the Master's name. Amen.

The Journals of the proceedings of Saturday, April 14, 1928, and Sunday, April 15, 1928, were read and approved.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

BONDS OF SILVER CITY, N. MEX.

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9207) granting to the State of New Mexico certain lands, for reimbursement of the counties of Grant, Luna, Hidalgo, and Santa Fe, for interest paid on railroad-aid bonds and for the payment of the principal of railroad-aid bonds issued by the town of Silver City, and to reimburse said town for interest paid on said bonds, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I feel now that I shall be obliged to do so, although I shall be extremely sorry to do so on account of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MORROW]. The bill is one that is a very generous proposition on the part of the Federal Government. The bonds in question, in my judgment, never have represented any real obligation on the part of the Federal Government. In the first place, they were held invalid because of the violation of limitations of the Federal law, and, later when Congress sought to validate them, Congress expressly provided that there was to be no obligation against the Federal Government. So on down through the history of it all. Finally, 1,000,000 acres were turned over for the purpose of taking care of these obligations, the balance to be turned into the school fund. So the Federal Government gave 1,000,000 acres, enough to take care of all of the obligations, and the balance to go into the school fund, and as a matter of fact the million acres were more than enough to take care of all of the obligations included in this bill; but one town, through mistake, which, of course, was not the fault of the Federal Government, was not included in that authorization. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MORROW], in my conferences with him, urges that although there is enough available from the million acres it can not now be used for this town of Silver City and its bonds because an amendment to the constitution of his State as well as an act of Congress would be needed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my conscience is clear in this that there is no obligation on the part of the Federal Government. If this bill should pass, it is an act of generosity on the part of the Federal Government. Due to the fact that the bill calls for an allotment of public lands instead of cash, and the further fact that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MORROW] is willing to reduce the acreage I have been led to give very careful study to his proposition. So far as I am concerned, I would not object, except for one thing.

This bill calls for the exercise of very material generosity on the part of the Federal Government. There is a certain element which is active now in New Mexico and which, in my judgment, is not of the character to appreciate such generosity upon the part of the Federal Government. The Federal Government has some large obligations in New Mexico in connection with its Indians. We have passed one or two minor bills to permit the Indians to secure an enlarged acreage. We passed a bill the other day to give the Acoma Indians a large acreage of our Federal lands. My information is that protests against this from New Mexico, even from some active in politics in New Mexico, have come to Washington, and joined with that is the further fact that that bill seems to be tied up in committee in the Senate. There is other similar legislation that we ought to pass to permit the Navajo Indians to use their money to buy more land. As I understand it, there is a strong protest from New Mexico against that being done unless the land is allowed to be taxed. That is a precedent that we would approach with a good deal of diffidence. In view of the fact that there is such a sentiment in the gentleman's State that stands for the present in the way of the Federal Government performing its full duty to the Indians in New Mexico, it seems to me that the Federal Government ought to wait a little before it performs this very generous act of grace proposed in this bill. I feel obliged to object, although I shall be glad to reserve the objection if the gentleman from New Mexico, whom I see on his feet, desires to say anything.

Mr. MORROW. Will not the gentleman permit the bill to be passed over without prejudice, to be referred to later?

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall be glad to agree to that. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, as the gentleman from New Mexico has indicated, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

MONTEZUMA NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6854) to add certain lands to the Montezuma National Forest, Colo., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any oil or gas on these lands covered by this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. There may be some prospecting permits on some of it, but there is no oil or gas wells within 200 miles of them, I understand. The Agriculture Department is very much in favor of this bill. They say there is a hundred thousand dollars' worth of timber on this land, and they want the timber and the land converted into a forest reserve to save the timber.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is this a conservation measure?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; it is purely a conservation measure. I feel that it ought to pass. The people in that country are all in favor of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If it is a purely conservation measure there would not be any objection to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ought to say, in fairness to the House and to the Interior Department, that the Interior Department felt there should be further investigation or showing as to its timber on the land, and for that reason the Interior Department did not approve the bill. They did not disapprove of it unconditionally, but they are not fully satisfied as to the timber and forest character of the land. They do not know which.

The Agricultural Department has made two or three cruises of the timber and they do know the nature of the land and are quite anxious to have it put into a forest reserve, and everybody in that country is anxious that it be put in a forest reserve in order to conserve that timber, because it is now being slashed by everybody and there is no control or regulation. The practice is that anybody goes out and cuts and slashes as much timber as he pleases and may be arrested and fined $5 and then go out and do it again.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the Interior Department asks that the bill be not passed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the House thinks it ought to go over in order that the people may make a further showing, or that the Interior Department may make further investigation, I have no objection. But the Agricultural Department and the people out there want it, and I feel that it ought to be passed. Nobody can be injured and the Government and those counties and the people of those counties will all be benefited by this measure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But you want to reconcile the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior so that the House could be properly informed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I favor that being done, of course, if I can, but the people out there are very anxious that the bill be passed and in this case I know the Agricultural Department is right, and I don't think there is any justification for the failure of the Interior Department to approve the bill.

Mr. ARENTZ. Why does the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] ask whether it has oil and gas on it? You are merely taking this from under control of the Interior Department and putting it into the forest reserve. I ask why does the gentleman inquire if it has oil and gas on it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say that the idea is this, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. ARENTZ. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If that land remains outside of the forest reserve and on the public domain, as it is now, neither the Government or the Forest Service or the counties or road fund gets any benefit from the timber. It will just be all looted and destroyed, or left to fall down from old age.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is a forestation matter.

Mr. ARENTZ. But is not that forest conservation?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Putting it into the forest reserve will permit the cutting of the ripe timber, and protect the unripe timber. The timber will be cut, such of it as ought to be cut, in an orderly way by responsible people, and the Government will be paid for it, and counties will get their share of its proceeds.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. This is to be included in the forest reserve, and the Government will properly protect it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. It goes into the hands of the forest reserves, and they handle it in a definite and systematic way and help build our roads. This land is not agricultural land at all. It can not be irrigated and is too rough and broken for any farming purposes. It has no value itself, but the timber on it is valuable.

Mr. ARENTZ. What the gentleman from Colorado means is this: If it remains in the Interior Department he believes that anybody can go upon this land and without Government officials knowing anything about it can cut and haul the timber away. That is, if it remains under the public-land administration. But if it is under the Forest Service we retain such timber under the jurisdiction of the forest reserve, and the person who cuts the timber pays for it. That is what the gentleman from Colorado meant.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Forest Service officials and the responsible people of that vicinity say there is $100,000 worth of timber on the land, and the Forest Service can well afford to pay $1.25 an acre for it to the Ute Indians if they are required to do so, and still save $75,000 by taking and preserving this timber. That is what they say.

Mr. ARENTZ. It is also deemed advisable that it be placed under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service in order that these trees can be cut only when matured and the forest kept in such a way that new trees may spring up.

Mr. LEAVITT. Under the present condition there is no forest protection for it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE AT PHILIPPI, W. VA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10799) for the lease of land and the erection of a post office at Philippi, W. Va., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this matter was up on the last Consent Calendar day and I then proposed to the gentleman from West Virginia an amendment which would strike out the first provision of section 1, touching the leasing of this property to the Philippi Improvement Co., and then bring the description of the land over on page 2. I have such an amendment ready, and if the gentleman from West Virginia will accept it I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOWMAN. I accept the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With that amendment I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to (1) lease to the Philippi Improvement Co., an unincorporated association of the city of Philippi, W. Va., the lot of land at the corner of Main and Mason Streets in such city until the date of occupancy by the Post Office Department of a post-office building to be erected upon such land by the Philippi Improvement Co., and for 10 years after such date, (2) authorize the Philippi Improvement Co. to erect upon such land a building to be used as a post office, and (3) require of the Philippi Improvement Co. the execution of such bonds to the United States as are required of contractors for the erection of public buildings.

SEC. 2. That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to lease such building from the Philippi Improvement Co. for a term of 10 years after its occupancy at an annual rental of one-tenth of the total cost of such building, plus taxes, and plus interest at 6 per cent upon the difference between the total cost of the building and the quarterly installments of rent already paid, not including interest or taxes, but in no case shall the total payments provided for by this section exceed $52,600.

SEC. 3. That the expenses of such repairs, maintenance, and operation of the building as the Postmaster General may find necessary and proper during the period of the lease shall be borne by the Post Office Department.

SEC. 4. That upon the termination of the lease provided for in section 2, or upon payment by the Post Office Department at any time prior to the termination of such lease of the total cost of such building minus installments of rent already paid, such building shall become the property of the United States free and clear of all encumbrances.

SEC. 5. That there is authorized to be appropriated the amount necessary to pay the installments of rent provided for by section 2 and the expenses of repairs, maintenance, and operation provided for by section 3.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to (1) authorize the Philippi Improvement Co. to erect upon the lot of land at the corner of Main and Mason Streets, in the city of Philippi, W. Va., a building to be used as a post office, of a design, plan, and specifications approved by the Postmaster General; and (2) require of the Philippi Improvement Co. the execution of such bonds to the United States as are required of contractors for the erection of public buildings."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the remainder of the bill for amendment.

The remainder of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia just to get some information. What is the cost of this building to be?

Mr. BOWMAN. I think the contract was in the neighborhood of $36,000.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. What are the annual receipts of the post office in Philippi?

Mr. BOWMAN. They exceed $17,000.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Then the agreement that you have is that this association is to build this building and the Government is to pay it out in 10 years as rent, with 6 per cent interest on the investment?

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes; to amortize the entire amount by the payment of the rent for 10 years.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Then this gives us some hope of erecting other public buildings in the United States where the annual income is less than $20,000?

Mr. BOWMAN. That is correct.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I think it is a good precedent. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SUIT IN THE COURT OF CLAIMS ON BEHALF OF THE INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 491) authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11357) authorizing the State of Indiana to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Evansville, Ind.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. ROWBOTTOM. What is the reason for passing it over?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will state that at first I was constrained to object to this bill. I am conducting an investigation and there is certain information which I am trying to obtain in order to clear up some of the matters affecting this proposed bridge. I hope the gentleman will not object to having the bill go over without prejudice, otherwise I will have to object to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The reason I have this bill marked O. K. is because it provides that the State of Indiana shall act by and through its State highway commission.

Mr. SCHAFER. Has the gentleman looked into the law to see whether the State of Indiana can bond itself for the purpose of constructing a toll bridge over a river, which bridge will almost entirely be built in another State?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think that is our problem.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is the gentleman in favor of having States or municipalities construct toll bridges?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes. If it is a State or municipality, that is all right, and there can be no objection to that if it is a State of the subdivision of a State doing it.

Mr. SCHAFER. I think the bill should go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PORTO RICAN TAXPAYERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 754) for the relief of certain Porto Rican taxpayers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Three objections are required. The Chair notes one objection. Are there others? [After a pause.] The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if in any suit pending March 4, 1927, but since abated or dismissed solely by reason of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend and reenact sections 3, 20, 31, 33, 38, and 48 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled 'An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes,' as amended by an act approved June 7, 1924, and for the insertion of a new section in said act between sections 5 and 6 of said act, to be designated as '5a' of said act," approved March 4, 1927, the taxpayer had prior to such date obtained an injunction restraining the assessment or collection of any tax imposed by the laws of Porto Rico after trial on merits in the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico, or if in any such suit on appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the first circuit the right of any taxpayer to an injunction restraining the assessment or collection of any tax imposed by the laws of Porto Rico had been decreed, the treasurer of Porto Rico shall enforce the collection of the tax so enjoined or decreed by a suit at law instead of by attachment, embargo, distraint, or any other form of summary administrative proceeding. Notwithstanding the provisions of any existing statute of limitations, any such suit may be instituted at any time not later than one year after the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DESCHUTES PROJECT IN OREGON

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1186, to provide for the construction of the Deschutes project in Oregon, and for other purposes, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC LANDS IN THE STATE OF FLORIDA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11281) to authorize the disposition of certain public lands in the State of Florida.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his judgment and discretion, is hereby authorized to sell or exchange, in the manner hereinafter provided, any of those public lands of the United States situated in the State of Florida which were originally erroneously meandered and shown upon the official plats as water-covered areas, and all unreserved public lands, or any part of them, on the mainland within 3 miles of the coast and the islands situated in the waters of the coast or in the coastal waters of the State of Florida, withdrawn by Executive orders No. 4109, dated December 8, 1924, and No. 4262, dated July 3, 1925, and which are not lawfully appropriated by a qualified settler or entryman claiming under the public land laws.

SEC. 2. That any owner in good faith of lands shown by the official public-land surveys to be bounded by such erroneously meandered area, who acquired title to such land prior to this enactment, or any citizen of the United States who in good faith, under color of title, or claiming as a riparian owner, has prior to this act placed valuable improvements upon or reduced to cultivation any of the lands subject to the provisions of this section, shall have a preferred right to file in the office of the register of the United States land office of the district in which the lands are situated, and application to purchase the lands thus improved by him, at any time within 90 days from the date of the passage of this act, if the lands have been surveyed and plats filed in the United States land office; otherwise, within 90 days from the filing of such plat. Every application must be accompanied by satisfactory proof that the applicant is entitled to such preference right and that the lands which he applies to purchase are not in the legal possession of an adverse claimant under the public land laws: Provided, That no preference right of purchase under this section shall be recognized for a greater area than 80 acres to any one applicant, whether an individual, an association, or a corporation.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, if request therefor be presented within the time prescribed in section 2 hereof for filing preferred application to purchase, equitably adjust the claims of such owners among themselves and against the Government of the United States as may arise from such incomplete surveys. In such adjustment the Secretary may exchange Government lands for those in private ownership of approximately equal areas, and shall require such private owner to pay the Government the difference in values, to be fixed by the Secretary, where the Government land is found by him to be more valuable than that in private ownership.

SEC. 4. That upon the filing of an application to purchase or for exchange of any lands subject to the operation of sections 2 and 3 of this act, together with the required proof, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands described in said application to be appraised, said appraisal to be on the basis of the value of such lands at the date of appraisal, exclusive of any increased value resulting from the development or improvement of the tracts ought to be purchased or exchanged, by the applicant or his predecessor in interest, but inclusive of the stumpage value of any timber cut or removed by the applicant or his predecessor in interest.

SEC. 5. That an applicant who applies to purchase lands under the provisions of this act must within 30 days from receipt of notice of appraisal by the Secretary of the Interior, pay to the register of the United States land office the appraisal price of the lands, and an applicant for exchange must, within 30 days from notice of the amount due the Government, make payment thereof to the register of the land office.

SEC. 6. That any land subject to the provisions of this act not sold or exchanged in the manner hereinbefore provided may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be surveyed or subdivided into town lots or other suitable tracts, appraised and sold at public auction on such terms as he may by regulation prescribe: Provided, That any valid claim heretofore initiated in good faith and maintained in the manner provided by law prior to the date of this act may be hereafter perfected upon full compliance with the law under which such claim was initiated.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "waters," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "off."

Page 2, line 15, after the word "situated," strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "an."

On page 3, in line 23, strike out the word "ought" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sought."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION OF REGISTERS OF LOCAL LAND OFFICES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 766) to fix the compensation of registers of local land offices, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas and Mr. BLANTON objected.

USE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS BY THE TOWN OF PARCO, WYO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2858) to authorize the use of certain public lands by the town of Parco, Wyo., for a public aviation field.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have just conferred with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. WINTER], and I believe we ought to have an amendment in the bill to provide, as one of the conditions and terms of the lease, that the city of Parco should maintain this land at all times as an aviation field. The gentleman from Wyoming suggests that under the wording of the Senate bill on page 2, line 15—or in event it shall be deemed advisable

the Government can take it over. However, I believe that refers solely, judging from its place in the bill and its sequence, to the Government taking it over in the event of an emergency. Now, if it is the clear intent of the bill that one of the conditions and one of the terms of the lease is that the city of Parco must maintain this land as a public aviation field at all times, then it fully meets my objection.

Mr. WINTER. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] that with respect to maintenance, if the gentleman will look at line 7, page 1, he will see that the general purpose is establishment and maintenance.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the purpose of it; yes.

Mr. WINTER. And to that extent it fixes the obligation upon them to maintain it. The phrase in line 15, page 2, to me is clearly separable from the matter of emergency and means just what it says—that in the event the Government shall deem it advisable for any purpose—if they neglect to maintain it, for instance—the Government may take it back or may warn them they are in danger of having it forfeited.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman reported the bill from the Committee on Public Lands. Is it the intent of the committee and is it the intent of the bill itself to provide that one of the conditions of leasing this land to the city of Parco for $1 a year is that the city of Parco shall maintain it at all times as an aviation field?

Mr. WINTER. Absolutely. I would answer that question, "yes," without any hesitation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And if they fail to do so, then it is a breach of the lease and the Government can retake the land.

Mr. WINTER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If that is the intent of the committee I have no objection and shall not offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease, subject to valid existing rights, to the incorporated town of Parco, Wyo., the south half of section 12, township 21 north, range 86 west of the sixth principal meridian, for the establishment and maintenance of a public aviation field: Provided, That said lease shall be for a period of 20 years, and shall be subject to renewal for a like period, on condition that the town officials pay to the United States Government a rental of $1 per annum for the use of said land: Provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all gas, oil, coal, and other mineral deposits found in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: And provided further, That the mayor and council of Parco shall, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, agree to assume the expense of clearing and maintaining the aviation field, and shall also agree that Government departments and agencies operating aircraft shall always have free and unrestricted use of said field and the right to erect and install upon said land such structures and improvements as the heads of such departments and agencies may deem advisable, including facilities for maintaining supplies of fuel, oil, and other materials for operating aircraft, and that in case of emergency, or in event it shall be deemed advisable, the Government of the United States may assume absolute control of the management and operation of said field for military purposes.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AVIATION FIELDS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11990) to authorize the leasing of public lands for aviation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that while it is an excellent and a necessary policy at this time to grant lands for public aviation fields I believe we should not give such broad power and authority to the Secretary to lease these lands for private operation as this bill would give.

If the gentleman will accept an amendment that would permit the Secretary to lease these lands for public aviation fields to any State or to any county, municipality, township, or other legal subdivision of a State, then I believe we could safely grant this power; but if private companies are going to go around and grab up all suitable land now under the control of the department and establish aviation fields in this way we are going to cripple the development of aviation instead of aid it.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield further, in connection with what the gentleman from New York has said, I think this is an important bill, and I think we ought to keep in mind in connection with it that this is a problem that is now in its infancy and 20 years may make a lot of difference.

I have some other suggestions I would be glad to have the gentleman consider.

In the first place, while it is merely a matter of form, I think there should be an amendment in section 2. Also where it provides that the lease shall be for not more than 20 years and then shall be subject to renewal for a like period. I think that section ought to provide, "And in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior subject to renewal." At the end of 20 years there should be no question about the right of the Government to terminate the lease.

In the next place, at any time the Secretary of the Interior should be allowed to revoke the lease on notice of six months. We do not know what contingencies may come to pass.

Then, there is the third suggestion——

Mr. SINNOTT. If the gentleman will permit, the latter part of the section states that in case of an emergency the Government may take it over.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; for military purposes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not even like to have it tied to that. I realize it is an unlikely contingency that they would care to revoke the lease, but if they did I think they should have express authority to do so.

The third suggestion is that since aviation is in its infancy, and particularly as the bill stands now, the field might be in private management, and therefore I have drawn a further proviso to put at the end of the bill:

Provided further, That the fees or other charges for use of any such aviation field or any of its facilities or service by anyone other than an agency of the United States Government shall be subject to review by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That would be consistent with my amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection to the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume none of the amendments would be objectionable.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Surely the proposal of the gentleman to cancel the lease on six months' notice is not fair when you take into consideration the fact that the ground has to be leveled, it has to be rolled, they have to put in a lighting system, they have to put in a hangar and erect buildings of different kinds, including gasoline stations and submerged tanks; and it seems to me it would not be fair for the Government to step in on six months' notice and cancel the lease.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I will do this. I will not insist upon that amendment now. I would like to offer something of that kind and then leave it to the judgment of the committee. There is something in what the gentleman has said, and I would not require the gentleman to agree to that amendment.

Mr. ARENTZ. In view of the fact the Government has turned over all these airways to private interests under contract, it seems to me these men are doing a wonderful work.

Mr. CRAMTON. Suppose we leave that amendment out for the present. I understand the gentleman from Oregon is agreeable to these changes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] desires to confine it to municipalities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. State, county, municipal, township, or other legal subdivision of a State.

Mr. SINNOTT. Is the gentleman aware how the air mail is conducted?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The State owns the most of these fields.

Mr. SINNOTT. In Oregon I took it up with the people and I was informed by the department that those who have the contracts select their own fields.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Cleveland and Chicago own their own fields.

Mr. SINNOTT. In a great many places in the West we have no municipal fields.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This would not preclude leasing it to private concerns—you would have to bring in a separate bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman wants to confine it to municipalities?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. To States, county, municipality, township, or other legal subdivision.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not know whether this is wise or not. This is a new thing, but I am not a stickler for language in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With that understanding I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, to lease for aviation purposes any contiguous public lands of the United States, not to exceed 640 acres.

SEC. 2. That said lease shall be for a period not to exceed 20 years and subject to a renewal for a like period on condition that a rental of such sum as the Secretary may fix per year for the use of said land shall be paid to the United States: Provided, That Government departments and agencies operating aircraft shall always have free and unrestricted use of said lands and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the right to erect and install upon said lands such structures and improvements as the heads of such departments and agencies may deem advisable, including facilities for maintaining supplies of fuel, oil, and other materials for operating aircraft, and that in case of emergency or in event that it shall be deemed advisable, the Government of the United States may assume absolute control of the management and operation of said lands for military purposes.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant permission, under such rules as he may prescribe, for the establishment of beach lights in aid of aviation upon any public lands of the United States, on tracts of appropriate size, and may withdraw lands for such purposes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "lease," insert the following: "To any State, county, municipality, township, or other legal subdivision of a State."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, page 1, after the word "exceed," insert "in any one case."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, page 1, after the word "and," insert "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19, on page 2, insert: "Provided further, That the fees or other charges for use of such aviation field or any of its facilities or services by anyone other than an agent of the United States Government shall be subject to review by the Secretary of Commerce."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CARE AND TREATMENT OF MEMBERS OF THE CIVILIAN COMPONENTS OF THE ARMY WHO SUFFER PERSONAL INJURY IN LINE OF DUTY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2948) to amend section 6, act of March 4, 1923, as amended, so as to better provide for care and treatment of members of the civilian components of the Army who suffer personal injury in line of duty, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, is there any gentleman here from the Committee on Military Affairs who can explain the meaning of the proviso on page 4, line 8, which reads:

Provided, That the pay and allowances to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and the Enlisted Reserve Corps of the Army on active duty shall not be limited hereby.

Mr. SPEAKS. We are willing to accept an amendment striking out the matter in lines 8, 9, and 10, referred to by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With that understanding, I will not object.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, we are considering a bill to amend section 6 of the act of March 4, 1923. I want to call attention of the committee to certain amendments which change the bill in very important particulars from the bill submitted by the War Department. While I am earnestly in favor of the bill as submitted by the War Department, I would like to make some further search in regard to the committee amendments, and I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

Mr. SPEAKS. The purpose of this bill is to protect young men attending encampments of the National Guard, the reserve officers', or the citizens' training camps.

For instance, a boy in attendance upon one of these military training camps breaks a leg or contracts a contagious disease. The next day the camp is ended and all the boys are returned to their home stations. What is to become of the unfortunate youngster then in the temporary camp hospital? Shall he be sent home in his disabled condition to be a burden and expense to his family, or shall the Government make provision for his reasonable care and attending responsibilities?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The bill as submitted by the Secretary of War authorizes the admission of men who are injured while in the Officers' Reserve Corps or any training camp to the Government hospitals. That is all right. I am strictly in favor of that. But the committee has adopted an amendment which says they "shall also be entitled to such further medical treatment for such injury or disease as is reasonably necessary after their arrival at their home." What facilities has the Government to carry on home treatment? How will it be done? Who will give the treatment? How will payment for it be made?

The Secretary of War very properly recommended that all of these patients be admitted to the Government hospitals and that the injured man's pay continue while he is in the hospital. I have no objection to that. That would be very desirable. However, when you enter the field of having the Government assume financial responsibility for home treatment, you are entering upon rather a large field, if you apply it to all of the beneficiaries of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Speaker, existing laws extend such benefits to Federal employees, and it seems entirely just that these training-camp casualties should become responsibilities of the Government. In this case, we are appealing to young men from all sections of the United States. The purpose is to make the training universal. It is highly important that great care be exercised to avoid occasion for just criticism of the system. I understand the point raised by the gentleman from Texas and commend his judgment in bringing it to attention. Since the President must approve the regulations governing the matter, it appears to be properly safeguarded.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Did the Committee on Military Affairs undertake to compare this provision with other provisions of the law as applied to men who are injured in the Regular Army service?

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes. The attitude of the Military Affairs Committee is this: On matters involving the creation of a governmental policy, the responsibility and duty devolves upon Congress, not on the Secretary of War. He is merely the administrative official. It is the duty of Congress to determine the system, and it is the duty of the Secretary of War to carry it out.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am not going to take the responsibility of objecting, if the Committee on Military Affairs has gone into this matter with care.

Mr. SPEAKS. We have, thoroughly.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And weighed just exactly what it would mean?

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is understood that my amendment shall be accepted.

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes; and if the gentleman desires I shall offer it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act approved March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to extend the benefits of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, to validate certain payments made to the National Guard and reserve officers and warrant officers, and for other purposes," as amended by an act approved June 3, 1924, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard who suffer personal injury in line of duty while at encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, or at service schools, under the provisions of sections 94, 97, and 99 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended; members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the enlisted reserve corps of the Army who suffer personal injury in line of duty while on active duty under proper orders; and persons hereinbefore described who may now be undergoing hospital treatment at Government expense for injuries so sustained; shall, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, when hospital treatment is necessary for appropriate treatment of such injury, be entitled to hospital treatment, including medical treatment, at Government expense, until the disability resulting from such injury can not be materially improved by further hospital treatment, and during the period of hospitalization to the same pay and allowances, whether in money or in kind, that they were entitled to receive at the time such injury was suffered, and to transportation to their homes at Government expense when discharged from hospital. Officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard who suffer personal injury in line of duty when participating in aerial flights prescribed under the provisions of section 92 of said national defense act as amended shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, be entitled to the same hospital treatment, including medical treatment, pay and allowances, and transportation to their homes, as if such injury as has been suffered in line of duty at encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises under the aforementioned section 94 of the national defense act; and members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and enlisted reserve corps of the Army injured in line of duty while voluntarily participating in aerial flights in Government-owned aircraft by proper authority as an incident to their military training, but not on active duty, shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, be entitled to the same hospital treatment, including medical treatment, pay and allowances, and transportation to their homes, as if such injury had been suffered while on active duty under proper orders. No person hospitalized under the foregoing provisions of this section on account of any personal injury suffered shall be entitled to receive, in connection with such injury, pay or allowance other than hospital treatment, including medical treatment, and transportation, as herein provided, for more than six months; but for any remaining period of such hospitalization he shall be entitled to subsistence at Government expense: Provided, That the pay and allowances of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and the enlisted reserve corps of the Army on active duty shall not be limited hereby. Members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and members of the civilian training corps who suffer personal injury in line of duty while at camps of instruction under the provisions of sections 47a and 47d of said national defense act as amended shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, be entitled to hospital treatment, including medical treatment, and transportation to their homes, as in the case of persons hereinbefore described, and to subsistence during hospitalization. If the death of any person mentioned herein occurs while he is undergoing the training or hospital treatment contemplated by this section, the United States shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, pay for burial expenses and the return of the body to his home a sum not to exceed $100.

"The validation, under this section as heretofore standing, of certain expenditures previously made by the Government shall not be disturbed."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2:

Line 2, after the word "injury," insert "or contract disease."

Line 3, after the word "while," insert "enroute to or from and while."

Line 8, after the word "injury," insert "or contract disease."

Line 17, after the word "injury," insert "or disease."

Line 21, after the word "suffered," insert "or disease contracted."

Line 23, after the word "hospital," insert a semicolon and the words "they shall also be entitled to such further medical treatment for such injury or disease as is reasonably necessary after arrival at their homes under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President."

Page 3:

Line 10, after the word "homes," insert "and further medical treatment after arrival at their homes."

Line 13, after the word "while," insert "en route to or from and while."

Line 18, after the word "homes," insert "and further medical treatment after arrival at their homes."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out the colon, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9 and 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BAILIFFS AND CRIERS IN UNITED STATES COURTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11994) to abolish bailiffs and criers in the United States courts, and to provide for the performance of their duties by United States marshals and their deputies, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NORTON of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DYER. Is there any statement that we could make that would remove the gentleman's objection?

Mr. NORTON of Nebraska. I want to look into the matter more.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman permit the bill to be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. NORTON of Nebraska. Not to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska objects.

ELIMINATING THE RENEWAL OF OATH OF OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 45) to eliminate the renewal of oath of office of Government employees under certain conditions.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That employees of the executive departments and independent establishments who upon original appointment have subscribed to the oath of office required by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be required to renew the said oath because of any change in status so long as their services are continuous in the same executive department or independent establishment, unless, in the opinion of the head of the executive department or independent establishment, the public interests require such renewal.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "section," strike out "1757 of the Revised Statutes" and insert "16 of title 5 of the United States Code."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to have that amendment voted down. I think the reference to the Revised Statutes should remain in the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RENT, FUEL, LIGHT, AND EQUIPMENT TO FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7900) granting allowances for rent, fuel, light, and equipment to postmasters of the fourth class, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill is of a good deal of importance; I think of too much importance to be considered on the Consent Calendar, and especially in view of the opposition of the department. Therefore I am obliged to object.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the last Congress.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes; it passed unanimously.

Mr. RAMSEYER. As the gentleman will recollect, it was objected to by one individual only on the first consent day, and on the next consent day it passed the House unanimously and was sent to the Senate, and would have been acted upon favorably there but for the filibuster during the closing days of the last session of Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. I notice this, that the gentleman's committee has reported out a great number of bills adding to the cost of the Postal Service, along with the bill the other day reducing the revenues of the Postal Service. Most of the bills increasing the cost of the service are in opposition to the express reports and arguments of the department. That may all be desirable, but I think that to override the department on a new venture of this kind, paying storekeepers for light and fuel for their own stores, which would be operated anyway, would be inexpedient. I think it should be brought up with a chance for full discussion. I think it is not the right kind of a bill to be considered on the Consent Calendar, where everyone is impatient of debate.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In the report accompanying this bill and the one following we present all the facts from the department in opposition to this one and the one following.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are quite a number of others on the calendar.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The others have the approval of the department.

Mr. CRAMTON. My recollection is that some of the others are opposed by the department.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Two of the bills on this calendar were introduced at the request of the department.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I feel that it is a kind of bill that is not for the Consent Calendar and ought to be defeated.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is there not a report from the department?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; a very unfavorable report.

Mr. McMILLAN. That same report has been before the Congress for several sessions.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sorry that more Members have not read it.

Mr. McMILLAN. The propositions advanced in the department's report apply to conditions 40 years ago. The present conditions do not apply. There ought to be some explanation of the reasoning in connection with it. The conditions prevailing now in the post offices are in no sense the same as those of 40 years ago.

Mr. EDWARDS. The salaries of these postmasters are so meager in these small post offices that the postmasters can hardly get along. In some of the fourth-class post offices they have rural carriers getting $150 a month or more, and the postmaster's salary is practically nothing. Still, the postmasters have the responsibility on them of the whole thing. I have not read the report, because I assumed it was a favorable report. This is a simple matter of justice to the fourth-class postmasters. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not object to the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I also hope the gentleman will not object to it. The postmaster is responsible for the office, even when he has two or three rural carriers, and he has to provide the building and fuel and light. I speak from personal observation and experience, because I have been in that business myself heretofore. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his objection. I know he would if he realized that it is difficult to maintain a proper grade of civilization in some of the rural districts of Minnesota under the conditions that prevail there in these fourth-class post offices.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I am not opposed to the maintenance of civilization in Minnesota and will withdraw my objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over temporarily for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over temporarily. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Reserving the right to object, that request is very unusual.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Just for a few minutes; that is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES IN POST OFFICES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5681) to amend the act of February 28, 1925, fixing the compensation of employees in post offices.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That supervisory employees, special clerks, clerks, substitute clerks, laborers, and employees of the motor-vehicle service, in first and second class post offices, carriers and substitute carriers in the City Delivery Service, and railway postal clerks, substitute railway postal clerks, and laborers in the Railway Mail Service, who are required to perform night work, shall be paid extra for such work at the rate of 10 per cent of their hourly pay per hour: Provided, That night work is defined as any work done between the hours of 6 o'clock p. m. and 6 o'clock a. m.

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "That," insert the words "after July 1, 1928"; and on line 4, after the word "clerk," insert the words "watchmen, messengers"; and on line 6, after the word "offices," strike out the comma and insert a semicolon; and on line 7, after the word "service," strike out the comma and insert a semicolon.

Amend the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RENT, FUEL, LIGHT, AND EQUIPMENT TO FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to (H. R. 7900) granting allowances for rent, fuel, light, and equipment to postmasters of fourth class, and for other purposes, which was passed over temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to the bill just passed over. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after July 1, 1928, postmasters of the fourth class shall be paid as allowances for rent, fuel, light, and equipment an amount equal to 15 per cent of the compensation earned in each quarter, such allowances to be paid at the end of each quarter at the same time and in the same manner as their regular compensation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 339) to increase the effectiveness of expenditures for roads, bridges, and trails in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, here is a bill which looks as though it might be of a good deal of importance, and there is no recommendation from any authority of the Government whatever.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this bill was drafted by the War Department, and so far as it applies to roads it would be referred to that department. We considered that the recommendation was in the preparation of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, the House has not been furnished with the information that it was prepared by the department. I have noticed a number of bills affecting Alaska, and none of them has had any report from any department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are a great many bills affecting Alaska about which there is some question as to where jurisdiction would lie, particularly with regard to mining.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of "An act to amend the laws governing labor or improvements upon mining claims in Alaska," approved March 2, 1907, be, and it hereby is, amended by appending thereto the following provisos:

"Provided, That in lieu of the labor or improvements to be made during each year under existing law on or for the benefit of mining claims in Alaska, the owner thereof may, if he so elects, pay the amount of said assessment work into the 'Alaska fund,' created by section 1 of 'An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes,' approved January 27, 1905, and amended May 14, 1906: Provided further, That all such moneys so paid shall be available for the construction and maintenance of roads, bridges, and trails within the Territory of Alaska under the same conditions as the portion of the 'Alaska fund' now authorized by law for that purpose: Provided further, That all such moneys collected in any mining and recording precinct shall, so far as practicable, considering natural topographic features, be expended within the limits of such mining and recording precinct: Provided further, That in lieu of paying the amount of said assessment work into the 'Alaska fund,' the owner may, if he so elects, perform, under the direction of the board of road commissioners, an equivalent amount of labor upon a regularly laid-out route in his mining and recording precinct: And provided further, That the owner of such claims shall file with the recorder of said mining and recording precinct in which said claim is situated the recept issued to him to cover said payment in cash or equivalent labor attached to a certificate of said owner or his agent that said payment in cash or equivalent labor is made in lieu of the performance of the assessment work provided by law."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "of," insert the word "placer."

Page 2, line 19, after the word "such," insert the words "placer mining."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling of the word "receipt," on page 2, line 21.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JUDGES OF THE TERRITORIES AND INSULAR POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11463) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the Territories and insular possessions of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the committee has reported an amendment to increase the salary of each of the justices of the Circuit Court of the Territory of Hawaii from $6,000 to $7,500. I presume the justices of the Circuit Court of Hawaii would correspond to the justices of the circuit court of most of the States, and I think a salary of $6,000 a year for those who perform those duties would be reasonable and generous, and I shall have no objection to the consideration of the bill if it will be agreed that the committee amendment granting those increases will not be pressed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We do not pay those salaries, do we?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Those salaries are paid by the Federal Government. The appointments are made by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall be compelled to object to the bill if it is insisted that such a provision be carried in the bill; otherwise I shall not object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I will not insist upon the committee amendment, if the gentleman will not object.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection if it is understood that the committee amendment will not be pressed. I do not feel that this additional expenditure of $12,000 per annum is justified.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following salaries shall be paid to the several judges hereinafter mentioned, namely:

To the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii, $10,500 per year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $10,000 per year.

To the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Porto Rico, $10,500 per year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $10,000 per year.

To the judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands of the United States, $7,500 per year.

To the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, $10,500 per year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $10,000 per year.

To the judge of the United States Court of China, $10,000 per year.

SEC. 2. That all of said salaries shall be paid in equal monthly installments.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the first day of the first month next following its approval.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, after line 7, insert: "To each of the justices of the Circuit Court of the Territory of Hawaii the sum of $7,500."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the committee I do not insist upon this amendment, in accordance with the agreement I have made with the gentleman from Texas. However, the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON] would like to make a statement.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The amendment to this bill regarding circuit judges in the Territory of Hawaii was put in at my request and for reasons which should be perfectly obvious to a person studying the requirements and the business that is conducted in the Territory of Hawaii. We conduct there every year a business amounting to between $180,000,000 and $200,000,000. A good lawyer of the caliber suitable for a position as a justice earns in the Territory anywhere from $10,000 to $15,000 a year. It has been recognized by the legislature of the Territory that in accordance with the general pay of such lawyers these justices were underpaid, and accordingly at the last session of the legislature provision was made whereby until the year 1929 the Territorial government would make up the difference between the salary allowed to those judges paid from Federal sources and the salary which they considered was really suitable for such an avocation.

Now, besides this, in order to show you that the lawyers in the Territory from whom these judges come are unable to hold the positions and do justice to their own families, it is a fact that within nine years—and these judges are appointed for four-year terms—there has been a complete turnover of the supreme court three times. Of the circuit judges, of whom there are eight appointed for four years each, there have been 13 renewals inside of the nine-year period.

Therefore, and only in order not to imperil the bill, I shall ask permission to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the action of the gentleman from Texas, my colleague [Mr. BLACK], in objecting to the committee amendment has saved the Treasury of the United States $12,000 a year for certainly an indefinite period of time.

This action on the part of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is similar to many other acts of his, by which the Treasury of this Government has been saved, I think I may say literally, thousands of dollars each year. Through his alertness, his devotion to duty, his high courage, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] renders invaluable service as a Member of this body. [Applause.]

If it be true that capacity for hard work is genius, then the gentleman from Texas is indeed a genius. Day after day on this floor we see evidences of his constant and indefatigable work. He is a striking example of how a Member of this House may be an able, diligent, and faithful Representative of his constituency, and at the same time a vigilant and most useful Member of this body. [Applause.]

I have taken this opportunity to voice my esteem and my appreciation of the gentleman from Texas and of his important work in this body, and I am sure this esteem and this appreciation are shared by the entire membership of this House. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. On page 2 I move to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 2, strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. DYER. I will state, Mr. Speaker, the reason I offer this amendment is because a bill has already passed the House that takes care of the judges of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will permit, has the bill which was agreed to in the House passed the Senate?

Mr. DYER. No; but it has passed the House.

Mr. MICHENER. If it has not passed the Senate I will be constrained to object to the amendment, because the provision can be taken out of the bill very readily when it goes to the Senate if the other bill does become the law.

Mr. DYER. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE JUDICIAL CODE OF THE UNITED STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8270) to amend section 52 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the matter of amending the Judicial Code of the United States is more or less of a serious matter. I see the author of the bill here and I would like for him to explain to the House exactly what the passage of this bill would mean.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will permit, I am not the author of the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] is the author of the bill. I do not care to take up any time of the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] is not here. I understand objection is going to be made, and if that is true and the gentleman is convinced, I do not care to take the time of the House and delay other legislation.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I did not intend to offer any objection myself. I simply wanted to be sure what the bill means.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I believe one of our colleagues from Pennsylvania may make the objection.

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NEW JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF INDIANA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2752) to amend section 80 of the Judicial Code to create a new judicial district in the State of Indiana, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 80 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 80. The State of Indiana shall constitute two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Indiana.

"A. For the purpose of holding terms of court the southern district of Indiana shall be divided into four divisions, constituted as follows: The Indianapolis division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Bartholomew, Boone, Brown, Clinton, Decatur, Delaware, Fayette, Fountain, Franklin, Hamilton, Hancock, Hendricks, Henry, Howard, Johnson, Madison, Marion, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Randolph, Rush, Shelby, Tipton, Union, and Wayne; the Terre Haute division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Clay, Greene, Knox, Owen, Parke, Putnam, Sullivan, Vermilion, and Vigo; the Evansville division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Davies, Dubois, Gibson, Martin, Perry, Pike, Posey, Spencer, Vanderburg, and Warwick; and the New Albany division, which shall include the territory embraced within the counties of Clark, Crawford, Dearborn, Floyd, Harrison, Jackson, Jefferson, Jennings, Lawrence, Ohio, Orange, Ripley, Scott, Switzerland, and Washington.

The terms of the District Court for the Northern District of Indiana shall be held for the Fort Wayne division at Fort Wayne on the first Mondays of April and December of each year; for the South Bend division at South Bend on the first Mondays of October and February of each year; for the Hammond division at Hammond on the first Mondays of March and November of each year. When the time fixed as above for the sitting of a court shall fall on a legal holiday, the terms shall begin upon the next day following. Terms of the district court shall not be limited to any particular number of days nor shall it be necessary for any term to adjourn by reason of the intervention of the term of court elsewhere; but the term about to commence in another division may be postponed or adjourned over until the business of the court in session is concluded. A grand jury summoned to attend a term of court held in any division of either of the districts as above provided may investigate and find an indictment, or make a presentment, for any crime or offense committed in the district, whether or not the crime or offense was committed within the division in which the jury is in session.

"3. A. The senior district judge for the district of Indiana in office immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be the district judge for the southern district as constituted by this act; the junior district judge for the district of Indiana immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be the district judge for the northern district as constituted by this act; and the district attorney and marshal for the district of Indiana in office immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be during the remainder of their present terms of office the district attorney and marshal for the southern district as constituted by this act.

"B. The President is authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district attorney and a marshal for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Indiana.

"4. A. The clerk of the court for the southern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Evansville, and New Albany, and the clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Fort Wayne, South Bend, and Hammond. Such offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. Each deputy clerk shall keep in his office full records of all transactions and proceedings of the district court held at that place in which the office is located.

"5. A. The following act is repealed: 'An act to authorize the appointment of an additional district judge in Indiana for the district of Indiana and to establish judicial division lines, and for other purposes, being the act approved January 16, 1925.'"

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "Warwick" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Warrick."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WATER RIGHTS ON THE BOISE RECLAMATION PROJECT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11360) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey or transfer certain water rights in connection with the Boise reclamation project.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, as the bill stands the money that would come back—money which when spent by the Government was charged to the construction cost—when it comes back it ought to be credited to the construction cost. I have two amendments, and if these are adopted I would have no objection to the bill.

Mr. SMITH. I will accept the proposed amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to convey upon such terms and conditions as he may see fit, either at public auction to the best bidder or at private sale at such prices as he may fix, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in or to certain Ridenbaugh or Nampa and Meridian irrigation district water rights, not heretofore disposed of, obtained when land with appurtenant water rights was purchased by the United States for the Deer Flat Reservoir. The proceeds received by the United States from the sale of such rights shall be used toward or credited to part payment of that part of the cost of the operation and maintenance of the reserved works of the Arrowrock division, Boise project, chargeable to the board of control of the said Arrowrock division, and the charges next coming due therefor shall be reduced accordingly. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit the water to which the United States is entitled under the said Ridenbaugh rights to be taken into and distributed through the canal system of the Arrowrock division of the Boise project by the board of control and used or disposed of by the said board of control for the benefit of the said Arrowrock division.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "operation and maintenance of the reserved works" and insert in lieu thereof the word "construction"; in line 6, after the word "division," insert a period and strike out the words "and the charges next coming due therefor shall be reduced accordingly."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO PERMIT COWLITZ TRIBE OF INDIANS TO FILE SUIT IN COURT OF CLAIMS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 167) to amend the act of February 12, 1925 (Public, No. 402, 68th Cong.), so as to permit the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians to file suit in the Court of Claims under said act.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington, author of the bill, is not able to be present, and at his request I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And I ask the same consideration of the next bill. There are three of these claim bills, and I think it might be well to look into them first.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will until it is reached.

Without objection, the bill went over without prejudice.

TO PERMIT THE COURT OF CLAIMS TO HEAR AND ADJUDICATE CLAIMS OF THE SHOSHONE INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8280) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians may have against the United States.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, I have gone over the bill and I have in mind three amendments that I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have no objection to the gentleman's doing that, but I hope at the conclusion of his statement the bill may go over.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman can make that request later. I would like to call attention to the proposed amendments. In section 3 I want to make it clear that any payment the Government has made for the benefit of these Indians may be used as a set-off, whether specifically appropriated or otherwise. That is to say, put in a period after the words "Shoshone Indians" in line 4, so that it will read as follows:

Any payment which may have been made by the United States, including gratuities for the benefit of any of said Indians or for their support and civilization, shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in said suit.

Then page 4, in connection with the attorney fee, insert "in no event more than $25,000."

The third one would be in line 11, page 4, where it provides for 5 per cent interest, change it to 4 per cent, which is customary in all these funds.

After the word "decree," in line 12, page 4, insert "and shall be subject to appropriation by Congress only for the health, education, and industrial advancement of said Indians."

Mr. COLTON. In regard to the first amendment, I happen to know that there have been some advances for school purposes.

It would hardly seem that that ought to be used as a set-off against the Indians, because the Government has advanced in the past specific sums for the building of schoolhouses and the payment of their tuition in the public schools of my State.

Mr. CRAMTON. These claims are based on more or less of a shadow of right. I anticipate that the Government will go on generously spending its money for the benefit of these Indians; but if we are to have a trial, it should be on the basis of fairness. If the Government spent money for the benefit of the Indians who are exempt from taxation, the Government should have the right of set-off.

Mr. COLTON. There are many of them not exempt from taxation. I think the gentleman's position is probably well taken, although I think in this particular case he will find on investigation that this claim is really more than a shadow, that the Government has already settled with two tribes of Shoshone Indians, and these Indians, in justice and equity, are entitled to the same consideration.

Mr. CRAMTON. That fact appealed to me as justifying its going to the Court of Claims, but the statement itself shows something of a shadow. For instance, the three tribes are said to have been tenants in common. That is a very polite term to use in connection with the character of their occupation, no doubt, but we have taken care of the other two and we ought to take care of this one.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Do I understand that two of the other tribes of Shoshone Indians have been granted leave to bring their suits in the Court of Claims?

Mr. COLTON. Yes; more than that. The Government went ahead and made a direct settlement with them in complete satisfaction of their claims to the land held by the three tribes as tenants in common. The Government offered a small amount of land to the northwestern band. I am sure, however, it could not have been intended as a complete settlement. The Indians refused the offer made to them by the Government, and still insisted on their claim to a settlement, and demanded the same rights that had been accorded to the eastern and western bands. The matter has been pending since then.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. What is the probable amount involved?

Mr. COLTON. I do not know that I could answer that.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, if the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] accepts the last amendment that I have suggested, so that the money will not be frittered away in cash payments, and is made available only for health, education, and industrial advancement, I think it will very materially alter the situation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Do I understand that the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Michigan will be agreed to?

Mr. COLTON. Of course the amendments have been just presented, but really I can see no objection. I think the money ought to be used for the benefit of those Indians, and not given to them in such a way that they can fritter any of the money away.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I understand this bill has been reported favorably by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COLTON. Yes; and by the Director of the Budget.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in view of these circumstances I withdraw my objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. There is an identical Senate bill to this which has been passed by the Senate. May that be considered by unanimous consent and the amendments proposed offered to that the same as to the House bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. COLTON. Then I ask unanimous consent that the House consider the identical Senate bill, S. 710, which has been already passed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitations, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims which the Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians may have against the United States arising under or growing out of the treaty of July 2, 1863 (18 Stat. 685–2 Kappler, 848); treaty of July 30, 1863 (13 Stat. 863–2 Kappler, 850); act of Congress approved December 15, 1874 (18 Stat. 291); and any subsequent treaty act of Congress, or Executive order, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within five years from the date of the approval of this act; and such suit shall make the Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claims under contract with the Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys for said Indians to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said Indians.

SEC. 3. That in said suit the Court of Claims shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate all claims which the United States may have against the said Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians; but any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim against the United States shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in such suit; and any such payment, if made, shall be confined to payments made under the treaties or acts of Congress hereinbefore set forth.

SEC. 4. That from the decision of the Court of Claims in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party, as in other cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 5. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper process and orders to bring in and make parties to such suit any and all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

SEC. 6. A copy of the petition shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in such case.

SEC. 7. Upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in preparation and prosecution of the suit, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians, or any of them, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said bands.

SEC. 8. The balance of the proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered for said Northwestern Bands of Shoshone Indians shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of the judgment or decree.

Mr. CRAMTON (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, if anyone desires to have the bill read at length, I do not desire to interfere with his wishes, but otherwise some time could be saved by eliminating the reading at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Senate bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "Indians," strike out the semicolon and the balance of the section and insert in lieu thereof a period and the words "Any payment which may have been made by the United States, including gratuities for the benefit of any of said Indians or for their support and civilization, shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in said suit."

Page 3, line 25, after the word "recovery," insert the words "and in no event more than $25,000."

After the word "decree," in line 12, page 4, insert "and shall be subject to appropriation by Congress only for the health, education, and industrial advancement of said Indians."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan state whether 4 per cent is the usual amount allowed?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is what I understand is customary.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The similar House bill (H. R. 8280) was laid on the table.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of flood control.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Construction costs	296,400,000	296,400,000
Railroad adjustments	71,000,000	71,000,000
Highway changes	20,000,000	20,000,000
Total named items	926,873,920	1,061,742,400

But some construe the Jadwin report as appraisal of total damage at $224 per acre for all acreage. In that case the cost in damages—

Would be		$1,354,528,000
Of which the Government would pay 80 per cent (Jadwin report)	$1,083,622,400
Then add construction cost	296,400,000	296,400,000
Making either	1,380,022,400 or	1,850,928,000

Think of it, a total cost of approximately a billion and a half in damages to initiate the plan, or about $1,250 or $1,500 per square mile of basin!

But the above is not a starter to what the damages would finally be.

The estimated flooded area of the Jadwin plan is 19,000,000 acres, or equal to 29,687½ square miles.

In section 4 the Jones bill assumes liabilities for damages in carrying out the Jadwin plan. What will that amount be? You may ask Jones, but only God knows!

IN ITS PRESENT FORM, PRESIDENTIAL VETO INEVITABLE

The President sees the dangers of this bill, its unlimited drafts upon the tax moneys of the people. In their protection, he has forcibly indicated to Congress time and again his opposition to such a measure with its enormous possibilities for waste and extravagance. In order that the moneys of the people may be properly protected, the country can expect nothing less than the veto of such an ill-considered measure should it be presented to him in its present form for his approval.

ITS PASSAGE IN THE SENATE MARKED THE END OF A PERFECT DAY

In one respect the Jones bill is a masterpiece of legislative art. It has no limitations to mar its symmetry and beauty. It was so pleasing to the artists that not a single voice was raised in its criticism. It was so enthralling that the rivalry of the artists was submerged in the thrilling inspiration of the moment and the usual time for discussion was devoted to eulogistic felicitations and congratulation. The artists felt they had at last succeeded in creating a piece of legislative work without limitation, that its walls were so flexible as to expand to every suggestion of financial speculation, that it was filled to overflowing with the wine and oil of plenty, that its provisions were so clear that all might read and understand, "Get a plenty while you're gettin'"! It was truly the end of a perfect day for cooperation, collaboration, and celebration.

RECORD OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION

The Mississippi River Commission was created in 1879. It was given full and complete jurisdiction over flood-protective projects of the river. Later on that jurisdiction was enlarged to include the tributaries.

This commission has at all times been controlled by the Army engineers of the War Department. For 48 years it has been charged with the responsibility of protecting the people from the devastation of floods. During this period it has expended $228,000,000 of the tax moneys of the Treasury of the United States. It has done more than that. It has expended in the way of contributions from the settlers along the lower Mississippi River a vast total of $292,000,000, making a total expenditure of $520,000,000!

In its annual report for 1926 the commission assured the country that—

> The Mississippi flood-control work is now in a condition to prevent the disastrous effects of floods.

During this period of 48 years the waters descended and the floods came, and the levees were washed away and set back and rebuilt, each time with more tax moneys and contributions. The commission made its annual reports that all was well, drew its salary, and the country was lulled to sleep with that assurance, only to be awakened by our greatest peacetime disaster in the flood of 1927, destroying hundreds of lives and millions in property values.

When relief work is again considered the Secretary of War comes forward and gravely informs the country that "We must prepare a plan." Think of it! Forty-eight years of flood-control work under the direction of the Army engineers without a plan! Not even a plan to show for its expenditures of $520,000,000 and 48 years of administration! Nothing to show for its experience but washed-out levees, filled-up channel, and a shallow, broadened river overflowing the lowlands after every freshet!

THE FOLLY OF THE LEVEE SYSTEM

In 1916 Lyman E. Cooley, a waterway engineer of the very highest international reputation, pointed out to the Senate that in other countries the idea that it is possible to confine great rivers has long since been abandoned, and added:

> The weakness in the plan for levee control lies in the fact that, while the height of the levee may be established, there is no assurance whatever that in some great flood, which may just as well come next year as a hundred years from now, the levee system will be adequate to carry the water.

George H. Maxwell, executive chairman of the National Reclamation Association, emphasized the stupidity of pursuing the fallacious illusion that the stupendous floods of a mighty river like the Mississippi, formed by flood combinations from five separate river systems, can be confined all the way from Cairo to the Gulf between two mud walls which are the equivalent of earthen dams built on the surface of the ground without any other foundation.

> As a result of this * * * life and property in many communities once safe are now jeopardized, and cities, towns, villages, and densely populated rural districts are menaced with a final catastrophic deluge in some great flood of the future that will appall the world.

In 1916, before a Senate committee, Lyman E. Cooley called attention to the folly of the levee system:

> You are going to build levees; you have been building them; and this is the proposition you are up against: You wipe out all the natural overflow regulation and constrain the entire volume to the river channel and take it as it comes. The maximum volume is greatly increased, the flood height is raised, the velocity is accelerated. You have greatly increased the dynamic energy of the stream. You have not only magnified the surplus horsepower, but you have also increased the speed of application, thus multiplying the destructive powers; in other words, you have stimulated the energy, filed the teeth, and ground the claws of your tiger.

Could any body of men, except a body controlled by the power of bureaucracy, allow such a statement as that to pass unheeded?

ENOUGH OUGHT TO BE ENOUGH

Thus the Mississippi River Commission, controlled by the Army engineers, not only have wasted 48 years, but $228,000,000 of the tax moneys of the people and $292,000,000 of contributions.

But that is not all! Because of their lack of constructive ability in failing, during all these years, to formulate a long-time program, comprehensive and commensurate with the needs of the situation, and thus afford adequate protection to the people, untold destruction of life and property, without precedent or parallel in this country, has taken place. Having eyes, they saw not; having ears, they heard not; and having hands, they now hold them up in holy horror at such a catastrophe!

After such failure, humiliating to the American people and desolating to the flood sufferers, one would ordinarily think that Army control would quietly retire. But no! It continues to thrust itself into every proposed act—insisting upon its superiority and qualifications for the job.

Enough ought to be enough—but since it is not, the truth should be told!

A COMPREHENSIVE PLAN THE FIRST ESSENTIAL

Flood relief should be taken out of the control of the Army engineers. The country has had enough of their domination. The country demands a constructive program. That can only be secured through a civilian commission. A commission composed of a civilian majority should be created. The personnel of the commission should be composed of men of outstanding executive business ability, a civil and Army engineer. Full jurisdiction should be given to this commission to employ the best engineering talent in the country to proceed at once with the necessary surveys and ascertain the best and most comprehensive plan of procedure.

Now is the time to "make haste slowly." Immediate construction work, without a comprehensive plan, may simply continue the waste of the preceding years. Any comprehensive plan will necessarily include the tributaries that furnish the water for the Mississippi's overflow. A thorough survey of those streams should be included. In view of the total failure of the levee system of the Army engineers the country is entitled to have its own common-sense solution passed upon by an impartial authority. The country believes that instead of beginning at the mouth of the Mississippi River to control its floods, the beginning should be back in the watersheds at their source; that the withholding of such waters in reservoirs at convenient points would be the surest, quickest, and most economical control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River; that such control could be coupled with the conservation of the water resources of the country for irrigation and power purposes when needed and thus a conservation of national resources be effected and a large portion of their benefits directly distributed to the millions of producers in the mid-west section of the country.

WITHHOLD THE WATERS AT THEIR SOURCE

The great basins of the Missouri, the Arkansas, and the Red River, constituting three-fifths of the Mississippi Basin, to which their waters are the lifeblood of its existence, have been totally neglected as to flood protection or commercial development, or the promotion of navigation of which they are potentially capable. At the same time governmental effort has been used to speed their needed waters to the destruction of the lower valley and to waste in the Gulf—carrying on their way the wealth of life and property swept from the valleys above.

The great Arkansas Valley in which I live, constituting one-fifth of the Mississippi Basin in area, and which in 1927 furnished over one-half of the flood and all of the destructive part of the flood, is completely ignored. In that valley occurred greater destruction of property above the area proposed to be sacrificed and protected by the Army plan than occurred below. That destruction is repeated almost annually, yet the near-sighted Army engineers propose to dedicate one-half the alluvial valley of the Mississippi to by-passing the waters of this great river and of the Missouri to the Gulf through artificial means and at a proposed cost far in excess of the demonstrated cost of holding back these rich waters where they fall and where they are needed, and applying them to the uses of man.

Before the Flood Control Committee of the House it was demonstrated by the work and public spirit of the great States of Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Kansas, and Oklahoma that the flood waters of the great Arkansas Valley could be held in check so that the river might run evenly, smoothly, and undestructively from the mountains to the sea at a less cost in money than the value of the property destroyed in 1927, and in many other years within our memory. Yet this evidence, unchallenged and uncontradicted, admitted to accomplish the effect that was claimed for it, was totally ignored and the reports of the Army board suggesting a plan which gave no relief to this devastated area and proposing to sacrifice half of the alluvial valley to the protection of the other half from the waters which could be more cheaply controlled above were unquestioningly accepted.

Upon half the Ohio River the Government has expended more than $100,000,000 in the past 50 years for slack-water navigation, while allowing the flood water of that valley to destroy hundreds of millions of dollars in the great floods of 1867, 1876, 1883, 1884, 1913, and others.

The greatest need of the upper Mississippi, the Missouri, the Arkansas, and the Red is the reestablishment of free navigation, for which their drainage basins would provide adequate water if they were given that regulation of flow which would make it undestructive and provide sufficient flowage for navigation at all times.

WISE CONSERVATION, UTILIZATION, AND CONTROL OF WATER RESOURCES

There can be but one sane, sound method of procedure for regulating the flow of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. A policy or plan must be adopted which will prevent flood conditions by means of lowering the river stages during flood periods and at the same time materially raise the low-water stages. In other words, sooner or later a comprehensive plan for the regulation of these streams must of necessity stabilize the water discharge. Such a plan will involve the conservation, utilization, and control of these water resources for the greatest good to the greatest number. It should provide water for irrigation in the Great Plains region—that is, the States of Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, and Wyoming—which will protect the food supplies of the Nation.

The structures required for this irrigation development would involve the construction of head-water reservoirs, stream reservoirs, as well as diversions and storage reservoirs located along the bluffs bordering these streams. Such structures will not only provide for irrigation and power development but they will also make possible the use of the soil capacity of the Great Plains area.

The reservoir capacity of these soils will give many more times the water-impounding capacity than the actual reservoirs created by damming. These structures will of themselves reduce flood discharges and thus prevent flood damages. The return seepage flows from the irrigation developments will increase low-water stages, and thus stabilize the flow of these streams. The results of this irrigation development to the Great Plains area will tend to stabilize production, increase soil fertility and production, decrease soil erosion in the stream valleys and silt contributions, and at the same time make possible economical development of inland-waterway transportation. These benefits contribute to the general welfare, commerce, and defense of the Nation and certainly should be given a great deal of weight in any plan proposed for the regulation of the Mississippi River.

WIPE THE SLATE CLEAN! BEGIN ANEW!

The Army engineers are prejudiced against reservoir control. Their preconceived notions and ideas would foreclose in advance a favorable report. As a general thing, their surveys for such purposes are made in their offices. The country is entitled to have a sympathetic investigation of this system. It will be satisfied with nothing less.

Congress should not make the mistake of confiding this great work to Army engineers. The civil engineers of the United States can furnish more experienced and able talent without preconceived ideas or views in regard to any phase of the work. The flood control of the Mississippi River, with its tributaries, must be taken up as a new problem. The preconceived ideas of the Army engineers, supervising and directing the work, have proven wholly inadequate. They have not only resulted in the loss of hundreds of human lives and millions in property, but in deep humiliation to the American people.

Neither must the Jadwin plan be controlling in the solution of the new problem. At best the plan is but a temporary makeshift with no limit as to the cost. The Jadwin plan does not include the tributaries except as to their survey, which, of course, is construed as a mere gesture to satisfy the vast empire west of the Mississippi River, and any plan that does not include the tributaries is too shortsighted to be even considered. The enormous expense and the inadequacy of the plan appearing upon its very face should condemn it. No one man nor group of men in the War Department should be permitted to control. We should profit by our experience in building the Panama Canal. We should employ the ablest executive and civil engineering talent, instruct them to formulate a comprehensive plan, then appropriate the money and authorize them to execute the work.

THE PRACTICABILITY OF THE RESERVOIR SYSTEM

The following concise analysis of the costs of establishing the reservoir system in the Arkansas and Red River Basins wipes out the illusory befogging complexities of the problem and presents the issue clearly, simply, and with it the only course which will fully and practically meet the exigencies of the situation:

Area, Arkansas and Red River Basins—square miles	174,000
Number of reservoirs in the two basins	165
Estimated cost of reservoirs	$100,000,000
Cost per square mile of protected basins	$365
Effect:
(a) To hold back storm water from one-third to one-half of drainage basins until each river can safely carry the run-off.
(b) To hold back one-third to one-half the run-off from entire drainage basin, reducing each river to safety and protecting all the valleys.
(c) To reduce the Mississippi flood crest 5 to 7 feet. (Would have made the 1927 flood harmless.)
(d) To subtract from flood flow rather than undertake to impound or confine the flood.
(e) To cut down swiftness of currents and stop bank caving, sand-bar making, dredging, revetment, and other expensive temporary expedients and reduce danger to levees and structures.
Comparative cost:
Area of Mississippi Basin—square miles	1,200,000
Cost of Jadwin plan	$1,500,000,000
Cost of Mississippi River Commission plan	775,000,000
Cost of Jadwin plan per square mile of basin	1,250
Cost of Mississippi River Commission plan per square mile	625
Cost of tributary-reservoir plan on about one-fourth of Mississippi Basin per square mile of basin	365
At the same rate, the entire Mississippi Basin could be reservoired to reduce the Mississippi River 15 to 25 feet for under	500,000,000

ANALYSIS OF THE JONES BILL

I append a statement, irrefutable in its analysis of the Jones bill, focusing the spotlight of publicity upon the consequences of the enactment of such legislation, which should insure its defeat. For this valuable contribution the country is indebted to E. E. Blake, chairman of the Interstate Flood Control Commission of the Southwest:

Reservoir plan of flood control

Total drainage basin area of Mississippi River in square miles, 1,200,000.

Red River Basin area, 90,000; Arkansas River Basin, 186,000; in square miles, 274,000 (a little under one-fourth of the total area).

Cost of sufficient reservoirs distributed consistently over the drainage basins of the Arkansas and Red Rivers to hold one-half of the storm water (see plat herewith), $100,000,000.

Cost per square mile of drainage basins, $365.

Minimum time of completion of reservoirs, two years.

Effect: To reduce any known Arkansas and Red River storm flow one-half (plus 40 per cent factor of safety) and reduce Mississippi floods 5 to 7 feet. Reduce average of Mississippi floods, 9 per cent.

At the same ratio of cost every stream contributing to the Mississippi over the entire basin could be so reduced as to make the river regular in flow and safe at a cost of $438,000,000.

Reservoirs actually diminish and control floods by preventing their accumulation.

The maintenance would be slight.

The damages assumed nothing.

Would insure the safety of the present levees.

Would insure the safety of all the alluvial valley.

Would stop or diminish bank caving and sand-bar making.

Would diminish dredging.

Would stabilize the flow, promoting navigation.

ADVANTAGES OF OPERATION

If storms occur on Ohio, as in 1913, other streams could be shut off, as well as part of Ohio.

If storms occur on Missouri, part of it held back and others shut off, as well as several other streams.

It provides absolute and intelligent control for every valley of consequence and the whole of the lower Mississippi.

TABULATED COSTS OF INSTALLATION OF GENERAL JADWIN'S PLAN UNDER THE JONES BILL

Total flooded area in alluvial valley, as per General Jadwin (round numbers)—acres	19,000,000
As per Hoover reports (round numbers)—do	13,000,000
Total area intentionally flooded by General Jadwin's plan:
Used or cleared lands (2,137,000 acres at $224 per acre)	$478,822,400
Uncleared lands (3,910,000 acres at $50 per acre)	$195,520,000
Total (6,047,000 acres, Jadwin value)	$674,342,400

Titles and flow rights, if taken at 100 per cent of value, would cost $674,342,400.

Titles and flow rights at 80 per cent of value as reported by General Jadwin would cost $539,473,920.

Titles and flow rights, 100 per cent of value		$674,342,400
Titles and flow rights, 80 per cent of value, Jadwin plan	$539,473,920
Other items given by Jadwin:
Construction costs	296,400,000	296,400,000
Railroad adjustments (M. C. R.)	71,000,000	71,000,000
Highway changes (M. R. C.)	20,000,000	20,000,000
Total named items	926,873,920	1,061,742,400

Drainage district and levee district damages, unknown.

Liability for damages in carrying out Jadwin plan, assumed by section 4, Jones bill, unknown.

(This might be an immense sum, as loss might be easily alleged and proven to be due to carrying out this specific plan and its features.)

Others construe the Jadwin project (as reported Doc. 90, sec. 26, and others) as appraisal of total damage at $224 per acre for all acreage, then the cost would be		$1,354,528,000
Of which the Government would pay 80 per cent (Jadwin report)	$1,083,622,400
Then add construction cost	296,400,000	296,400,000
Making either	1,380,022,400	or 1,850,928,000

(This amounts to about $1,250 or $1,500 per square mile of basin.)

Add damages for "carrying out" the plan. Unknown.

General Jadwin expected all this, except $259,000,000 to be borne by individuals. But that is impossible. The Jones bill accepts it all for the Government. Few calculators agree on the results because data is insufficient. But all get beyond the billion mark—some far, some farther.

The General Jadwin plan makes no pretense of diminishing or controlling floods. It merely decides that some (one-half) shall be protected, and some (one-half) shall be sacrificed.

Some points of difference between the General Jadwin plan, and the Jones Senate bill plan, appear:

1. The General Jadwin plan contemplates Government expense of $259,000,000; all other to be contributed.

The Jones Senate bill puts all cost of over $1,000,000,000 on the Government.

2. The Jones bill assumes by the Government liability for rights and property taken or used and turns them free to somebody unnamed.

The General Jadwin plan expected them to be free of cost.

3. The Jones bill assumes by the Government liability for consequential damages in carrying out the plan.

4. The Jones bill reverses the rule of Government nonliability as adjudicated for attempting to control the Mississippi or other river.

5. The Jones bill postpones work between Baton Rouge and Cape Girardeau (except levees and revetment) until further investigation and action of Congress, evidently hesitating at its enormous cost.

6. The Jones bill assumes by the Government the total cost of new levees on the east side of the river and west side of the river, contrary to precedent.

7. The Jones bill lays predicate for liability of the Government for damages due to increasing flood water height between or by levees, and actually for all consequences of levees and spillways wherever built.

Between Senate bill and House committee amendments:

a. The House amendments make specific allotment of $5,000,000 of the authorization to surveys provided by the Senate to find better method than levees and floodways and spillways, to reduce flood-water heights.

b. Authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make disposition of reservoirs less than sale thereof; authorizing sale, by approval of Congress.

The Mississippi control has proven impossible locally. History so records. But the works are there, and have probably reached the maximum of construction. General Jadwin so reports.

There remains, then, but reduction of the river at flood. Two ways are presented:

First. To governmentally spill out a part over the valley, as it spilled before levees were built; and give up practically one-third of the valley to floods, and pay or expend a billion dollars more or less for the governmental interference and assume liability, almost incalculable throughout all time for adopting that plan.

Second. The other is to hold back and string out the peaks of the combining floods until the river can carry them away. This saves all the alluvial valley, and all other valleys and commerce. Probably neither method should be asserted to be exclusive, but there is, and must be, an economical and effective balance of these elements.

It would seem the duty of Congress to establish the policy of control, leave the established commission free to use the appropriate part of each.

Nothing else is fair to the lower valley, which looks with abhorrence upon the loss, or depreciation, of one-third of itself. Nothing else is fair to the upper valleys that suffer more, and provide over 90 per cent of the money. Nothing else is fair to the Nation that needs the regulation of its rivers for commerce (so says Secretary Hoover) rather than its impairment or destruction by division.

It is apparent that the General Jadwin plan is an expensive plan to somebody, as no calculation, even by its sponsors, brings its cost under a billion dollars, and many figure it at a billion and a half dollars, some even higher.

General Jadwin and the President contemplated $259,000,000 on the Government, and the remainder on the community. Considering the cost, the community is manifestly unable to assume its part.

The Jones bill assumes for the Government all the cost, since no one else can bear it. Practically every witness before the Flood Control Committee, except the Army engineers, criticized its engineering and economics, and expressed a fear of consequences.

Reflecting this fear of consequences, the Jones bill had to be amended to assume, by the Government, liability for damages done in carrying out the plan. So, if it does not work, or has consequences predicted, the Government and not the local people will be the victim.

In addition, the Government had to provide by the bill for returning to the "States" and "local interests" (both of which are indefinite and undetermined) without cost, the land acquired. It is inconceivable that any locality affecting three States will permit the Government to come in and acquire the use of 10,000 square miles, or 6,400,000 acres, of land equaling one-fourth the area of the State of Ohio, without condemnation and acquisition of title, if constitutional power of Government extends that far for that purpose, which is seriously doubted.

General Jadwin's appraisal of property to be taken is susceptible of several interpretations indicated in the tabulation herewith. In addition to property, it caused the eviction, or endangering, or embarrassing, of many towns and cities, affecting about 70,000 people.

Our Supreme Court has held that the Government was not liable for damages in the erectment of levee, or from the effect thereof, or for the failure thereof. Cubbins v. Mississippi River Commission (241 U. S. 351); Jackson v. United States (230 U. S. 1); Hughes v. United States and United States v. Hughes (230 U. S. 24). It is familiar law that the authors and operators of any specific plan or operation are liable for the consequential damages, whether contemplated or not. The exemption of governmental agencies in the exercise of governmental powers is well sustained, but may be waived by legislative assumption of liability.

The General Jadwin plan is, in part, an innovation on plans heretofore adjudged, involves many engineering and architectural features not heretofore used or adjudged, many of which have been strongly condemned by engineers outside the Army, and the congressional and community apprehension of its failure is natural, but it seems clear under the legislation that if any of these features fail, or if in their operation they cause damage, either expected or unexpected, the Government would be liable therefor. This is particularly portentous in view of the fact that it contemplates increased height of the levees, new and more confining levees and consequently greater danger from the failure thereof. This, the bill assumes.

The plan also contemplates periodic and recurrent failure of protection to the vast area, number of people, and amount of property, going so far as to specifically name the ratio or frequency of jeopardy. Naturally, those sponsoring such a plan have insisted upon Government guaranty, and the Senate has assumed it.

It is quite conceivable that such a plan may be miscalculated as to effect, but if so those subject to it have governmental assurance of protection against loss.

The assumption of liability for attempting to control a river like the Mississippi, by any plan whatever, is a portentous and prodigious thing. The recurrence of a devastation like any 1 of the 20 overflows in the last 40 or 50 years would cost the Government an enormous sum of money not calculable, but which would quickly run into the billions of dollars. It would not be difficult for any jury in that country to find that some feature of the General Jadwin plan was the proximate cause of a plaintiff's damage. True, the flood ways of nature, backwater areas and other lands affected, constitute between one-third and one-half of the flooded valley. The Government, by the General Jadwin plan, is merely assuming governmental direction and guidance of the overflow; but, in so doing, it is assuming to increase the overflow on some and decrease it on others. For this the Jones bill assumed financial responsibility.

In view of the voluminous testimony that it was a hazardous and probably an indefensible experiment of uncertain effect and uncertain operation, it is only natural that the Representatives and Senators from the States and communities affected fought it until it was amended to the effect that if the Government put it in it assumed financial responsibility for carrying it out. It is further natural that the Senators having consciousness of their oath of office and their duty to the public put in the proviso that no work should be done—except levees and revetments—between Baton Rouge and Cape Girardeau until the commission created had time to make further investigations and see if a safer and better method could be devised. This seems to be the one outstanding proviso of the bill in the interest of the Government and of the taxpayers.

By the plan, backwater areas at the mouths of rivers like the Yazoo, the Red, the White, the Arkansas, and other rivers, are greatly increased and great and valuable areas never heretofore covered with backwater are threatened with inundation. This is a natural and direct loss from raising the levees and the water plane between them for which the Government would be liable under its assumed obligation. A greater danger to the levee structure by either raising the levees, or building levees on the opposite side, or reveting great mileage of the banks and increasing the current thereby to the extent that will cut out other places in the banks, cause reasonable apprehension of damage; which the Government also guarantees against.

The General Jadwin plan was unfortunate in presenting as cost merely the construction cost of $296,000,000 when the total cost to somebody will exceed a billion. "Rights of way" sounds simple, but never before did it encompass anything like 6,000,000 acres, definitely and perpetually assigned to waste; in which every right of ownership, use, or possession is "subject" to some dominant sovereign; on which every protective measure is denied. Such rights could never be excepted by surrender. They must be taken and paid for. The Nation's awakening to the details of the plan has been as by an alarm. It is a tremendously expensive plan, and a wholly unremunerative investment. It is a high price to pay for merely "guiding" a flood over one area instead of another—protecting one-half at the expense of the other half. The entire flood can be prevented, and the whole area saved at less cost, in quicker time, and at no sacrifice.

Constitutional inquiry.—The legal mind must retain this distinction: The doctrine of the Cubbins, Jackson, and Hughes cases applies only in the exercise of the strictly constitutional purpose, in that case the protection or promotion of navigation in the river. No stretch of the imagination, no length of legislative declaration, no fiat of even the Omnipotent, can truthfully say, and be accepted, that guiding a torrential flood over 10,000 square miles of flats, instead of over 20,000 square miles of flats, is in regulation of commerce. So the General Jadwin plan might incur liability for "carrying out" even did not the Congress expressly assume it.

MAINTENANCE

The maintenance element of these broad "spillways" 5 to 13 miles wide and 400 miles long, with estimated flow varying from the torrential first spill down to one-half to two-thirds of a mile per hour, with great acres of dead water and all very shallow, presents some interesting possibilities.

It is known that a Mississippi current at flood height runs from 5 to 9 feet per second and carries a heavy burden of silt; that wherever it breaks over, heavy sediment falls, which may be expected to soon practically close the outlet of the flow.

A hint is made of dredging this out, but the prospect of the mechanical removal of a great part of the Mississippi flood burden of 3,000,000,000 cubic yards of silt causes the amendment of the bill to relieve the "States" and "local interests" therefrom. However, keeping grass, weeds, vines, and bushes off of 6,000,000 acres of spillway will tax the "States" and "local interests" somewhat. It may be safely assumed that it will not be done; it can not be done.

Assured, by the history of past conduct, of one spill over the bank every three to seven years, means the intervening years for almost tropical growth of weeds, vines, brush, and timber, which the next flood would have to filter through. It is well that the Federal Treasury is unlimited.

All these dangers and anticipated damages would be entirely avoided by lowering the height of the water in the river rather than by artificial works elevating it.

For years there has been insistent demand for stream diminution and regulation by reservoirs, but it has been opposed by two schools of antagonists, one claiming it would not have appreciable effect, the other that the expense would be unbearably great. Considering the history of the past, attempted control by levees has cost a prodigious amount of money, several hundred millions for expenditures and far beyond a billion in property loss and damage, besides a constant decrease of navigable capacity which threatens its navigability.

During the time this expenditure and loss experimenting with levees was going on the valley suffered enormously more loss in the destruction of lands and property and devastation of farms in many great floods of the Ohio, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, Red, and other tributaries. These are just as much a part of the costs of lower river levee control, considered from a national standpoint, as the piling up of the dirt.

At the same time, rich valleys like the Illinois have been subject to inundation by reason of the high-water level in the river backing the water up over their bottom lands. The same is true of many other rivers of low gradient such as the Wabash, Tennessee, Yazoo, Red, and lower Arkansas. It is time to consider these things on a national scale.

If the Nation must pay the bill, as now looks probable, because no one else can, then the Nation should look to the protection of all valleys and not merely the lower alluvial valley, for the very simple reason that the protection of the alluvial valley against the destruction of all upper valleys is shown by the General Jadwin plan to amount to more than the salvaged part of the valley is actually worth in dollars and cents.

Millions of dollars have been spent for revetment and dredging, made necessary by the high-water levels and the swift currents between the levees, causing caving of the banks and building up of sand bars in the river. (See report of the channel board, H. Doc. 50, 61st Cong., 1st sess., Captain Sherrill, U. S. A. E., work port of New Orleans, Vol. VI, No. 25, pp. 13–15 of "Profession Memoirs.")

An actual bona fide effort to determine just what could be done by reservoirs has never been attempted in the United States except by the engineers of the interstate commission for the control of the Arkansas and Red Rivers, composed of commissioners from the States of Colorado, Kansas, Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama, appointed by the several governors. These engineers went about the problem in the simplest of ways. They decided that if the storm waters of a certain percentage of the drainage basin of any stream were held back, the stream would be reduced in the same percentage and its destructive effect would be reduced in increasing percentage until the holdback was sufficient to keep the stream safely and evenly within its banks.

Carrying out this theory they located and surveyed about 200 possible reservoir sites at selected economical places on the smaller streams contributing to the Arkansas and Red Rivers, holding back the run-off from more than one-half of the area of the basins, and considering the climatic conditions, calculated to catch more than half of any storm run-off, thus reducing the rivers as against maximum flood one-half and reducing its contribution to the Mississippi. Calculating the average of the last six great floods, the average effect on the Mississippi would be to reduce its flood crest from 5 to 7 feet, thus greatly relieving the levees and making it probably possible for them to carry off the other waters.

A great many engineers not in the Army have conceded that such a control of a river drainage basin, and particularly of these two basins, would materially reduce the Mississippi River and would probably have prevented the 1927 flood from being destructive. No engineer can deny that if you hold out of a river half of any storm run-off you are bound to reduce the river, and the extent of holdback is a mere matter of extent of development of land. It requires no scientific mind or engineering training to accept these two principles. The civil engineers carefully avoided locating expensive dams in big rivers where the flow would soon fill them and diminish their flood-control effect, but kept them all in streams where they would absolutely control the streams, thus insuring their safety and insuring the effect in flood reduction.

The area of the Mississippi River drainage basin is accepted to be about 1,200,000 square miles. The area of the Arkansas and Red Rivers drainage basins is accepted to be 274,000 square miles, or not quite one-fourth of the entire Mississippi Basin. The 200 or more proposed reservoirs so carefully selected were carefully surveyed to determine their capacity and cost, and the drainage area above was carefully calculated according to the weather reports of the past 31 years to determine the requirement of that location.

Keeping these things in mind and basing the work upon a 3-inch run-off in 24 hours from the area above each dam, allowing a factor of safety of 40 per cent, they provided for the storage of sufficient water to reduce those two rivers to harmlessness, both on the main streams and on all their principal tributaries. At first blush this will meet with the statement that it involved tremendous cost; but it turned out that the total cost of such control of the two basins would be somewhere under $100,000,000, or practically $365 per square mile of the basins.

This is about one-third of the cost per square mile of the lowest calculations put upon the execution of the Jadwin plan, excluding the liability for damages in carrying out the plan, which the Jones bill assumes.

The Arkansas and Red River Basins are fairly typical of the entire Mississippi Valley, being composed partly of rocky, mountain area, great plains area, hill area, and low alluvial valley area. If the same average cost obtains throughout the Mississippi Valley that obtained in the Arkansas and Red Valleys of $365 per square mile, then the total reservoir control of the Mississippi River, reducing it one-half as against any past flood, would cost $438,000,000, or about half of the lowest estimate of the Jadwin plan and about one-fourth of the average estimate of the Jadwin plan. Even if it cost twice as much as the work out of the interstate commission, it would yet be lower than the cost of the General Jadwin plan as confessed on the floor of the Senate by Senator JONES. It would appear, therefore, that the public prejudice against reservoir control is without foundation and has been brought about either through guesswork or prophecy to defeat that method and that a careful and consistent investigation of the possibility is justified by the Government. Even if it cost as much as, or more than the General Jadwin plan it has the merit of protecting a great many times more property and people, and of having a greater beneficent effect upon the commerce of the country than the General Jadwin plan. It does not subtract from the alluvial valley or the lower States a great part of their productive area, nor does it subtract from the Nation a great national asset, as the General Jadwin plan proposes.

The money now spent each year on levees and revetments and dredging would very nearly pay the interest on the capital investment of reservoir control. In view of the fact that the Mississippi River Commission reports the cost of proposed revetment if the flood plane in the river be raised as $165,000,000, shows immediately that the floods of the Red, the Arkansas, and upper Mississippi Rivers combined, or the floods of the Missouri, could at less cost than mere revetment, be held out of the Mississippi River at flood times until the river could carry them. It is very probable that that sum of money ($165,000,000) expended on the Ohio River in reservoirs placed according to the ideas of the civilian engineers would so reduce and control the Ohio River as to enable the Mississippi to carry the rest of its burden safely.

There is a marked difference in the cost of reservoir control as determined by the civilian engineers and as reported to Congress by the Board of Army Engineers. We do not criticize either of their reports; they explain themselves. The difference in the cost comes logically in the difference of the location of the controlling reservoirs. The civilian engineers planned their reservoirs to keep the storm waters out of the river until it could carry them. The Army engineers planned their reservoir system to hold the flood waters after they had accumulated in such great rivers as the Mississippi near Cairo and various places above, the Missouri near its confluence with the Mississippi and various places above, the Arkansas at Little Rock and at Fort Smith, and other rivers similarly.

Keeping in view these different methods of operation by the civilian engineers and the Army engineers and the great difference in cost, the House committee purposes putting the matter in the hands of a new commission, unhampered by precedent or superiority of rank or teaching.

The Senate committee, with the same information before it, provided that the commission be of both military and civil training. As to the wisdom of this we have naught to say, but it is clear that Congress should place it in an impartial tribunal that the engineering and economic features may be impartially considered.

The Arkansas and Red Rivers created over half of the peak flood of the Mississippi in 1927, and has provided an average of 17.6 per cent of the previous six great floods of the Mississippi. Reducing its floods by half then, would have reduced the Mississippi one-fourth in 1927, making it harmless; and would have reduced its last six great floods nearly 9 per cent average.

Such plan of area and run-off control over the whole Mississippi basin, averaged on the Arkansas and Red work out—and this ought to be a fair average, all characteristics being considered—would reduce the Mississippi to the capacity of the present river and levees at a cost of from one-half to one-third of the expected cost under the Jones bill, and relieve the Government of all liability for damages and adjustment of properties to artificial conditions.

The proper control of the Mississippi should, and ultimately must, include tributary stream reduction and regulation above, and levees in the lower valley along the low banks, protecting the whole of the river valley. The difference in the cost reported by the Army reservoir board and by the Interstate Commission is accounted for by the difference in the location of the dams: The Army board puts a few dams in the big flooded rivers; the civilian engineers put many in the small tributaries holding the run-off out of the rivers until the rivers can safely carry the water.

It stands to reason, and should not require an engineer to testify, that if you keep half the storm water of any storm on any stream system out of the river you reduce the flood flow of the river from any storm one-half. If you want to reduce it more add other reservoir restraints and hold more back. The top foot of a levee costs many times the cost of the first foot and adds to the danger of it all. Stream reduction by reservoirs costs uniformly with effect, and increases the safety of all the remainder instead of increasing the danger. The ultimate economy is by reservoirs.

It so happened that the storm run-off in the Arkansas Basin in 1927 could have been restrained to harmlessness in reservoirs that would have cost about $21,000,000. Had that been done, the 1927 flood would not have received a streamer headline in any paper. It would have saved $400,000,000.

Whatever commission is created to work out Mississippi flood control, it should be free to apply all means, anywhere, to most economically accomplish the result.

Reservoir control has another advantage in that it regulates all rivers, protects the banks, stops caving and sand-bar formation in flood times. It adds to and develops low-water flows, preserving navigability and developing it.

There are no power possibilities worth while in the Arkansas or Red River Basins. There are no irrigation possibilities worth while under 10 or 20 years, and even then conditions must needs change.

Reservoir control should be contemplated with the sole view of river regulation—not in one favored spot but in all places. If power or irrigation or other result follow, it is, or should be, incidental—not a combined or contemporaneous purpose. Engineers could develop stream control of the Mississippi Valley to reduce floods and build up low-water flows and develop and protect commerce expeditiously; but to start them in on power study gives latitude for a lifetime of study and contemplation and balancing. This is the inherent defect of the General Jadwin report on reservoirs (Doc. 90, p. 20 et seq.). On page 21, paragraph 84, it recites as unsound economics the subordination of a "potential economic value to the localities" to "distant flood control."

Reservoirs projected on the Arkansas and the Red served the local "potential economics" by making them actual economics—they saved the valleys greater in area and value and destruction than was General Jadwin's concern down in the alluvial valley.

They would also have held down the Arkansas, which destroyed the alluvial valley, and would thereby have saved the alluvial valley. This is no "potential economics." It is actual. It not only serves "distant regions," but immediate regions—both regions. His concern for the "potential future" of the localities would sacrifice the actual present of all. It suggests a power-report alibi. This is not said in criticism—it is doubtless sincere; it is mere point of view.

TIME

The Jones bill—General Jadwin's suggestion—contemplates 10 years at least before utility. It is an interdependent plan, ineffective until completed. The lowest spillways might be completed in one or two years for New Orleans' protection. The reservoir suggestion contemplates a large number of independent works, each one having its immediate effect. All reservoirs in the Arkansas and Red Basins could be completed in one year, except four, and they could be completed in two years. They would offer New Orleans and the South greater protection, in quicker time, and at less cost than spillways to take care of the Arkansas and Red River waters after they reach the alluvial valley, as contemplated by the Jones bill.

I can not see that the House committee amendments add anything to the probable or possible cost of the Senate bill.

They do allocate $5,000,000 of the fund to speedy surveys to see whether or not a more economical method may be found to avoid the great flood ways of 6,047,000 acres, and the great damages thereby incurred, and assumed under the Senate bill.

The Jones bill did all that except to allot $5,000,000 specifically to that purpose. The whole difference, then, is in the use of the $5,000,000.

The House committee added nothing to the cost, burden, or liability; it merely insured the further investigation before the greatest of the burden was assumed and before any liability was incurred.

CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN OKLAHOMA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2725) to extend the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, to certain public lands in the State of Oklahoma.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the provisions of section 2455, United States Revised Statutes, as amended, be, and they are hereby, extended to surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated nonmineral public lands in that part of the State of Oklahoma formerly comprised in Oklahoma Territory: Provided, That this act shall not apply to any such area where under existing law such lands are now subject to public or private sale: Provided further, That the proceeds of all sales hereunder shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such fund or funds as may be provided by existing law for the disposition of such lands.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment on page 1, line 4: After the word "Statutes," insert in parentheses "(Section 1171, title 43, United States Code.)"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Statutes," insert in parentheses "(Section 1171, title 43, United States Code.)"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMISSIONED SERVICE IN THE PHILIPPINE CONSTABULARY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9496) to recognize commissioned service in the Philippine Constabulary in determining rights of officers of the Regular Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the author of the bill, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] was called back home by important business. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS OF THE CANAL ZONE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11475) to revise and codify the laws of the Canal Zone.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is simply to provide for the codification of existing law? And it grants no power except to codify the law.

Mr. DENISON. That is true, and also to recommend any changes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And then come back to Congress?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; then to come back to Congress.

Mr. THATCHER. Does that include Executive orders?

Mr. DENISON. It includes all the laws.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. We have a revision of all the laws of the United States, and it is now compiled, I think, in a very admirable work. Are not all the laws that apply to the Canal Zone included in that codification?

Mr. DENISON. None of them are included in that.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Are not those laws for the Canal Zone included in the general revision?

Mr. DENISON. No. The laws of the Canal Zone consist of the old civil code of the Republic of Colombia, and the ordinances passed by the Isthmian Canal Commission during the construction days, which had the power to legislate, and the Executive orders issued from time to time during the construction period, and all acts of Congress.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am glad to hear it. It should be done.

Mr. THATCHER. Are not all general laws extended to them?

Mr. DENISON. The Volstead law was made applicable to the Canal Zone. There are only a few general laws like that, such as the antinarcotic law, the prohibition law, and perhaps the retirement law. But with those exceptions none of the laws of the Canal Zone have been included in the general revision.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is quite a conflict of opinion going on in the Canal Zone at this time between the courts there and the district attorney as to just what applies. We are not passing upon that question at all?

Mr. DENISON. Oh, no; we are not passing upon that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to have all of the laws now in force in the Canal Zone revised and codified, and when such revision and codification has been completed to report the same to Congress for its approval.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the purpose of this act as early as practicable, the President is authorized to employ such persons skilled in the codification of laws as he may deem necessary and to fix their compensation; he may call upon the judge of the district court of the Canal Zone and the district attorney thereof for such assistance as they can render, and the said judge and district attorney are hereby authorized to render such assistance as they can in the performance of such duties. The President is also further authorized to employ such members of the district bar of the Canal Zone and such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as he may deem necessary for the proper and early completion of such work and to fix their compensation.

SEC. 3. As soon as a proper code of all the laws now in force in the Canal Zone shall have been prepared, the President is authorized to report the same to Congress with his recommendation; and the President is further authorized to report with such code such changes in the laws now in force in the Canal Zone as he deems necessary or wise for the proper administration of justice therein and the proper maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000 to be used by the President for the payment of salaries of persons employed, for necessary travel and other expenses of such employees, going to and from the Canal Zone, and while in the Canal Zone, engaged in the performance of such duties, and for necessary printing, books, stationery, and other expenditures incidental to the performance of such work.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. On page 2, line 19, before the words "the sum of," insert "not more than."

Mr. DENISON. There is no objection to that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, before the words "the sum of," insert "not more than."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. I see a mistake in printing. I suggest an amendment to insert a comma after the word "printing" on page 2, line 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the correction.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MATERIAL IN WAR AND NAVY DEPARTMENTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6049) to amend an act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, projectiles, and other condemned material in their respective departments.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the bill is rather inartistically drawn, so I know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] did not draw it, but it comes from the War Department.

As the gentleman knows, everything after the enacting clause becomes law, and, therefore, it would be cumbersome to have the striking out and insertions in the law. So I have prepared an amendment which will read:

That an act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective departments, approved May 22, 1896, be amended, so that the act when amended shall read.

And then you have the amended section.

Mr. JAMES. And we will have exactly the same language?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; it would not touch that. Otherwise you have all of these insertions in your permanent law and it makes it very confusing. This is just a perfecting amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective departments, approved May 22, 1896, be amended by inserting the words "posts of the American Legion and other recognized war veteran associations, State museums" after the word "Republic," and by striking out the words "and cannon balls" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "projectiles and other condemned material," so that the act when so amended shall read:

"That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are each hereby authorized, in their discretion, to loan or give to soldiers' monument associations, posts of the American Legion, and other recognized war veteran associations, State museums, and municipal corporations condemned ordnance, guns, projectiles, and other condemned material which may not be needed in the service of either of said departments.

"Such loan or gift shall be made subject to rules and regulations covering the same in each department, and the Government shall be at no expense in connection with any such loan or gift."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, in line 1, after the word "Republic," insert the words "or obsolete" after the word "condemned."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be not read at this time, because my amendment removes all of that, and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk, after the adoption of my amendment, read the committee amendments after line 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the gentleman's request is not to adopt the committee amendments?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 1, in line 6, after the figures "1896," insert "(C. 231, 29 Stat. 133; sec. 546, title 34, United States Code; sec. 67, title 50, United States Code.)"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, in line 6, after the word "be," insert a comma and the following "and is hereby," and after the word "amended," strike out the balance of line 6 and all of lines 7 and 8, and on page 2 strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3, and all of line 4, up to the word "so," and in line 5 strike out the word "so."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 8, after the word "associations," insert "posts of the Grand Army of the Republic."

In line 11, after the word "condemned," insert the words "or obsolete."

In line 12, after the word "condemned," insert the words "or obsolete."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PANAMA RAILROAD CO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11245) to cancel certain notes of the Panama Railroad Co. held by the Treasurer of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, all of the capital stock of the Panama Railroad Co. is owned by the United States?

Mr. DENISON. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is authorized and directed to cancel and surrender to the Panama Railroad Co. the notes given by such company to the United States prior to March 4, 1911, with respect to which payment of interest and principal was discontinued by section 2 of the act approved March 4, 1911 (U. S. Code, title 48, sec. 1333).

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9956) to provide for aided and directed settlement on Federal reclamation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WINTER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will reserve it.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall not disagree to that if the gentleman would prefer that it be passed in that way.

Mr. WINTER. There is a good reason for it, as I think I can satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will not object to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL HIGHWAY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4625) to authorize and direct the survey, construction, and maintenance of a memorial highway to connect Mount Vernon, in the State of Virginia, with the Arlington Memorial Bridge across the Potomac River at Washington.

The Clark read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I expect to object, this, in the guise of paying honor to Washington, commits the Government to an expenditure of $4,500,000 for the construction of a monumental highway of an indefinite width. Some talk of 200 feet, boulevarded, and all that sort of thing. It requires the Federal Government to buy the land on which to build this monumental highway, and it leaves the perpetual maintenance of it with the Federal Government. There is no provision for contribution by the real-estate promoters of the adjacent lands who will have fortunes made by it. There is no provision for contribution by the State of Virginia, that will benefit greatly by this highway.

I think I am as ready to pay honor to the memory of Washington as anyone. I think we can honor his memory better by using this money in building some roads connecting up important highways in the West where we own the land, Indian reservations and public lands generally, rather than expend it on this uncertain project.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Otherwise, the bill is all right.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I am in favor of it otherwise.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman has announced his purpose to object, I think it would be unprofitable to discuss the merits of the bill now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In just one moment. I hope on a future occasion we may be given that opportunity.

An identical bill has unanimously passed the Senate. This bill has been unanimously reported by the House committee, and I assume from what we know it has the approval of the President and of the Director of the Budget. But all of that aside, if my friend from Michigan——

Mr. CRAMTON. The Director of the Budget, I may say, is understood to be rather uncertain about any increase in appropriations for building roads any other place in the country.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am able to tell my friend that I speak with information when I say that the Director of the Budget has indicated his approval of this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Was that conditioned on preservation of the automobile tax?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No——

Mr. CRAMTON. Or was it without regard to whether that tax is retained or not?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No——

Mr. CRAMTON. And was the gentleman pressed to know how the gentleman from Virginia voted on the automobile tax?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is not at all relevant how I voted on that matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is deemed so, generally.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I may have voted with or not with the gentleman, but I wish to tell the gentleman so far as I am advised there can not be any misunderstanding as to the attitude of the Director of the Budget, and unless I misunderstand the statement of the President in his last annual message there is equally no ground for misapprehension as to his attitude; but I do not want to take the time of the House as we are now running on with the Consent Calendar, and if the distinguished gentleman from Michigan intends to adhere to his objection I say again I do not see that anything is to be gained by a discussion at this time of the merits of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Possibly, the gentleman from Virginia, when the matter comes up again, may be able to give us some assurance as to the cooperation of his State in the construction of this road, which means so much of benefit to his State.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman I hope we will be able to meet his objection in a very satisfactory way when we come to a discussion of the measure.

I now yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We created a commission known as the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington to plan a proper celebration of that anniversary. Surely, the gentleman does not want to put that commission in the road-building business.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman would?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia (continuing). And when the time comes I will explain fully to the gentleman from New York why it was considered expedient and wise to do that in so far as the bill does it. As I have said, however, there is nothing at all to be accomplished by occupying the time of the House now in going into any detailed discussion of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, the RECORD will show when that commission was created and the legislation was adopted in this House, assurance was given that no such great expenditure was contemplated.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman can not point to anything in the RECORD, as I recall, that will support the observation which he has just made.

Mr. CRAMTON. I recall having made the inquiry and being assured by those in charge of the bill that no great expenditure was contemplated.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Well, I did not give any such assurance.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly not.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And when the gentleman looks at the RECORD he will find that there was no assurance to that effect upon which anybody was entitled to rely, in my judgment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia has asked that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; I would like to have that done if it is agreeable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

GEN. ANTHONY WAYNE MEMORIAL

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 180) providing for the erection of a public historical museum on the site of Fort Defiance, Defiance, Ohio.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the industry of the Committee on the Library in building monuments all over the United States is on the increase. In this instance it seems there is being established a new policy. Possibly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] can point to precedents, but this is a case where they want a museum out in Defiance, Ohio, and want us to contribute $25,000 from the Federal Treasury toward its erection. This may be desirable, but I know of so many places where it seems to me more urgent needs exist that I am fearful of starting a policy of contributing to museums all over the United States.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal concern with this proposal, of course; but it chances that the gentleman who introduced the bill and who has it very much at heart has been obliged to leave the sittings of the House by reason of illness. My regard for him strengthens my wish to carry out my assurance to him that if the matter came up in his absence I would do what I could to secure consideration. This, of course, is no reason why the bill should not stand on its own merits, but merely warrants me in asking consideration for the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman like to have it passed over without prejudice?

Mr. LUCE. It is doubtful how soon our friend is going to be able to be back, and perhaps I might as well answer the gentleman's question at once.

As for precedent, I am informed that the Battle of Tippecanoe has been marked or commemorated in somewhat the same way by a joint contribution of the Nation and the State.

Like my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], I, too, have observed the increasing desire on the part of Members of the House to erect these various commemorative structures or markers or edifices, or whatever they may be.

Nearly four years ago we began commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversaries of the Revolutionary War. We have been following that war through New England and the Middle States, and we are now down in the South. This Fort Defiance episode comes somewhat later, to be sure, but it is a part and parcel of what is apparently the growing desire—and I am not sure that it is not a commendable desire—to pay more attention to the sites of happenings that have shaped the country's history.

I think this demand is no doubt also in part due to the remarkable growth of automobile touring that is now taking large numbers of our people here and there throughout the country, leading to a desire on the part of localities to bring to the attention of tourists reasons why this or that particular spot should be noticed. My own feeling has been that within reasonable limits we might take account of these things.

But I have personally come to the conclusion—I will say this for the benefit of the whole House—that it might be a wise thing for us to establish a practice—not an ironclad rule, because occasions to deviate might arise—but we might start from now on with the theory that we will commemorate only happenings of national importance, and that the cost of the commemoration shall be shared between the Nation and the locality. With that safeguard I am inclined to think that the appropriation can be kept within reasonable bounds.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have noticed the increase as reflected by the bills on the calendar, but I am not able to attribute it to any increase in the patriotic spirit or desire to honor the heroes of the past. I think it just comes from the fact that Members of Congress sit here and see a bill go through for the distinguished gentleman from Ohio or for the gentleman from Michigan or Massachusetts, and they say, "Well, if the Federal Government will spend $7,500 for a marker or contribute $25,000 for a museum for Defiance, why should not I have one in Port Huron," and so forth. That is why I am worrying about the great number that are coming out from the gentleman's committee. The benefit the gentleman refers to as an inducement to automobile tourists is local. I would have some faith in the increase of devotion to the past if communities were paying the cost of it out of their own money, but when it requires money from the Federal Treasury I am not so sure about it.

On the calendar we have proposals to give them markers for fights between the Indians and between the Indians and the whites and for all sorts of occasions. We have markers for small engagements of the Revolutionary War. If we put markers for all those places where we have had any clash of arms in this country the gentleman's committee will need a separate calendar.

Mr. LUCE. In my own region this has practically all been attended to by the activities of patriotic societies.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is a very fine way for it to be taken care of.

Mr. LUCE. While I agree with the gentleman, yet there are many parts of the country where the episodes to be commemorated took place at some distance from what are now the centers of population. That is not true here, but in this particular case the gentleman will note that we are asked to contribute $25,000, provided the State spends $50,000 and the county $25,000. I am inclined to think that this method of putting up, at any rate, a low bar may lessen the duties of the Library Committee, a result over which no tears would be shed.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope so. I think the gentleman will appreciate that in our work on the Appropriations Committee it is not always because the item is undesirable that it is objected to, but because there are other things more urgent. I know of so many places where $25,000 would do such a lot of good—in providing a dormitory for an Indian school or a hospital that has been postponed—I do not believe we ought to take this up.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? What the gentleman says is absolutely correct. Immediately after the World War we had an epidemic of memorials. I remember I was in the city hall in New York City, and every time they wanted to open up a street that was not necessary or make an appropriation that they could not justify they would stick a memorial patriotic name to it and seek an appropriation on that ground. I believe in these appropriations we must consider the merits. A few moments ago we had a memorial road; that should be considered as a road problem and nothing else. Then if it comes within the requirements of the road policy it is time enough to give it a memorial aspect. But to consider these questions in the light of memorials I think is overdone.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have a high regard for the gentleman from Ohio, as I have for the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I feel that in this work that I am doing I can not be governed by personal considerations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

MEMORIAL TO PETER MUHLENBERG

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 239) authorizing the erection in the District of Columbia of a monument in memory of Peter Muhlenberg.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] the necessity for having the plans and specifications and the design approved both by the Commission of Fine Arts and the Committee on the Library?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, that provision seems to result in benefit and never, I think, does any harm. It gives different viewpoints in the matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the Library Committee meet in conference with the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. LUCE. Whenever these requirements are in bills we look at the things together.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They actually get together?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the recommendation of the Commission of Fine Arts, I suppose, on architectural design is listened to by the committee?

Mr. LUCE. Their recommendation is exceedingly persuasive, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the committee may not be so fortunate as always to have the cultured gentleman from Massachusetts as its chairman, and there might be a great deal of conflict in the end.

Mr. LUCE. That bridge may be crossed later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Peter Muhlenberg Memorial Association is authorized to erect, without expense to the United States, a monument in memory of Peter Muhlenberg, eminent statesman, clergyman, and soldier, as a gift to the people of the United States, in the public park lying between Ellicott Street, Connecticut Avenue, and Thirty-sixth Street NW., in the District of Columbia. Such monument shall not be erected until the plans and specifications therefor have been submitted to and approved by the Joint Committee on the Library and the Commission of Fine Arts. Such monument shall be erected under the supervision of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill, and in that connection, if I may be allowed a moment, let me say that I make the request because while General Muhlenberg was mainly identified in his public career, his military career, and his career as a statesman with the State of Pennsylvania, where he was born in the little village of Trappe, I think in the district of my friend Mr. WATSON, who sits across from me, he is buried in that same village next to the Lutheran Church where he was baptized, nevertheless he was identified in a very conspicuous way with the history of my own State. Therefore I wish to incorporate in the RECORD a brief statement pertaining to his life.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in supporting this resolution I have been asked to make some, even though very brief, reference to the career of the remarkable man whom it is designed to honor by erecting a monument here in Washington in commemoration of his services to the country. Already Pennsylvania has placed his statue in the Hall of the Capitol where a State is privileged thus to honor two of its citizens.

It is now nearly 182 years since Peter Muhlenberg, who was named by his parents John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg, was born in the village of Trappe, Montgomery County, Pa., and nearly 121 years since he passed away in his native State. The period of 61 years from October 16, 1746, to October 1, 1807, over which his life stretched, was marked by the great events of war and peace which led to the foundation of our Government, and the subsequent events which stabilized the new system and insured the future of our institutions.

Muhlenberg was the son of the pioneer and founder of the Lutheran Church in America, who, emigrating from Germany, settled in Pennsylvania. The son received part of his education in Germany and after his return was ordained a minister of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. At that time, many Germans or people of German extraction were moving from Pennsylvania into the fertile and picturesque valley of Virginia, west of the Blue Ridge Mountains. They were Lutherans, and some of them formed a congregation at Woodstock, the county seat of the beautiful county of Shenandoah, originally the county of Dunmore. At the request of this congregation, young Peter Muhlenberg was assigned as their minister. But for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the laws of the Virginia colony—the laws pertaining to the established church—it was necessary for him to receive episcopal ordination, and so he went to England, where he was ordained by the Lord Biship of London, and, coming back, took up his work at Woodstock in the fall of 1772.

When he assumed his ministerial duties the tide of resentment against the mother country was rising, and from the beginning of his residence in Virginia he was closely identified with the patriotic element and extremely influential in spreading the opinions which had been openly proclaimed with vehement eloquence by Patrick Henry in 1775 in bringing about the passage by the Virginia House of Burgesses of the resolutions denouncing the stamp tax. In 1774 he followed the example of Washington in his attitude toward the oppression to which Boston was then being subjected. In May of that year Washington had presided at the popular meeting in Fairfax County which denounced the action of the British at Boston, and in June Muhlenberg was the controlling spirit at a similar meeting at Woodstock which adopted resolutions offered by him as chairman of a committee not as lengthy but quite as emphatic as the "Fairfax resolves."

He was very intimate with Washington then, and afterwards, as an officer in the Revolution, and enjoyed his abiding friendship and confidence. There is a story that Washington, who was much Muhlenberg's senior, frequently hunted with him among the mountains bordering the valley, and though skilled in the use of the rifle, admitted that he was no match for the young minister.

Being a man of unquestioned character, ability, and energy, and of most attractive personality, the people of his county, strongly drawn to Muhlenberg, elected him a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1774 and a member of the Virginia convention, which at its meeting in Richmond in 1775 was so stirred by the memorable address of Henry, in which he declared war to be inevitable, as to abandon any hope of a peaceful settlement of the pending controversies and make preparation for armed conflict. Closely associated in the house of burgesses and the convention, Henry and Muhlenberg were bound together by ties which were not weakened in all the trying years that followed.

By the prompt activities in which he engaged following the convention Muhlenberg practically expressed the sentiment of the ringing words with which Henry closed the Richmond address: "Give me liberty or give me death."

Upon the adjournment of the convention he exerted himself to organize regiments for the new army, and when the legislature elected Henry colonel of the First Virginia Regiment it elected Muhlenberg colonel of the Eighth Regiment, although he was without military training or experience.

And then occurred, in 1775, one of the most striking incidents of his life. After being appointed colonel he caused an announcement to be made to the people of the various Lutheran churches under his charge that on the next Sunday he would preach his farewell sermon. That day the church at Woodstock, which is still standing, was crowded by those eager to hear him. At the close of the sermon he pronounced the benediction, and, divesting himself of his clerical gown, displayed the uniform of a colonel in the Virginia army. Facing the people, he said:

> There is a time for all things—a time to preach and a time to pray, but there is also a time to fight, and that time has now come.

He then read his commission and ordered the drums to beat for recruits, and about 300 of the congregation at once responded. In answer to a remonstrance from some one that he had left the church for the army, he said:

> I am a clergyman, it is true, but I am also a member of society as well as the poorest layman, and my liberty is as dear to me as to any man. Shall I, then, sit still and enjoy myself at home when the best blood of the continent is being spilled? Do you think if America were conquered I would be safe? Far from it! And would you not sooner fight like a man than die like a dog?

From that time on until the surrender at Yorktown, Muhlenberg, quickly learning the art of war, rendered service of such great value that he is now classed as one of the most effective soldiers the country has produced. He led his regiment in some of the early encounters in lower Virginia and in South Carolina, where he was present at the Battle of Sullivans Island and highly commended, along with Colonel Moultrie, by General Lee. Soon promoted to brigadier general, he marched to the north, which had become the principal scene of action and where the tide of the struggle perilously ebbed and flowed. He led his brigade, which consisted of the First, Fifth, Ninth, and Fifteenth Regiments of the Virginia line, in the Battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, and other engagements, and won universal reputation as a courageous and skillful officer in command of a force which he had brought to a high standard of discipline and valor. With his men he endured the privations and sufferings of the dreadful winter at Valley Forge, where his fortitude was a sustaining influence. After almost continuous fighting in the north, on the recommendation of Washington he was assigned by the Continental Congress to take full command in Virginia, which was being seriously threatened by the enemy, and there he was in close contact and cooperation with Lafayette.

Muhlenberg had a most conspicuous part in the Battle of Yorktown. As to this, let me quote the comment of a soldier whose capacity and experience entitle him to be heard:

> It has been generally stated and believed—
> Said the late Gen. Marcus J. Wright—
> that the American light infantry corps which stormed and captured the redoubt on the left of the British works, was commanded by Col. Alexander Hamilton. A careful study of the question has satisfied me of the incorrectness of this view. Colonel Hamilton up to a short time before the siege of Yorktown was an aide-de-camp on the staff of General Washington, but, having received what he deemed an unmerited rebuke from the commander in chief, he resigned that position and joined General Lafayette, who assigned him to the command of a regiment in General Muhlenberg's brigade.
> The date of his commission made him the senior colonel. To this brigade, and that of Hazen, was assigned the duty of attacking the redoubt, the whole being under the command of General Muhlenberg. The light infantry brigade was composed of the regiments of Hamilton, Gimat, Barber, and Vose. * * * Almost at the moment of the attack, thinking the advance not sufficiently strong, General Muhlenberg dispatched Colonel Barber's regiment to its aid, which arrived at the instant the advance forces were getting over the works, and executed its order with great gallantry. It is not intended by this statement, which is fully sustained by official history, to detract in the least from the laurels of the gallant and able Hamilton, who undoubtedly advanced in immediate command of the storming party of two regiments and captured the redoubt, but simply to correct a popular error as to the part performed as commander of the brigade by General Muhlenberg.

Not long after the victory at Yorktown Muhlenberg was commissioned major general. When the Army disbanded he went to his home in Woodstock, but soon, in 1784, removed to Philadelphia, and in the succeeding year was elected vice president of the State of Pennsylvania, Benjamin Franklin being president. In the office of vice president, which he held until 1788, he frequently discharged the duties of president during the absence of Franklin.

He strongly supported the Federal Constitution, and assisted in its ratification, and that being accomplished, was elected from his district to the First, Second, Third, and Sixth Congresses, and in 1801 was elected as a Jeffersonian to the United States Senate, but resigned in less than a month to accept from President Jefferson an appointment to the office of supervisor of revenue of the district of Pennsylvania, and at his death he was filling the office of collector of the port of Philadelphia, to which he had also been appointed by Jefferson.

The Muhlenbergs were strong men and were sought for responsible public service. When Peter Muhlenberg was elected to the First Congress his brother F. A. Muhlenberg, was elected from another Pennsylvania district and became the first Speaker of the House, a position which he also filled in the Third Congress, and he is the only Member of the House, except Henry Clay, having the distinction of being elected to the speakership during his first term.

Peter Muhlenberg is buried by the side of his father near the church in the village of Trappe where he was baptized, and this is the inscription over his grave:

> Sacred to the memory of Gen. Peter Muhlenberg. Born October 16, 1746. Died October 1, 1807. He was brave in the field, faithful in the Cabinet, honorable in all his transactions, a sincere friend, and an honest man.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, H. J. Res. 239, the resolution now under consideration before the House, provides that the Peter Muhlenberg Memorial Association, of Washington, D. C., shall erect, without cost to the United States Government, a monument to the memory of Gen. Peter Muhlenberg, of Revolutionary fame, on that public park in the city of Washington, D. C., lying between Ellicott Street, Connecticut Avenue, and Thirty-sixth Street NW., under the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library and the Fine Arts Commission.

America, in its history, has produced many great men, and among these there is none greater than the fighting parson of the Revolution, who was a Lutheran pastor, who became a major general in the American Army, a Representative in Congress, a United States Senator, and who held other offices of distinction and for over 30 years rendered to the Nation his best service.

The monument to be erected shall be a memorial to the memory of John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg, who was born on the 1st day of October, 1746, in Trappe, Montgomery County, Pa. His father, the Rev. Henry Muhlenberg, immigrated to America in 1742 and was one of the first to establish the Lutheran Church in America. His mother was Anna Maria Weiser, a daughter of Col. Conrad Weiser, jr., the celebrated Indian agent of colonial days. In 1761 his parents moved to Philadelphia and Peter entered an academy, where he studied for some time under a Doctor Smith. In the early part of 1763 he and his two brothers were sent to school at Halle, Germany, to study for the ministry. Peter had not attended the school very long before he left on account of the fact that one of his teachers had insulted him and he had knocked him down. Peter did not wait long enough to be expelled, but ran away from the university and enlisted in a German regiment that was then quartered in the town of Halle. How long he remained as a soldier in the German Army is not known, but history states that he was discharged from the service through the efforts of a British officer who knew his father in Philadelphia. After being discharged from the German Army he engaged for a short time in the mercantile business and from that he returned to America, studied theology, and in 1768 was ordained a minister in the Lutheran Church.

He was first an assistant pastor of Zion and St. Paul Lutheran Churches in New Germantown and Bedminster in Hunterdon and Somerset Counties, N. J. The year following he became the pastor of both of these churches. On November 6, 1770, he married Anna Barbara Meyer, of Philadelphia. Two years passed and then he received a call to the pastorate of the Lutheran Church at Woodstock, Va. Under the law at that time in churches of the Virginia colony, no one save an ordained minister in the Church of England could preach in the colony, and in order, therefore, to accept the call, he went to England and was ordained a minister in the Episcopal Church at the Royal Chapel of St. James on the 23d of April, 1772, the Bishop of London officiating at the ordination services. A month later he left London and arrived in Philadelphia during the month of July. Then he returned to the valley of Virginia and entered upon his duties as pastor of the Lutheran Church at Woodstock. He soon became very popular, not only with members of his own congregation but with others as well.

The history of the time shows that Peter Muhlenberg was a friend of Washington, Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, and acquainted with other famous Virginians of that period. In those troublesome days Pastor Muhlenberg of the Lutheran Church at Woodstock was active always in behalf of the patriots in the trouble then brewing with the mother country. In 1774 he was made chairman of the committee of safety in Dunmore County and some time thereafter was appointed a member of the Virginia House of Burgesses. As a member of the convention in Virginia in March, 1775, he gave full support to Patrick Henry and the other patriots. And when Mr. Henry, after his famous speech of "Give me liberty or give me death," moved that the colony be immediately put in a state of defense, Muhlenberg seconded the motion.

In December, 1775, a resolution was passed by the Virginia House of Delegates providing for six new regiments to defend the State. George Washington and Patrick Henry both urged that the Lutheran pastor from Woodstock be commissioned the colonel of one of the regiments. A short time thereafter Muhlenberg was commissioned the colonel of the Eighth Virginia Regiment, which subsequently became the famous German regiment of the Revolution. He immediately returned to his home to recruit and organize the regiment. A few days later the word was broadcasted through the Shenandoah Valley that Pastor Muhlenberg would speak for the last time to his congregation on the following Sunday. The last Sunday in January, 1775, came and the little log church at Woodstock was overcrowded with people from the surrounding country who had come to hear the farewell sermon of their beloved pastor. The young minister came in, ascended the pulpit, and in very plain and simple language told how the colonists were being wronged and mistreated by the mother country. He told of their sufferings and explained to them why he considered it his duty to fight for the colonists and against the English Government. Then came an incident unparalleled in the history of America, or in the history of any other country. There was not a stir in the church; all were intent upon listening to what the pastor had to say. Then suddenly he said:

In the language of Holy Writ there is a time for all things, a time to preach and a time to pray; but there is also a time to fight, and that time has now come.

When these words were uttered by him he threw off his robe and stood before his congregation in the uniform of a Virginia colonel. Pronouncing the benediction, he descended from the pulpit and ordered the drums to beat at the church door for recruits. Three hundred men enlisted that day in his regiment.

For seven years Muhlenberg served as an officer in the American forces, rising in rank from that of colonel to brigadier general, and subsequently to major general. He and the troops under his command were in the campaigns and fought numerous battles in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and South Carolina. The military experience which he received in Germany caused him to be selected by Baron Von Steuben to aid in the creation of a disciplined and organized American Army. After a battle on April 25, 1781, Baron Von Steuben wrote to the Continental Congress commending the valor and the courage of General Muhlenberg. In the last fight at Yorktown the Virginia Brigade was commanded by Muhlenberg. Washington, Lafayette, Von Steuben, and other military men of the Revolutionary War recognized the ability of General Muhlenberg as a soldier and repeatedly commended him for his services to the Colonies. Thus for seven years the pastor from Woodstock gave his best service in time of war to the Colonies and helped to lay the ground plan for the American Nation.

General Muhlenberg, though he received a call from his old congregation at Woodstock to become its pastor again, did not accept. And during the winter of 1783 he removed to Philadelphia and lived with his father. He was elected to the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania and became vice president of the common council of which Franklin was the president. He held this office for two years and then he and his brother, Frederick Muhlenberg, both being members of the Constitutional Convention in Pennsylvania, used their full influence for the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. And it was to a great extent through the influence of these two brothers that Pennsylvania ratified the Federal Constitution.

In 1798, after the adoption of the Constitution, he and his brother, Frederick, were both elected Members of the First Congress from Pennsylvania. Frederick Muhlenberg was elected in the First Congress by the House the first Speaker of the House of Representatives. In 1793 and 1795 Peter was again elected a Representative in Congress, and in 1799 was reelected to the House. In 1801 he was elected United States Senator from Pennsylvania but resigned in 1802. In 1802 President Jefferson appointed him collector of the port of Philadelphia and he served in this capacity until October 1, 1807, when he died. His death was on the sixty-first anniversary of his birth, and his remains were conveyed to Trappe and interred in the Lutheran burying ground by the side of the grave of his father.

This, in short, Mr. Speaker, is an account of the life of one of America's great men. Though his services as a soldier in time of war were great, yet his services in civil life preceding the war and as an official of the Federal Government after the war were equally as great. And in my opinion, sir, the appreciation of Congress should be given to the Peter Muhlenberg Memorial Association for the idea of erecting here, in the Capital of the Nation, a fitting monument to serve as a memorial to one of the men who helped to found this Republic.

MEMORIAL STATUE OF CARDINAL GIBBONS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 72) to grant permission for the erection of a memorial statue of Cardinal Gibbons.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the Knights of Columbus, through Martin H. Carmody, the supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus, or his successors in office, for the erection, as a gift to the people of the United States, on public grounds, known as Reservation 309–G, west of square 2675, which said reservation is bounded on the north by Park Road, on the east by Pine Street, and on the west by Sixteenth Street, and immediately in front of Sacred Heart Church, in Washington, D. C., a memorial statue of the late James Cardinal Gibbons: Provided, That the design for the statue shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts: And provided further, That such statue shall be erected under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said statue.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "Chief of Engineers, United States Army," and insert "Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital."

Page 2, line 7, strike out "Chief of Engineers" and insert "Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital."

The committee amendments were agreed to, and the Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ASSIGNMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS TO AIRSHIP DUTY

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5465) to amend section 1571 of the Revised Statutes to permit officers of the Navy to count duty on airships as sea duty.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the purpose of this bill is to give to officers of the Navy assigned to airships the same credit as though they were assigned to sea duty. The report is very clear as to the intent and purpose of the bill, but the bill is not quite as clear. The bill would permit a naval officer assigned to a hangar at Lakehurst or an officer doing paper work to remain on land and get the benefit of sea-duty credit. I intend to propose an amendment to provide that they must be on duty requiring them to participate frequently and regularly in aerial flights. That language is taken from the law assigning officers in the Navy to air duty. With that amendment I shall not object, otherwise I would have to object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman please state how the bill would read with his amendment agreed to?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With my amendment the bill would read:

That when officers are assigned to airships on duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights, the Secretary of the Navy shall determine—

And so forth.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1571, Revised Statutes, is hereby amended by changing the period at the end of said section to a colon and by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That when officers are assigned to airships the Secretary of the Navy shall determine and certify whether or not, in his judgment, the service to be performed is equivalent to sea duty. If such service is thus determined to be equivalent to sea duty, it shall be considered to be actual sea service on seagoing ships for all purposes."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 1, line 6, after the word "airships," insert "on duty requiring them to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 350) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice in the committee report that this bridge was originally authorized in 1912. What are the reasons why the bridge is not completed at the present time? Are we merely granting this extension to protect their rights and prevent a competing bridge from being constructed?

Mr. WATSON. No. This is a railroad bridge belonging to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. Construction was begun in 1912. The World War, however, and the financial condition of the country prevented the company completing the bridge and the proposed extension across New Jersey; $1,250,000 has been expended on the project. Within a few years the railroad company built an extension from Downingtown, Pa., to Trenton for freight only from the West. Traffic became so congested that the corporation was obliged to look to the future by constructing a new road from Trenton to the New Jersey terminals. A bill was passed some years ago making an appropriation to deepen the channel in the Delaware River from Philadelphia to Trenton, which necessitated a change in the piers. The War Department authorized and approved the plan as set forth in the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the railroad build this bridge within the time limit fixed by the bill under consideration?

Mr. WATSON. I am so informed.

Mr. SCHAFER. I hope it will be built within that time limit. If it is not, I shall object to another extension if I am a member of this body when legislation providing for further extension is presented.

Mr. WATSON. I doubt if the gentleman will be called upon to make further objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, to be built by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. across the Delaware River near the city of Trenton, N. J., which has heretofore been extended by Congress to August 24, 1928, is hereby extended for a further period of three years from the last-named date.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With committee amendments as follows:

On page 1, line 10, after the word "date," insert the following: "Provided, That it shall not be lawful to complete or commence the completion of said bridge until plans thereof shall again be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River near Trenton, N. J."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NEW JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN THE STATE OF INDIANA

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the action taken by the House to-day on the bill S. 2752 may be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What number is the bill on the calendar?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Number 537. The reason, Mr. Speaker, is that the House approved an amendment correcting a word under the misapprehension that the word was incorrectly spelled in the Senate bill. As a matter of fact the word is correctly spelled "Warrick," not "Warwick." If the House vacates the proceedings taken, we can then pass the Senate bill as it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill 2752 may be considered by the House and passed unamended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 80 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

SEC. 80. The State of Indiana shall constitute two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Indiana.

Except as hereinafter in this section provided, terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held for the Indianapolis division at Indianapolis on the first Mondays of May and November of each year; for the Terre Haute division at Terre Haute on the first Mondays of April and October of each year; for the Evansville division at Evansville on the second Mondays of April and October of each year; for the New Albany division at New Albany on the third Mondays of April and October of each year. The terms of the District Court for the Northern District of Indiana shall be held for the Fort Wayne division at Fort Wayne on the first Mondays of April and December of each year; for the South Bend division at South Bend on the first Mondays of October and February of each year; for the Hammond division at Hammond on the first Mondays of March and November of each year. When the time fixed as above for the sitting of a court shall fall on a legal holiday, the terms shall begin upon the next day following. Terms of the district court shall not be limited to any particular number of days nor shall it be necessary for any term to adjourn by reason of the intervention of the term of court elsewhere; but the term about to commence in another division may be postponed or adjourned over until the business of the court in session is concluded. A grand jury summoned to attend a term of court held in any division of either of the districts as above provided may investigate and find an indictment, or make a presentment, for any crime or offense committed in the district, whether or not the crime or offense was committed within the division in which the jury is in session.

"3. A. The senior district judge for the district of Indiana in office immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be the district judge for the southern district as constituted by this act; the junior district judge for the district of Indiana immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be the district judge for the northern district as constituted by this act; and the district attorney and marshal for the district of Indiana in office immediately prior to the passage of this act shall be during the remainder of their present terms of office the district attorney and marshal for the southern district as constituted by this act.

Such offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. Each deputy clerk shall keep in his office full records of all transactions and proceedings of the district court held at that place in which the office is located.

"5. A. The following act is repealed: 'An act to authorize the appointment of an additional district judge in Indiana for the district of Indiana and to establish judicial division lines and for other purposes, being the act approved January 16, 1925.'"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT RANDOLPH, MO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11338), granting the consent of Congress to the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over the Missouri River at Randolph, Mo.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, the bill is rather long. I do not think we ought to take up the time in reading it. There may be some committee amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Randolph, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge and the necessary approaches thereto as a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or both, or as a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, adapted to travel on public highways, or as a combined railroad and highway bridge for all such purposes; and there is hereby conferred upon said Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, if the same is constructed as a highway bridge, only, either the State of Missouri, any political subdivision thereof, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Missouri or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. If such bridge is constructed as a combined railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, and a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, then the right of purchase and condemnation conferred by this act shall apply to a right of way thereover for the passage without cost of persons, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways; and if the right of purchase or condemnation shall be exercised as to such right of way over the bridge, then the measure of damages or compensation to be allowed or paid for such right of way shall be a sum equal to the difference between the actual fair cash value of such bridge determined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act and what its actual fair cash value so determined would have been if such bridge had been constructed as a railroad bridge only. If the right of purchase or condemnation conferred by this act shall be exercised as to the right of way over such bridge, then that part of the bridge which shall be purchased or condemned and shall be thereafter actually used for the passage of pedestrians, animals, or vehicles shall be maintained, operated, and kept in repair by the purchaser thereof.

SEC. 6. The Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of Missouri a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the Highway Department of the State of Missouri shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 3 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to fix and charge just and reasonable tolls for the passage of such bridge of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until the Secretary of War shall prescribe other rates of toll as provided in the act of March 23, 1906; and if said bridge is constructed as a railroad bridge, or a joint railroad and highway bridge, as provided in this act, the said Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix by contract with any person or corporation desiring the use of the same for the passage of railway trains, or street cars, or for placing water or gas pipe lines or telephone or telegraph or electric light or power lines, or for any other such purposes, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use; but in the absence of such contract, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use shall be determined by the Secretary of War as provided in said act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 8. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "the" and insert "The." And on page 2, line 1, after the word "near," insert the words "a point approximately southeast of." And on page 2, line 5, after the word "said," insert "The." And on page 6, line 16, after the word "said," insert the word "The." And on page 7, line 8, after the word "said," insert "The," and on line 20, after the word "to," strike out the word "the" and insert "The." Amend the title.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN AT OR NEAR EAST ALBURG, VT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11692) authorizing the Gulf Coast Properties (Inc.), a Florida corporation, of Jacksonville, county of Duval, State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near East Alburg, Vt.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present conideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Vermont know the grantees under this bill?

Mr. BRIGHAM. I have a list of the directors of the company.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is their intention to build the bridge?

Mr. BRIGHAM. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And it is not their intention to peddle this franchise.

Mr. BRIGHAM. I think not. It is the same company that received a grant some days ago for the construction of another bridge from Rouses Point, N. Y., to Alburg, Vt. This bridge is between Alburg and Swanton. The two bridges, when constructed, will make the route continuous across Lake Champlain from northern Vermont to northern New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman will pardon my questions. Discussions on recent occasions have made it unpleasant to make such an inquiry. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, is there any possibility that the municipality or State government might construct a free bridge there?

Mr. BRIGHAM. Not for many years, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and to provide for military and other purposes, the Gulf Coast Properties (Incorporated), a Florida Corporation, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Lake Champlain, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near East Alburg, Vt., to a point at or near West Swanton, Vt., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. The Gulf Coast Properties (Incorporated), its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of Vermont, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of the State of Vermont shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Gulf Coast Properties (Incorporated), its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2449) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and a point opposite thereto in the parish of West Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN FORFEITED VEHICLES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12442) to provide for the transfer to the Department of Labor of certain forfeited vehicles.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any vehicle summarily forfeited to the United States for violation of the customs laws, and not taken for use by the Secretary of the Treasury under section 1 of the act entitled "An act relating to the use or disposal of vessels or vehicles forfeited to the United States for violation of the customs laws or the national prohibition act, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1925, may, upon request of the Secretary of Labor, be transferred by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Department of Labor, in lieu of being sold under existing provisions of law. Upon request of the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of the Treasury may apply, under section 2 of such act approved March 3, 1925, for delivery to the Secretary of Labor of any vehicle forfeited to the United States as specified in such section and not required by the Treasury Department for use in the enforcement of the customs laws or the national prohibition act; and such vehicle may be ordered by the court to be delivered to the Secretary of Labor, in lieu of being sold under existing provisions of law. Any vehicle transferred or delivered to the Secretary of Labor pursuant to this act shall be used only for official purposes in the enforcement of the immigration laws and Chinese exclusion laws outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I think is within the contemplation of the bill. On page 1, in line 4, after the word "laws," insert the words "including boats or vessels." I am not sure that the word "vehicle" would be held to include them, although in the statute referred to both are treated, both vehicles and vessels, and it is a matter that would be of very great importance to the Immigration Service on the border at any rate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: On page 1, in line 4, after the word "laws," insert the words "including boats or vessels."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will state to the gentleman that the Committee on Ways and Means considered that very question and decided not to include those words in the bill. The committee felt the bill should be passed in its present form, and I do not think that so far-reaching an amendment should be now adopted.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I will not press the amendment if it is deemed to take anyone by surprise and if it is not agreeable to the committee. I am so strongly in favor of the bill as reported that I do not want to do anything which will embarrass it, but I will say this, that I think the committee is absolutely wrong. In the running of aliens across the Detroit and St. Clair Rivers, if a speed boat is captured that is engaged in that illegal traffic it is put up at auction, sold for about $50, and then it goes back into the same traffic. We are spending a large amount of money for boats for special use, and a very high official of the Immigration Service, when I was in consultation with him last fall about some of the problems on the border, said that was one of their difficulties.

He stated they did not have boats with which to give chase to those engaged in violating the law. Now, I do not not know of any logic whatever that justifies making use of a seized automobile that does not justify making use of a speedboat seized while engaged in the same traffic.

I am in favor of the legislation. I am delighted to get even this much. We have delayed a long time getting this far, and I am not going to urge anything that the gentleman feels is not just in accord with what I ought to do.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, the bill was reported by former Chairman Green and, of course, he is no longer a Member. I looked about to see whether some other member of the Ways and Means Committee would give the matter attention. I thought it my duty to call the attention of the committee to the facts.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will simply do this: I will make an appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to accept the amendment, and if the gentleman does not feel that he can do so, under the circumstances I will withdraw it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I believe that the procedure as to boats is different from what it is as to automobiles after seizure. I am speaking from memory and I have not looked up the law recently, but it is my impression that when a vessel is seized the procedure before sale comes under the admiralty procedure and that is the reason, perhaps, the committee separated vessels from automobiles. The procedure in respect of automobiles is rather summary. After seizure they are put up for sale.

Mr. CRAMTON. But, Mr. Speaker, what led me to think that what I was suggesting was clearing up a matter of ambiguity is the fact that these vehicles are summarily forfeited under section 1 of an act relating to the use or disposal of vessels or vehicles. The act referred to, under which they are proceeding, treats of both.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then the gentleman is right.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BRIGHAM. This has no effect whatever upon the seizure law. It only affects vehicles that are seized by the Secretary of the Treasury and are in his possession under the law which relates to seizure in the enforcement of the customs and prohibition laws.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me ask this question: Does the Labor Department operate its own boats?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes; we have the border patrol?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And we have boats in use in New York.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Immigration Service has its border patrol and has use for boats.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In New York we have a ferry, we have a launch, and we have a tug.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have not risen, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of arguing the matter upon its merits, particularly. I felt that the attitude of the Committee on Ways and Means should be disclosed, that the committee instructed the chairman to place the bill upon the Consent Calendar in its present form, and the committee was not of the opinion that boats, without any limitation, which might include very large vessels and very large yachts, should be seized and transferred to the Labor Department.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is all hedged about.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Labor Department could not handle a boat of the kind the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] refers to.

Mr. CRAMTON. My district, I will say to the gentleman, on the Canadian border has a great problem in the running of aliens as well as some other things, and the Immigration Service over at Marine City has headquarters with something like 40 men; and Commissioner Hull, when I talked with him about some matters in the fall, expressed his difficulties because he did not have boats on the river. This is all hedged about and if the gentleman could accept the amendment I would be very glad; but if the gentleman feels he can not, I would hope if it should be amended in the Senate along this line, the gentleman would have an open mind with reference to it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will say to the gentleman that my mind is perfectly open, but when a bills appears upon the Consent Calendar with the report of a committee as to the action of the committee for its consideration upon that calendar, and a matter is brought up here which was considered by the committee and not adopted by the committee, I do not feel such an amendment should be put on after unanimous consent has been procured.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, I would be willing to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment; or, if the gentleman wants, I will withdraw it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think it ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SCHAFER. I object to the withdrawing of the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SCHAFER. I ask for recognition on the amendment. I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan that this amendment should be adopted. I do not see why there should be any difference between an automobile and a boat confiscated by the Prohibition Unit. I do not like to see the practice continued in the future whereby they confiscate the launches of some of these rum runners and then they are sold in many instances at auction for a mere song right back to the same people.

I believe this is an amendment which should be incorporated in the bill and should be supported by everyone who believes in the enforcement of all the laws of the land.

Just because the committee did not see fit to include boats in the bill is no reason why the membership of the House should be precluded from considering this amendment. I do not think it is the purpose of the Consent Calendar or any other calendar that the recommendations of a committee shall be considered so sacred that a good, clean-cut, clean amendment, such as that offered by the gentleman from Michigan, should not be considered, and I sincerely hope the amendment will be incorporated in the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCHAFER) there were—ayes 15, noes 19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ASSIGNMENT OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY AS FLEET AND SQUADRON ENGINEERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5531) to amend the provision contained in the act approved August 29, 1916, relating to the assignment to duty of certain officers of the United States Navy as fleet and squadron engineers.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, some years ago in order to obtain engineer officers Congress passed a bill——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that where a bill requires three objections one Member can not reserve an objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I think there is something to be said about the point of order. Of course the gentleman from Oklahoma may object to the reservation——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill takes three objections. Are there any other objections? (After a pause.) There being no further objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, as I have an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause, carrying out the intent of the committee. The bill as it stands is very clumsily drawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 580), relating to the assignment to duty of commanders of the Navy as fleet and squadron engineers, are hereby amended by striking out the clause "except that commanders may be assigned to duty as fleet and squadron engineers," appearing in lines 8 and 9 of said Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, page 580, and by substituting therefor the following: "except that, upon their own request, such officers of the ranks of commander and above may be assigned to sea duty as fleet or squadron engineers or as engineer officers of ships."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, on page 2 of the bill, strike out the period after the word "ships," and add thereto the following: "so that said provision will read as follows: 'Officers of the line of the Navy not below the grade of lieutenant may, upon application, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, be assigned to engineering duty only, and that when so assigned and until they reach the grade of commander they shall perform duty as prescribed in section 4 of the personnel act approved March 3, 1899, and thereafter shore duty only as now prescribed for officers transferred to the line from the former engineer corps, except that, upon their own request, such officers of the ranks of commander and above may be assigned to sea duty as fleet or squadron engineers or as engineer officers of ships: Provided, That when so assigned they shall retain their place with respect to other line officers in the grades they now or may hereafter occupy, and also the right to succession to command on shore in accordance with their seniority, and shall be promoted as vacancies occur subject to physical examination and to such examination in engineering as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe: Provided further, That the number of officers so assigned in any one year shall be in accordance with the requirements of the service as determined by the Secretary of the Navy.'"

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to obtain some information. The gentleman from New York says that the bill is loosely drawn. I want to ask the gentleman from New York just what the effect of the bill as originally drawn is? From the reading of the bill it appears that under existing law the engineer officers can be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to the squadron and that this bill requires their consent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is just the other way around. The Secretary of the Navy could not assign above a certain rank to sea duty, and the reason was this: Congress passed a law relieving the officers of the Navy who wanted to permanently go into the engineering department from sea duty. The reason was that they wanted to attract the officers so that they could specialize in that branch. Now, we need more of these officers for sea duty, and we can only get them by their consent on account of existing law. The officers coming into the engineer department under the law lose the right to obtain command of ships or a squadron. They gave that up.

Mr. SCHAFER. If House Resolution 5531 was a good bill, as reported out by the committee on the calendar, what was the necessity for the gentleman from New York offering such a long amendment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For the simple reason that everything after the enacting clause becomes a law. If the gentleman will read the bill, he can not tell what the effect of it is. All my amendment does is to strike out and insert and say that the law is amended to read in accordance with the changes made. So that on reading the bill one can tell how the law is amended.

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; that was the reason why I objected to the bill's consideration in the first instance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GRANTING SICK LEAVE TO EMPLOYEES IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12383) to amend section 11 of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1063, U. S. C., title 39), granting sick leave to employees in the Postal Service, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 11 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1064, U. S. C., title 39, sec. 823), is amended to read as follows:

"Employees in the Postal Service shall be granted sick leave with pay at the rate of 10 days a year, exclusive of Sundays and holidays, to be cumulative, but no sick leave with pay in excess of six months shall be granted during any one fiscal year. Sick leave shall be granted only upon satisfactory evidence of illness in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General."

SEC. 2. This act shall become effective July 1, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. CLAIR RIVER, PORT HURON, MICH.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill H. R. 11404, authorizing the Port Huron, Sarnia, Point Edward International Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., being 612 on the Consent Calendar. My reason for asking that it be taken up out of order is because apparently it would not otherwise be reached to-day, and a real emergency exists. The bridge is now financed, and as soon as the necessary authority of this Congress and the authority of the Canadian Parliament is granted the work leading up to construction can begin. The situation in connection with its consideration in the Canadian Parliament is such that it is highly desirable that it be passed here to-day if possible. Therefore, I make the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take up out of order the bill referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I regret to object to the request of the gentleman from Michigan, but a Member of the House, who is interested in this bill, stated that he was unable to be present, and if the bill was reached he asked that I have is passed over without prejudice. In view of that request and my agreement, I could not consent to the request of the gentleman from Michigan, at this time.

Mr. CRAMTON. No Member of the House has manifested to me any interest in the bill, and I am at a loss to understand the situation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I do not think I could consent to the bringing up of the bill at this time.

I do not feel at liberty to disclose the name of the gentleman who asked me to have the bill passed over.

Mr. CRAMTON. That would not be material. The conditions with reference to the introduction of the bill were exceptional by reason of the fact that it is an international bridge, and has to be treated somewhat differently from ordinary bridge bills. There were several applicants for the franchise, and it gave me an opportunity to arrange provisions for the protection of the public interests that are very fortunate.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall get word to the Member in question at once in respect to the gentleman's request and at a later time the gentleman can call the bill up if he gets his consent.

Mr. CRAMTON. Very good. For the present, let me say this, and I hope the gentleman will call this to the attention of his friend. Because of this competition which existed and the unusual circumstances of a bridge between two countries, the recapture clause of this bridge will permit that bridge to become the property of the public without cost in some 16 or 17 years. From the day the bridge is opened to traffic four-fifths of the net profits are devoted to retiring the obligations and when they are retired the bridge becomes public property.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall request the Member I have in mind to consult with the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will recall that three weeks will elapse before we have another consent day.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

RELIEF IN CASES OF CONTRACTS CONNECTED WITH THE PROSECUTION OF WAR

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1347) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this bill is far-reaching. I ask to have it passed over without prejudice for the present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York to 20 minutes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, this is the authorization bill for technical buildings for the Air Corps, 1930. The first item in the bill is for Albrook Field, at Panama, and the amount in the bill will complete all construction at that field. The second item is for France Field, also in the Canal Zone. That will finish all of the technical work under the five-year program at that field. The bill will also finish all of the technical construction at Wheeler Field, Hawaii, and will conclude all at Chanute Field, Ill., excepting the heating plant. It will finish all of the technical work at Crissy Field, Calif., and finish all at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and all at Marshall Field, Kans., excepting the heating plant, all at Maxwell Field, Ala., and all at Mitchel Field, N. Y., excepting the heating plant, and all at Post Field, Okla. It will finish all at Rockwell Field, Calif., and finish all construction that had been intended for the Brooks Field unit, San Antonio, Tex., transferring our activities from there to San Antonio training school, and will complete Selfridge Field, Mich.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have on the calendar a bill for an aviation field in Hawaii.

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why does not the gentleman include that in his bill?

Mr. JAMES. I do not think that I would be able to do that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is Mitchel Field sufficiently provided for?

Mr. JAMES. This will take care of everything excepting the heating plant.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the quarters?

Mr. JAMES. There is a bill for $400,000 pending in the Senate, and before the House adjourns I expect to introduce another bill which will provide $400,000 more.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that will take care of the officers' quarters?

Mr. JAMES. Not entirely, but will go a long way toward it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because in the Air Service most of the activities are carried on by the junior officers, and their accommodations there are terrible.

Mr. JAMES. I intended to put in $300,000 for officers' quarters in H. R. 11134, but they found they needed that amount to complete the barracks for the enlisted men there. But I expected to introduce a bill that will make $400,000 or $500,000 more before we adjourn, and I think most of this will be for officers' quarters.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So that the authorization will be completed at this session?

Mr. JAMES. Not exactly completed, but most of the amount necessary will be authorized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the plan of steel runways in some of the fields that are subject to a great deal of rain?

Mr. JAMES. Our committee has not, but I understand the matter has been taken up with the Assistant Secretary and the chief of the bureau. But so far it has not been called to the attention of the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am very much interested in that, and we ought to have a trial if that is done. We ought to do it in time to catch it before the leveling or filling of land that will be necessary on these fields.

Mr. JAMES. We will be glad to hear from those gentlemen.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Does the gentleman know whether a field has been constructed?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. It has never been constructed. It has never been tried. It strikes me it is worth while.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM].

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members of this House to know that the next chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has not only paid a great deal of attention to this subject but he has gone over the ground himself. I wish the Members of the House to know that the gentleman from Michigan has visited all these places, and no one is more cognizant of what they need than he is; and anyone who was with Colonel Lindbergh in his flights in this neighborhood will realize the condition that some of these fields are in from the condition of Bolling Field here. It seems to me that it is disgraceful that a field of such importance as that should be in the condition that that ground was in. If you should see a field as near as that in that condition, you can imagine what the other fields are. This is carrying out the five-year technical program, and if that is essential I am glad to see that the gentleman from New York and others are entirely in agreement with this program.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ADDITIONAL HOSPITALIZATION FACILITIES FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 12821, as amended. It is Calendar No. 663.

The SPEAKER. The lady from Massachusetts moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 12821, as amended. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12821) to authorize an appropriation to provide additional hospital, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide sufficient hospital, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities to care for the increasing load of mentally afflicted World War veterans and to enable the United States Veterans' Bureau to care for its beneficiaries in Veterans' Bureau hospitals rather than in contract temporary facilities and other institutions, the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, by purchase, replacement, and remodeling, or extension of existing plants, and by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, of such hospitals, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities, to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto; vehicles, livestock, furniture, equipment, and accessories; and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel; and also to provide proper and suitable recreational centers; and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein. Such hospital and domiciliary plants to be constructed shall be of fireproof construction, and existing plants purchased shall be remodeled to be fireproof, and the location and nature thereof, whether for domiciliary care or the treatment of tuberculosis, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President.

SEC. 2. The construction of new hospitals, domiciliary facilities or dispensaries, or the replacement, extension, alteration, remodeling, or repair of all hospitals, domiciliary facilities or dispensaries heretofore or hereafter constructed shall be done in such manner as the President may determine, and he is authorized to require the architectural, engineering, constructing, or other forces of any of the departments of the Government to do or assist in such work, and to employ individuals and agencies not now connected with the Government, if in his opinion desirable, at such compensation as he may consider reasonable.

SEC. 3. For carrying into effect the preceding sections relating to additional hospitals and domiciliary and out-patient dispensary facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. That not to exceed 3 per cent of this sum shall be available for the employment in the District of Columbia and in the field of necessary technical and clerical assistants at the customary rates of compensation, exclusively to aid in the preparation of the plans and specifications for the projects authorized herein and for the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses, field-office equipment, and supplies in connection therewith.

SEC. 4. The President is further authorized to accept from any State or other political subdivision, or from any corporation, association, individual or individuals, any building, structure, equipment, or grounds suitable for the care of the disabled, with due regard to fire or other hazards, state of repair, and all other pertinent considerations, and to designate what department, bureau, board, commission, or other governmental agency shall have the control and management thereof.

SEC. 5. The director is hereby authorized to construct and maintain on hospital reservations of the bureau garages for the accommodation of privately owned automobiles of employees at such hospitals. Employees using such garages shall make such reimbursement therefor as the director may deem reasonable. Money received from the use of such garages shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 6. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized to sell at private sale not more than 50 acres of the hospital reservation of the United States Veterans' Hospital No. 93, Legion, Tex., the size, price, and location thereof to be determined by the director.

SEC. 7. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized to have appraised and, after advertisement, to sell to the highest bidder or bidders, as a whole or in parcels in his discretion and on such terms as he may deem proper, the United States Veterans' Bureau Hospital reservation in the county of De Kalb, city of Atlanta, State of Georgia, acquired by the United States by deed dated April 15, 1920, and to make, execute, and deliver all needful conveyances. The director shall have the right to reject any and all bids. The net proceeds of such sale or sales shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 8. Section 4 of the act entitled "An act to authorize an appropriation to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization under the World War veterans' act, 1924," approved March 3, 1925 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 438), is hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it is my expectation that this bill will pass unanimously—and I use the word with all its implications—and my only desire is to secure the publishing of the views of the chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and of myself, chairman of its subcommittee on hospitals, which can be accomplished under extension of remarks; and further, inasmuch as another Veterans' Committee bill will be brought up for consideration under suspension immediately after the disposal of this one, and I would save the time of the House, I am not inclined to ask for a second unless there is a disposition for debate.

Mr. Speaker, under the general leave to extend remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of minority views:

[H. Rept. 1222, pt. 2, 70th Cong., 1st sess.]

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL AND OUT-PATIENT DISPENSARY

Mr. LUCE and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, submitted the following minority views (to accompany H. R. 12821):

This bill, authorizing further hospital construction for war veterans, deserves approval in all but one particular, a single figure, $15,000,000, which should be $13,000,000.

Differences of opinion about this wholly concern provision for neuropsychiatric patients.

The committee added $2,000,000 to the recommendation of the Veterans' Bureau and the Federal Board of Hospitalization—$1,000,000 for a hospital in Kentucky and $1,000,000 for a hospital in Connecticut.

As for Kentucky, the bureau program contemplated alteration of unused facilities at Outwood in that State to supply 150 beds for patients of the class in question. Adding a million dollars for a new 250-bed hospital will result in giving Kentucky 400 beds, which is 150 more than anybody ever asked or even suggested. A new hospital of 150 beds would cost $600,000. No occasion for such quite superfluous expenditure has been presented to the bureau or to your committee. Without any known basis for this the reasonable thing would be to make the changes at Outwood, which the director of the bureau says can very promptly be done, and then see if more facilities are needed.

The strong probability is that this will not prove to be the case. The allegation of need in Kentucky, as in many other parts of the country, seems to rest on a misconception of what the law contemplates as it now stands. The law provides for the care of the disabled veteran who suffers as a result of the war. As a matter of generosity it puts empty beds also at the command of the mentally ill who are not known to be in such condition because of the war. But it does not call for new construction to meet the needs of non-service-connected cases. The Federal Board of Hospitalization has three times adopted a resolution to the effect that such construction ought not at present to be undertaken, and the President has three times approved this resolution. Neither from Kentucky nor from anywhere else comes any proof that hospitalization has not invariably been furnished to service-connected sufferers. Charges to the contrary are not backed up with names, addresses, and dates. They seem to spring wholly from impressions founded on results of the fact that various States are not performing their duty to furnish hospital facilities for the treatment of mental illness not connected with war.

As to Connecticut, the director of the bureau and the Federal Board of Hospitalization have been definite in the view that no further construction is at present needed for service-connected cases, and so authority to appropriate for it will be contrary to explicit advice of the Government experts, men who have no motive whatever for anything but sincerity and who are in better position than anybody else to know the facts.

Request for this million of dollars is in general based on two things—the wish of Connecticut to have a hospital within its own borders, and prediction of lack of beds in the northeastern part of the country.

Thus far our hospital program has not taken account of State lines. Seventeen of the States have neuropsychiatric hospitals. That leaves 30 with precisely as good a claim on this basis as Connecticut presents. They average to have a population close to that of Connecticut, so that to meet their needs in the same degree would require a capital investment of about $30,000,000. This is the prospect to be faced if we are to give every State a bureau neuropsychiatric hospital because it is a State.

Turning to the question of need on the basis of patient load and facilities, we find the situation to be:

Neuropsychiatric patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau in districts 1 and 2 (New England, New York, and New Jersey) in the last week of March, 1928

Bureau hospitals	1,684
Navy and Soldiers' Home hospitals	85
Kings Park, Long Island (N. Y.) Hospital	479
Other State hospitals	1,046
Private hospitals	5
	3,299
New Jersey patients in Philadelphia hospital Jan. 31	7
Present load	3,306
Expected increase in load in next three years on basis of experience in civil life	195
Probable load in 1931	3,501
Beds to be available in 1931 under bureau program:
Bureau hospitals—
Northampton, Mass	517
Bedford, Mass	480
Bronx, New York City	968
Northport, Long Island, N. Y	1,000
New Jersey	400
	3,365
Other Federal hospitals	210
Kings Park, Long Island, N. Y	479
	4,054

In view of the fact that in some quarters doubt has been cast on bureau statistics, the figures of occupancy in the last week in March were secured by telegram or letter direct from the hospitals concerned.

The new hospital at Northport is to be occupied within a brief time, and likewise that at Bedford to the extent of 350 beds, with 130 more to be added under the bureau program. Provision for the New Jersey hospital (or its equivalent in Pennsylvania) was made in the bureau program, the committee report recommending that it be in New Jersey. At Kings Park, a New York State hospital, there is a memorial building especially erected for World War veterans, with construction declared by the director of the bureau to be comparable with that of the bureau itself and with facilities for treatment equal to that given in bureau hospitals. Nobody seriously advocates abandonment of its use by the bureau. The contract with it is for 350 beds, but as it reports a present occupancy of 479, that figure has been used above, the probability being that 129 are in other buildings of this large institution.

It will be seen that were the patient load to stand in 1931 where it stands to-day the bureau with the construction in its program could furnish a bed for every bureau patient now in a State hospital other than Kings Park and have 551 beds to spare. But some part of the patients now in State hospitals will not be transferred to bureau hospitals, for these reasons:

Guardians avoiding reduction of regular compensation payments to $20 a month, in case of patients in bureau hospitals.

Guardians fearing to lose legal control if wards are sent out of the State.

Relatives preferring to keep patients in hospitals near by.

Patients preferring to stay in familiar surroundings.

The very bill on which these views are expressed recognizes these reasons with a section repealing the provision that requires cessation of use of State hospitals. This further insures that there will be a surplus of beds for the region in question.

Another thing to be taken into account is the possibility presented by the recent enactment in New York of a statute offering to give the Federal Government the soldiers' home at Bath, N. Y. This home, at one time housing more than 2,000 Civil War veterans, now has less than 200 occupants. It has among its three score and more of buildings, two of such construction that they can readily be adapted for the care of the mentally ill, of whom they would accommodate 400. The possibility of assembling there in a group by themselves the mildly insane—the senile and the demented—is under consideration. This would by so much add to the total beds of the districts here in question.

Evidently, then, there is no occasion for further building in these districts than the bureau has contemplated unless it is to be found in another factor in the situation, a factor as uncertain as it is important, that of increase in the load. Here lies the chief reason for the differences of opinion that have arisen in regard to not only the Connecticut request, but also the requests of many other States.

At the outset of the hearings the director of the bureau, while showing expectancy based on military figures to be more favorable, gave those based on experience in civil life, from which it appeared that we may expect the neuropsychiatric load to increase on an average of 2.2 per cent a year for the next 10 years. This would forecast an increase of 195 patients in the two districts in question in the next three years. Toward the close of the hearings figures for part of the districts were submitted on a different basis, that of the bureau experience of the last three years in these particular districts. Those for the two districts here under consideration might lead to an expectation that the increase would be at the average rate of 7.5 per cent a year for the next 10 years, or 744 in the next three years.

There are a number of reasons why the bureau experience of the last three years in any one region may not be a trustworthy guide, because of temporary or chance circumstances. Like reasons do not vitiate the broad record of civil experience. Anyhow, in view of the doubt, the prudent course is to proceed from year to year, building as the need is evident.

But even if a conjectural need should warrant more construction instantly, ought it to be in Connecticut? Look at its situation. Today every spot in Connnecticut is nearer a bureau neuropsychiatric hospital than any spot in 13 New York congressional districts, than any spot in 21 Pennsylvania districts. In point of accessibility Connecticut with its five districts would be given advantages superior to those of 37 districts in the Middle States and Maine. Taking the country as a whole there are at this moment 210 congressional districts without an inhabitant dwelling as near such a hospital as is every inhabitant of Connecticut. On the basis of mileage more than half of the citizens of the Nation are farther from such a hospital than any citizen of Connecticut.

If there is to be fair play in this matter, if every disabled veteran is to get the same consideration as every other veteran, why by giving a hospital to one State increase the advantage it already has over more than half the rest of the country?

This suggests a feature of the proposal that merits the thoughtful consideration of the House. Up to this year the committee has succeeded fairly well in avoiding all other considerations than those of the needs of the disabled. This year it was confronted by the competition of 20 States, each wanting new hospitals or more beds. Cursory study of the figures will show that all of these requests could not have been justified on the ground of need and that some of them were more nearly justified than the requests from Connecticut.

Under these circumstances the danger of the precedent established by singling out one or two States for special favor will be apparent to everybody acquainted with the circumstances of work in a legislative body. It means that the needs of victims of war will be met according to the power of personal pressure and not according to relative importance. It means that the exigencies of parties and candidacies and campaigns will play a part. It means the use of the veteran for the gratification of personal ambition. It means unnecessary additions to the burdens of taxpayers. It means more ammunition for those who rightly criticize what everybody knows to be the most unfortunate aspect of the work of all our lawmaking bodies. Of late years Congress has in large measure freed itself from cause for this criticism. If we are to take a fresh start along the road that leads to opprobrium, let it not be through the hospitals that house the most pitiable victims of war.

It would be better to spend this $2,000,000 even wastefully than that any man who lost his reason as a result of the war should go without care. Furthermore the sad prospect is that through many years we shall have to go on building these hospitals and that present expenditure will not in and of itself necessarily be useless. We believe every needed dollar should be spent, but object to expenditure in localities where the need does not yet appear, with other localities presenting better claims. For this reason and because we object to an unfair and dangerous method of allotment of public funds, we deem it our duty to lay the facts before the House. They may not warrant a vote against the bill, particularly in view of the deplorable delay brought about by the failure of the corresponding bill last year to become law, but they will at any rate also serve to inform those who may have to do with the later stages of enactment and then of appropriation, as well as the Federal Board of Hospitalization that will advise the President, and the President himself, upon whom the law imposes the final duty of allocation. It is our strong hope that this statement will also serve to lessen the likelihood of the use in future Congresses of the methods that in this instance have sufficed to throw the hospital-construction program out of balance.

ROBERT LUCE.
ROYAL C. JOHNSON.

Mrs. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House be granted five legislative days in order that they may file their remarks on the bill H. R. 12821.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to demand a second on this bill, but I would like, taking a moment, to ask if this bill has any items that look toward the discontinuance of the hospital at Lake City, Fla.?

Mrs. ROGERS. It has not.

Mr. GREEN. I have no desire, then, to speak.

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, in authorizing appropriations for the hospital-building program for our disabled World War men and women veterans, the Veterans' Committee has a very grave responsibility. Lack of hospital facilities may mean loss of life or failure of complete recovery. While we have spent a great deal of money in hospitals, we have never been prepared to meet all needs. We have the gravest responsibility to the veterans. Their care is our sacred trust. We also have a responsibility to the taxpayer not to build just for the sake of building.

We must all remember that we are legislating for the entire country and not for just one section of the country. While this measure does not, in my opinion, cover every need, it is the best we could do at the present time.

We are legislating for two years, as last year a bill passed the House but failed in the Senate owing to the Senate filibuster. That bill carried an $11,000,000 program. This year the bill carries a $15,000,000 program.

The hospital load in the neuropsychiatric cases will be very materially increased in 1930, which is probably the earliest period when the new building projects can be completed.

Your committee has recommended that something over 4,000 beds be built. Of that number 1,117 beds are replacements.

At the present time there is a deplorable shortage of beds for the neuropsychiatric cases. Nearly three-fourths of the new beds recommended will be used for these cases.

It is of the greatest importance that we provide proper care for our nervously and mentally sick. In legislating for our very sick mentally cases we are giving help to those who can not help themselves. Their plight is a pitiful one. Those of us who have actually taken care of the men and women who are fighting the battle of the mind realize against what terrible odds they fight; and there is nothing that gives greater satisfaction than to watch those men and women win their mental battle and take their places in the world again on a parity with their fellow men. Seemingly hopeless cases can be saved if taken in time.

Doctor Lorenz, Doctor Barker, and other great neuropsychiatric specialists who are a part of General Hines's great medical advisory council stated only last week that it was of the utmost importance that nervous and severe mental cases be given hospitalization immediately—and without available beds that can not be done.

The task of deciding the area where we should recommend a hospital is not an easy one. General Hines, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, has done very remarkable work in a position that is the most difficult of any of the department chiefs. But the Veterans' Bureau figures have sometimes proved inadequate and their charts difficult to interpret.

For instance, in considering unoccupied beds it should be borne in mind that all of these beds are not generally available. In other words, a neuropsychiatric hospital may have 20 unoccupied beds, all of which may be available for mild psychotic cases as distinguished from the disturbed type. Similarly, the unoccupied beds in a tubercular hospital may all be for the ambulant type as distinguished from the infirmary.

The Veterans' Bureau is now recognizing cases under the first provision of section 202 (10) as being on a parity with service-connected cases from the standpoint of admission to Government hospitals. This being so, the former embargo on nonservice-connected N. P. cases will have to be lifted, thereby resulting in an increased load of nonservice N. P. cases in Government hospitals and a consequent need for more Government beds for the increasing service-connected load—or else a greater use of contract facilities for service-connected cases.

It is interesting that district 7 which contains Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana, shows with its 4.1 per cent nonservice psychotic load to total psychotic load, has the lowest per cent nonservice-connected psychotic cases in the country, or the greatest number of service-connected cases.

The committee in three successive years has recommended a neuropsychiatric hospital for the Kentucky area.

You will note that district 1 has 4.5 per cent nonservice psychotic load to total psychotic load.

In this connection it is very difficult to reconcile the bureau's cut of 70 beds at the Bedford (Mass.) Hospital in this year with the admitted increasing N. P. load. Two hundred were recommended last year; 130 this year.

District 2 has a 4.3 per cent nonservice-connected psychotic load to the total psychotic load in district 2—Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey. The Northport Hospital, when it is opened in the near future, will have 966 beds, instead of the 1,000 which has been given by the bureau as the bed capacity there, which means 34 beds fewer than estimated.

It is difficult to understand why the Veterans' Bureau recommended in district 3—Pennsylvania and Delaware—200 beds fewer than last year for the Pennsylvania Hospital in view of the steadily increasing load.

Districts 1, 2, and 3 have the heaviest patient load, and the committee believes that it is more than justified in recommending a replacement hospital in southern New England. Southern

New England at one time had a veterans' hospital, but it was taken away.

The bureau's own draft is as follows:

Statement showing par. 10 psychotic load and per cent of total psychotic load as of October 31, 1927

District number	Total psychotic hospital load	Nonservice psychotic hospital load	Per cent nonservice psychotic load to total psychotic load

A $300,000,000 hospital program was suggested some years ago as the probable amount that would be needed for hospitals to take care of our World War veterans. The bureau states that the amount expended up to April 12, 1928, for hospital construction was $69,000,000.

Your committee has followed the policy that Mr. LUCE, the chairman of the hospital subcommittee, followed last year.

This year's report is as follows:

ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL, DOMICILIARY, AND OUT-PATIENT DISPENSARY FACILITIES FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mrs. ROGERS, from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 12821):

According to the records of the United States Veterans' Bureau on February 29, 1928, the bureau was operating 50 hospitals, using a part of the facilities of 48 other Government hospitals, and 168 civilian hospitals. The patient load in these hospitals was as follows:

TUBERCULOSIS

United States veterans' hospitals	5,437
Public Health Service hospitals	5
Army hospitals	556
Navy hospitals	77
Soldiers' homes	738
Contract hospitals	488
Total, tuberculosis patients	7,301

GENERAL MEDICAL AND SURGICAL

United States veterans' hospitals	3,273
Public Health Service hospitals	269
Army hospitals	1,269
Navy hospitals	1,682
Soldiers' homes	332

Total, general medical and surgical cases	6,985

NEUROPSYCHIATRIC

United States veterans' hospitals	9,454

SUMMARY

The grand total for the above three classes of patients is:

United States veterans' hospitals	18,164
Public Health Service hospitals	274
Army hospitals	1,956
Navy hospitals	1,972
Soldiers' homes	1,747
St. Elizabeths	361
Contract hospitals	2,669
Making a total patient load of	27,143

These figures, as before stated, show the patient load of the United States Veterans' Bureau as of February 29, 1928. As of this same date the total capacity of the United States Veterans' hospitals was 21,142, with additional facilities in process of building of 1,876. The average number of beds occupied during the month of February, 1928, was 18,294.

The hospital construction program submitted by the United States Veterans' Bureau follows:

Emergency fund agreed to by General Hines for revamping existing facilities.			600,000

While your committee has not deviated from the uniform practice of designating a lump sum, it has recommended the following additions to the Veterans' Bureau program to meet certain great needs: One million dollars for the construction of a new hospital in the Kentucky area, $1,000,000 for the construction of a new hospital in the southern New England area, $635,000 under the item of special fund.

A careful analysis and comparison of the official Veterans' Bureau figures as to patient load, existing facilities, and recommended construction show clearly, generally speaking, that there is no need for additional construction in so far as tuberculosis and general medical and surgical facilities are concerned, except for additional buildings in connection with hospitals already operating or the replacement of unsuitable or temporary facilities. Your committee has therefore followed the recommendations of the Veterans' Bureau in so far as this class of cases is concerned, except that it was felt that there was need for an additional building at or near Mount Alto Hospital to cover cases of women veterans, and the recommended figure of the Veterans' Bureau for this type of construction was increased $200,000 to provide for this facility. This increase is included under the heading "Special fund."

It is equally clear from a study of the figures that there is an immediate need of additional neuropsychiatric hospital facilities. The Director of the Veterans' Bureau stated before the committee that in so far as neuropsychiatric cases were concerned the bureau has been unable to grant up to this time the same consideration to nonservice-connected cases of this type as has been given tuberculosis and general medical and surgical cases, because the bureau has been required to take care of the service-connected cases, which at some points have exceeded even the present facilities. In this connection attention is invited to the fact that on February 29, 1928, there were 2,021 Veterans' Bureau patients of this type in contract hospitals as compared with 488 tuberculosis cases and 160 general medical and surgical cases. A portion at least of the tuberculosis load may be attributed to the fact that Congress has mandated that the bureau retain at Saranac Lake and Liberty, N. Y., irrespective of the existence of other facilities, Veterans' Bureau patients who were at those places on March 4, 1927.

The program of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau for neuropsychiatric cases is based largely on the service-connected load, there being included in the estimate an allowance of only 10.31 per cent for nonservice-connected cases of this type. This percentage is the present percentage of nonservice neuropsychiatric patients hospitalized by the bureau in relation to the total hospital load for this type. Attention is invited to the fact that whereas the percentage in this class of cases is only 10.31 per cent, in tubercular cases it is 32.89 per cent and 59.07 in general medical and surgical cases.

The Director of the Veterans' Bureau has stated that the peak of the neuropsychiatric load will not be reached until 1947. In determining the expected service-connected psychotic load for the next few years the bureau did not increase the present load in the same ratio as that of record for the civil population of the same age group as veterans, but adopted instead the more liberal basis of applying to the existing service-connected hospital load the same percentage of increase that occurred during the period from June 30, 1924, to June 30, 1927. Application of this percentage of the increase, which is 23.37, to the service-connected psychotic load of 9,940 cases on October 31, 1927, results in an estimated service-connected psychotic hospital load of 12,263 on October 31, 1930. If there is added to the latter figure the present percentage (10.31) of nonservice-connected psychotic cases to the total psychotic hospital load, the estimated psychotic load for both service-connected and nonservice-connected cases on October 31, 1930, would be approximately 13,673. With the present beds numbering 9,986, plus those under construction or authorized, 1,396, and those included in the director's program, 1,645, there would be a deficit in the number of beds required of not less than approximately 646.

"(10) That all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau shall be available for every honorably discharged veteran of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, the Boxer rebellion, or the World War suffering from neuropsychiatric or tubercular ailments and diseases, paralysis agitans, encephalitis lethargica, or amebic dysentery, or the loss of sight of both eyes, regardless whether such ailments or diseases are due to military service or otherwise, including traveling expenses as granted to those receiving compensation and hospitalization under this act. The director is further authorized, so far as he shall find that existing Government facilities permit, to furnish hospitalization and necessary traveling expenses incident to hospitalization to veterans of any war, military occupation, or military expedition, including those women who served as Army nurses under contracts between April 21, 1898, and February 2, 1901, not dishonorably discharged, without regard to the nature or origin of their disabilities: Provided, That any and all laws applicable to women who belonged to the Nurse Corps of the Army after February 2, 1902, shall apply equally to members of the Army Nurse Corps who served under contract between April 21, 1898, and February 2, 1901, including all women who served honorably as nurses, chief nurses, or superintendent of said corps in said period: Provided, That preference to admission to any Government hospital for hospitalization under the provisions of this subdivision shall be given to those veterans who are financially unable to pay for hospitalization and their necessary traveling expenses: Provided further, That where a veteran hospitalized under the authority of this subdivision is financially unable to supply himself with clothing, he shall also be furnished with such clothing as the director may deem necessary: Provided further, That where a veteran entitled to hospitalization under this subdivision is suffering with a disease or injury necessitating the wearing of a prosthetic appliance and is financially unable to supply himself with same, upon an affidavit to that effect the director is hereby authorized to furnish such appliance and to effect necessary repairs to the same without cost to the veteran: And provided further, That the pension of a veteran entitled to hospitalization under this subdivision shall not be subject to deduction while such veteran is hospitalized in any Government hospital, for board, maintenance, or any other purpose incident to hospitalization: Provided further, That the act of May 4, 1898, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes,' the act of February 28, 1861, as amended by the act of February 2, 1909, relative to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia, or any other act, in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section be, and they are hereby, modified accordingly.

In the insular possessions or Territories of the United States the director is further authorized to furnish hospitalization in other than Government hospitals.

DIRECTOR'S DECISION, NO. 375, UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU

"Subject: Hospitalization under the first provision of section 202 (10) of the World War veterans' act, as amended.

"Question presented: The question was raised as to whether hospitalization is mandatory under the first provision of section 202 (10) of the act, as amended, or whether hospitalization under said provision is discretionary with the bureau.

"Held: That hospitalization under the first provision of section 202 (10) of the act, as amended, is mandatory. Held further, that hospital facilities 'under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau' are equivalent to 'Government facilities.' (Opinions of the general council, January 17, 1928, and February 11, 1928, approved by the director on February 20, 1928.)

"The foregoing decision is hereby promulgated for observance by all officials and employees of the United States Veterans' Bureau."

These facts show the vital importance of building adequate facilities for neuropsychiatric cases.

In this connection, without desiring to reflect on State institutions in any way, your committee felt that more individual medical care is given in Veterans' Bureau hospitals, and that to a large extent the patients and their families are better satisfied if they are in veterans' hospitals. It must be remembered that whereas the bureau is operating neuropsychiatric hospitals, the States, with few exceptions, are operating insane asylums.

Particular attention is also invited to the addition of $1,000,000 for a neuropsychiatric hospital in the Kentucky area. A similar provision was included in the bill reported last year. It was stated then by the chairman of the hospital committee who reported the bill that—

"representations as to the need of a new neuropsychiatric hospital in the area of which the center would be found to be in Kentucky led the committee last year to recommend appropriation for it in a bill that is now on the calendar, contemplating the erection of a 250-bed hospital. Adding this estimate of $1,000,000 for Kentucky to the bureau's program, together with the 150 additional beds at Oteen, as well as provision for the construction of a nurses' convalescent home in Washington which the committee recommends, and subtracting the savings probable at Atlanta, gives a total estimated cost of very close to $11,000,000, and accordingly your committee recommends the passage of H. R. 17157, authorizing appropriation of that amount."

Evidence was presented at the committee hearings showing an even greater need at this time in the Kentucky area, and your committee therefore included this item in the bill.

Relative to the additional $1,000,000 for the construction of a hospital in the southern area of New England it was demonstrated that there is imperative need for such a hospital at this time. The evidence adduced at the hearings conclusively shows that in order to carry out the provisions of the World War veterans' act to hospitalize the neuropsychiatric cases these additional facilities will be required. It is understood that this hospital may cover tubercular and general medical and surgical cases, but in the main will be built for neuropsychiatric patients.

The authorization of $250,000 for a 100-bed neuropsychiatric unit at Walter Reed Hospital is in accordance with the recommendations of the Federal Board for Hospitalization, the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and the Surgeon General of the Army.

With reference to the special fund and the increase allotted under this heading it is felt by your committee that these additions are necessary in order that the bureau might utilize to the fullest extent existing facilities, such as Fort Lyon, Colo., and Outwood, Ky., by reconstructing these facilities to take care of tubercular and neuropsychiatric cases, if needed. Also, in the event the President should transfer any of the hospitals now under the control and jurisdiction of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or from any other governmental agency to the bureau, there would be available money to make such necessary changes as might be required to make these plants suitable for Veterans' Bureau purposes.

Your committee also desires to point out that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau recommended to replace present unsuitable facilities in Philadelphia, either a complete plant of 800 beds in Pennsylvania or in New Jersey, or two separate plants of 400 beds each in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Your committee, after a full hearing, believes that it would be to the best interest of all those concerned to provide a hospital in Pennsylvania and a hospital in New Jersey, and so recommends. Your committee made practically the same recommendation in the hospital bill which passed the House in the Sixty-ninth Congress.

While your committee does not feel that the present program will be adequate to hospitalize all veterans in Veterans' Bureau hospitals it is felt that with these additional facilities and the continued use of the beds now allocated to the bureau by other governmental agencies, plus the transfer of such plants as the President might deem wise, the Veterans' Bureau would be in a position to take care during the next several years of practically all service-connected cases and the more aggravated nonservice-connected cases. Also, as a result of these transfers the bureau would be in a position to report definitely to the next Congress the exact needs of the Government for hospitals to care for veterans of all wars.

As the chairman of the subcommittee on hospitalization stated last year:

"In previous bills authorizing hospital construction it has been the uniform practice to designate a lump sum, putting its distribution in the control of the director of the bureau, subject to the approval of the President. In order that the President might be properly advised in passing judgment upon the recommendations of the bureau, there was created by Circular 44 of the Bureau of the Budget, at his request, the Federal Board of Hospitalization, made up of the Surgeon General of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, the president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes, the superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, and the Commissioner of the Indian Bureau. In practice the medical division of the bureau has consulted with this board in the making up of a construction program. Your committee, therefore, had at its command what may be assumed to be a well-considered conclusion reached with due regard to the needs of all classes of patients and all parts of the country.

"In the building of hospitals it has not been the custom to pay attention to State lines but to allocate the appropriations with regard to regional conditions and needs."

Therefore, the committee desires to explain with reference to the item listed as Kansas City, Mo., on the Veterans' Bureau program that it has not been definitely decided where this project will be located and the designation of Kansas City, Mo., merely relates to the area in which such hospital will be located.

In approving the program submitted by the director, there is no intention on the part of the committee to designate the particular location of hospitals. It is intended, as the director testified, only to place the structures in the areas set out herein at the location he may choose. The committee has followed the policy adhered to in previous bills.

Public, No. 587, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, authorized expenditure of $10,000,000 for hospital construction. The last section of that act provides that upon the completion of the hospital program authorized thereby the Veterans' Bureau would not hospitalize any patients in other than Government hospitals, except in emergency cases. The present bill repeals this section, for the reason that it is perfectly obvious that the Veterans' Bureau will be unable to hospitalize even service-connected cases in their own hospitals upon the completion of that program. It was not deemed wise to reincorporate it in the bill herewith reported, as there is no assurance that upon the completion of this program the Government will be in a position to hospitalize all veterans in Government hospitals and not use private facilities.

This bill has been indorsed by the American Legion, the Disabled American Veterans, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Spanish War Veterans. The increases granted in this bill beyond the recommendations made by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau were most urgently advocated by these organizations. Your committee has found the suggestions of these veterans' organizations very helpful, as they constantly make surveys of the hospitalization problem. While your committee did not see fit to recommend all that these organizations requested, it did attempt to fill the greatest need.

Some 20 Members of Congress appeared before this committee supporting building programs in their sections of the country. While the committee would have liked to accede to their wishes, it was deemed wiser to wait until next year before granting their requests. It may be possible that some of the $635,000 emergency fund may be used for this purpose.

Your committee most urgently recommends the passage of H. R. 12821, which authorizes the appropriation of the lump sum of $15,000,000. It believes that this is a conservative estimate of the veterans' hospital need at this time. It must be remembered that this bill covers the hospital building program for last year as well as this year, as the hospital bill which passed the House last year failed in the Senate as a result of the Senate filibuster.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the lady from Massachusetts to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 12821 as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL AND OUT-PATIENT DISPENSARY

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I arise in support of the bill, H. R. 12821, with a feeling of sincere appreciation of the lady from Massachusetts for the conscientious care she has taken in her report to meet the expressed wishes of the majority of the Subcommittee on Hospitals, as well as the wishes of the majority of the full Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

This, with few changes, is the same bill that was passed by the House in the Sixty-ninth Congress; and would, no doubt, have become a law had it not been for the unfortunate filibuster in the Senate during the closing day of the Sixty-ninth Congress. I say unfortunate, believing that anything which interferes with the building of hospitals to ameliorate the suffering of those brave boys on whom we pinned our hopes of the security of America, only a few short years ago, is to be deplored.

We have added an additional hospital in the report submitted for your consideration this year having had before the committee sufficient evidence to believe that one was required in southern New England.

The report of last year also specified a recommendation for Kentucky and this is included in the report accompanying this bill.

While I am intensely interested in all the hospitals throughout the country it is but natural that I should have a very personal interest in the hospital recommended for my own State of New Jersey, and if you will permit me to do so, I shall place before you a few facts regarding our situation.

To bring the picture clearly before you I want you to know that New Jersey is one of the few States that has not a veterans' hospital, although we were rated fourth in the number of boys in the World War service.

We have at the present time 700 veterans of the World War under hospitalization of the Veterans' Bureau, divided as follows: Four hundred neuropsychiatric cases, 200 tubercular cases, and 100 general medical cases. Of this number only about 100 are in Government hospitals. New Jersey, in its State and county hospitals—and there are none better in any part of the country—has taken care of the problem presented, but we do feel that it is fair and just to ask the Federal Government to do its share and build a hospital in our State. Our county and State hospitals are overcrowded and should not be called upon to supply that care which particularly belongs to the Government. It is, therefore, my earnest hope that the Members of the House will see fit to sustain the vote of the committee and that the dream of the disabled men of New Jersey may be realized in the erection of a hospital exclusively their own. They did not quibble when orders were issued to leave everyone and everything dear to them, and we should not quibble now at this act of justice. I might also add that the climate of New Jersey is particularly desirable for curative purposes.

Two years ago I personally received the assurance of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau that a hospital for New Jersey would be recommended, and now this recommendation from the committee comes to you—and may I, at this time, with all my heart, thank the committee for its unfailing courtesy and sincerity during the two years that I have pleaded for this belated act of justice to my beloved New Jersey?

While we may have differed in some respects as individuals, there has never at any time been any question of disloyalty or lack of appreciation with regard to the earnest efforts made by the chairman of the subcommittee and general committee, whose interest in the World War veterans is unquestioned. I fully realize that it is not always possible to bring about legislation that would agree with one's own wishes and the wishes of an economy administration.

Your committee has done everything possible to present a fair bill, which it hopes will be accepted by the House to-day, in order that the Senate may have the necessary time to consider and pass the bill, thereby insuring to the veterans of the World War a greater degree of comfort in their afflictions, which it is safe to assume is the desire of every grateful citizen.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the pending bill, which provides for additional hospital facilities, applies not only to World War veterans but veterans of all wars, and it should be passed without debate. There is not a Member on the floor who will not agree that it is an emergency measure.

Just a few days ago a decision was rendered by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, and as a result of this decision the demand for hospitalization will increase.

I have contended for several years that it was mandatory under the law to provide hospitalization for any veteran suffering from neuropsychiatric or tubercular ailments, and I am pleased to see General Hines even at this late day take the same view.

As this decision will be of interest to the Members, I will include it as part of my remarks. The decision follows:

DIRECTOR'S DECISION, UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU, NO. 375

Subject: Hospitalization under the first provision of section 202 (10) of the World War veterans' act as amended.

Question presented: The question was raised as to whether hospitalization is mandatory under the first provision of section 202 (10) of the act as amended or whether hospitalization under said provision is discretionary with the bureau.

Comment: The provision in question reads as follows: "That all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau shall be available for every honorably discharged veteran of the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, the Boxer rebellion, or the World War, suffering from neuropsychiatric or tubercular ailments and diseases, paralysis agitans, encephalitis lethargica, or amœbic dysentery, or the loss of sight of both eyes, regardless of whether such ailments or diseases are due to military service or otherwise, including traveling expenses as granted to those receiving compensation and hospitalization under this act."

It will be noted from the language of the statute above quoted that it is mandatory on the bureau to utilize all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction thereof for the hospitalization of this class of beneficiaries. This class of beneficiaries, in so far as hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau are concerned, are on a parity with persons suffering from service-connected disabilities. Therefore, in so far as persons coming within the first provision of section 202 (10) are concerned, all hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau must be utilized and hospitalization can not be refused on the ground that there may be a potential demand for such facilities which may arise by reason of future requirements for service-connected cases.

The Comptroller General considers the term "hospital facilities under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau" as equivalent to or synonymous with "Government facilities" (Decision of the Comptroller General, January 5, 1925, A-5773). The decision of the Comptroller General is predicated on the theory that these facilities which are made available to the bureau by virtue of section 10 of the act of June 7, 1924 (sec. 9 of the act of August 9, 1921), are to all intents and purposes under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau.

Held: That hospitalization under the first provision of section 202 (10) of the act, as amended, is mandatory. Held further that hospital facilities "under the control and jurisdiction of the bureau" are equivalent to "Government facilities." (Opinions of the general counsel, January 17, 1928, and February 11, 1928, approved by the director on February 20, 1928.)

The foregoing decision is hereby promulgated for observance by all officials and employees of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

Mr. Speaker, when this bill was pending before the committee I appeared and recited my experience during the vacation period and showed a condition existing in the St. Louis district that I am sure convinced the committee an emergency existed. I contended, throughout the summer, beds were not available for mental patients and I am pleased to see the committee has acted favorably on my suggestion by converting the hospital at Excelsior Springs into a neuropsychiatric hospital and authorizing an appropriation of $900,000 to increase the capacity to 300 beds. Veterans afflicted with nervous disabilities can then be sent from St. Louis to Excelsior Springs.

My remarks before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation are as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, my chief concern is to urge the committee to consider the advisability of allocating proper funds for the erection of an N. P. hospital in or near the city of St. Louis. My district is situated entirely within the limits of St. Louis. I was in the city from the 15th of last March to the first week in November. My office is down town, within 30 minutes ride of 1,500,000 people. During that period there was no day that I saw less than 20 veterans of the World War. I am told by the Veterans' Bureau regional office in St. Louis that I have placed before them more cases than all the Representatives in Missouri together.

My reason for urging the construction of this hospital is that I found throughout the summer the Veterans' Bureau did not have the facilities to take care of what they call the nervous and mental cases. I was not going to speak about this subject, but Mr. Miller said he had some figures taken from the census list of the Veterans' Bureau as of December 31, 1927. We have a general hospital at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., which is outside the city limits on a Government reservation, where the Sixth United States Infantry is stationed. They have a large area there that is not in use, and part of this area was allocated to the Veterans' Bureau. This report states that on December 31 the N. P. beds occupied were 32, the unoccupied beds were 19, a total of 51 beds. I will not challenge the figures of December 31, 1927, but I will say that at no time between the 15th of March and the first week in December did any such condition exist, but on the contrary, there was not a bed available, nor were beds available at Knoxville, Iowa, Marion, Ind., or Little Rock, Ark., where our nervous patients are sent.

In support of that statement I am in a position to furnish this committee with telegrams signed by the Director of the Veterans' Bureau and with letters signed by the regional manager in St. Louis, Mo., that they were not in a position to care for the veterans in cases that I placed before them.

Now, just before I left St. Louis, I received a telephone message from a widow who had mortgaged her home and spent all her money and who was working washing floors in an office building who had paid as long as possible $35 a week for the upkeep of her son in a private hospital in St. Louis, saying they wanted her boy taken home. I had that boy placed in Hospital No. 92, and it took me one month to do it. There was another boy there whose case is still pending before the bureau, whose service connection has not yet been entirely established, that I had placed in that hospital because he had become dangerous. The official at the hospital secured the cooperation of the chief of police of St. Louis and sent a policeman to the boys' homes, after he had sent them letters and they had not responded, telling them to come down there and take their relatives out of the hospital, that they needed the beds. When I heard of that, I drove some 6 miles to the hospital. I confronted the gentleman (the administrative officer at that time, due to an investigation, had just been changed; his name was Doctor Casselli, and the officer in charge, whose assignment was temporary, was Doctor Doyle) and they told me they had no room in that hospital for any patients and that they needed the bed. I defied them to turn the man out, and told them I accepted the responsibility of telling the relatives not to take them out.

The wife of one of the men who had been pronounced dangerous, even by the doctors at the hospital, was called to the hospital on Sunday and they put her husband's arm under hers and told her to take him out of that hospital, and that man was out of that hospital until just a few weeks ago, when I had General Hines send him to the diagnostic center in Cincinnati to find who was right—the private doctor or the Veterans' Bureau—in making the diagnosis. General Hines has always treated me with the greatest consideration. When I placed the situation before him by telegram he wired back that the man should remain in that hospital. This one man was removed and the telegraphic order from General Hines was necessary to put him back. They said, "We can not put him back; the bed he occupied has already been filled and we have no place for him, and we can not put him in the other wards; it would be dangerous." Still they turned that man over to his wife. I would not have mentioned that at all but for this list which was just handed me, and I propose to find out whether the census figures of December 31 are correct. I would like to know where they send their patients; because I am still trying to get men in at Marion, Knoxville, and Little Rock.

We have, as I say, a Government reservation there; all the ground that is necessary for a hospital of the character I describe is available. I have talked to the officer in charge of the Veterans' Bureau hospital and he says it will in no way interfere with the morale of the patients in the hospital and I have talked to the commander of the Army post and he says it will in no way injure the morale of his men to have an N. P. hospital placed there. I know that throughout the summer men who should have been placed in the hospital have been placed in soldiers' homes, because I have had them sent there, as I had no other place to send them. They need hospitalization, but they are domiciled at a soldiers' home because you can not get a boy in No. 92, which is a general hospital. I have read the telegrams time and again in the office of the regional manager at St. Louis, from Marion, from Knoxville, and from Little Rock, saying, "We can not give you a bed." Now, there is the situation. I hope these census figures are correct, but I want to find out if they are correct; and if they are correct, I want to see what policy resulted in providing so many unoccupied beds in that hospital.

I have no complaint to make of the treatment by the Veterans' Bureau of the veterans; they are doing the best they can with the facilities they have. But take a big city like St. Louis, where we have hundreds of such patients, if we had a place there where we could house them, where their relatives could see them, there would be more contentment among the men and the opportunity for them to recover would be better.

Mr. LUCE. Possibly the explanation of the situation to which you call attention is not in the N. P. hospital. The beds are divided into two parts—one psychotic and the other psychoneurotic. The second class is often spoken of as the nervous beds, and the apparent existence of empty beds may be those for nervous cases which would not be available for the psychotic cases—the mental cases. You have to take those classes into consideration in considering the figures that are presented to you.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now I have only visited this hospital twice. The requests come to my office during the summer, but the superintendent of the hospital had always been very friendly toward me and he is a man in whom I had great confidence and he has told me time and again that "we have not one bed in our hospital to take care of a nervous case." There is something wrong with the figures.

Mr. LUCE. Simply to complete the statement, I will say the record shows that at this barracks there are available 9 psychotic beds and 38 psychoneurotic. The nine psychotic beds were, on the 1st of December, full, but there were vacant on that day 15 of the beds for nervous patients.

Mr. COCHRAN. I can only tell you then, Mr. Chairman, that the information given me throughout the summer and fall does not correspond in any way with the figures before you.

Mr. BROWNING. Did you have any beds available for those that simply had nervous trouble?

Mr. COCHRAN. No.

Mr. BROWNING. Or was the trouble altogether with those who were dangerous?

Mr. COCHRAN. It was with any kind of a case when the man was suffering from a nervous disability. I will say the city hospitals and the city sanitariums are full to-day with veterans who are suffering from nervous disabilities, as I explained to the chairman the other day. This is due to the law that was enacted whereby $80 is placed in the Treasury and $20 goes to the hospital if he is in a Government institution and has no dependents, and we have there 23 cases in our city hospital where the guardian has refused to remove that man. That is not the fault of the bureau. It is willing to find a place for such cases. We did have one case there where the man is receiving $257.50 a month. He has a double total disability, and his insurance is in force; he has no dependents and his guardian has refused to take him out of the city hospital in St. Louis and put him either on a private hospital or in a Government hospital. The commissioner is continuously complaining about it, but the bureau can do nothing. It has to control over the guardian.

Mr. LUCE. If the bureau should recommend and the Congress appropriate an increase at Excelsior Springs Hospital of 175 beds and make it an N. P. hospital, would that give you any relief?

Mr. COCHRAN. If you would make it an N. P. hospital; but so far in all the cases I have handled I have never been able to get one man sent to Excelsior Springs. What they are using that hospital for I do not know; but, so far as I am concerned, there has never been one man from my district sent to Excelsior Springs. They go to Marion, Ind., and Knoxville, Iowa, and the drug addicts go to Little Rock, Ark., and some other mental cases go to Little Rock, Ark. I have never been able to have one of my patients sent to Excelsior Springs. If Excelsior Springs is turned into an N. P. hospital it will meet the situation. I certainly am not appealing to you to have a hospital erected in St. Louis; I simply mentioned the fact that the Government has ground there which would lower the expense. I care not where it is, just so the men of St. Louis are taken care of.

I desire to submit for the information of the committee a letter I have just received from Dr. J. W. Shankland, hospital commissioner of St. Louis, which explains the situation fully as far as the conditions at the city institution is concerned. The letter follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 19, 1928.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have observed that General Hines, Chief of the United States Veterans' Bureau, has recommended an appropriation of a number of millions of dollars for additional buildings for housing World War veterans, and I ask your indulgence in this matter with the object in view of establishing a psychopathic hospital at Jefferson Barracks for the treatment of nervous and mental diseases.

This class of cases is crowded into our city sanitarium, which now houses 30 per cent more than the building is made to accommodate, and they are not receiving the care and attention at a cost of $20 per month that they should get in a Government institution where the per capita cost is $150 a month. We have 23 such cases in that institution drawing compensation from the Government of $100 or more per month, who are placed there under guardianship at $20 per month. Besides these we have 29 not drawing compensation.

This piece of legislation for the benefit of disabled veterans in the vicinity of the city of St. Louis is very sorely needed. The closest veterans' hospital for the care of nervous and mental diseases is about 300 miles—there being one to the north at Knoxville, Iowa, one to the south in Little Rock, Ark.; the one to the east is a soldiers' home in Marion, Ind.; and I do not believe there is one nearer than Denver, Colo., to the west.

Requesting you to apply enough of your valuable time for an investigation of this matter, that it may be placed before your honorable legislative bodies upon its merits, I am,

Yours very truly,

J. W. SHANKLAND, Commissioner.

As I told the committee, I proposed to investigate the figures supplied by the Veterans' Bureau, and I at once telegraphed friends in St. Louis to secure reliable statistics concerning the vacant beds in the Jefferson Barracks Hospital on December 31, 1927, used for patients with mental disabilities.

The replies convince me that on the above date men who could be safely granted a furlough were allowed to go home for New Year's and their vacant beds were listed. The bureau figures as of December 31, 1927, are probably correct, but if you will take the record as of January 4, when the men had all returned, you will see this situation did not exist.

AMENDMENT OF THE WORLD WAR VETERANS' ACT, 1924

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 13039 as amended. It is No. 402 on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 13039 as amended. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13039) to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924

Be it enacted, etc., That section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 445, title 38, of the United States Code), be amended by adding the following:

"No suit shall be allowed under this section unless the same shall have been brought within six years after the right accrued for which the claim is made, or within one year from the date of the approval of this amendatory act, whichever is the later date: Provided, That for the purposes of this section it shall be deemed that the right accrued on the happening of the contingency on which the claim is founded: Provided further, That this limitation is suspended for the period elapsing between the filing in the bureau of the claim sued upon and the denial of said claim by the director. Infants, insane persons, or persons under other legal disability, or persons rated as incompetent or insane by the bureau shall have three years in which to bring suit after the removal of their disabilities. If suit is seasonably begun and fails for defect in process, or for other reasons not affecting the merits, a new action, if one lies, may be brought within a year though the period of limitations has elapsed. Judgments heretofore rendered against the person or persons claiming under the contract of war-risk insurance on the ground that the claim was barred by the statute of limitations shall not be a bar to the institution of another suit on the same claim. No State or other statute of limitations shall be applicable to suits filed under this section. This section shall apply to all suits now pending against the United States under the provisions of this section."

SEC. 2. That sections 21, subdivision (2), of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 450, title 38, of the United States Code), be hereby amended to read as follows:

"(2) Whenever it appears that any guardian, curator, conservator, or other person is not, in the opinion of the director, properly executing the duties of his trust or has collected or is attempting to collect fees, commissions, or allowances that are inequitable or are in excess of those allowed by law for the duties performed or expenses incurred, or has failed to make such payments as may be necessary for the benefit of the ward or the dependents of the ward, then and in that event the director is hereby empowered by his duly authorized attorney to appear in the court which has appointed such fiduciary and make proper presentation of such matters to the court: Provided, That the director, in his discretion, may suspend payments to any such guardian, curator, conservator, or other person who shall neglect or refuse, after reasonable notice, to render an account to the director from time to time showing the application of such payments for the benefit of such minor or incompetent beneficiary.

"Authority is hereby granted for the payment of any court or other expenses incident to any investigation or court proceeding for the appointment of any guardian, curator, conservator, or other person legally vested with the care of the claimant or his estate or the removal of such fiduciary and appointment of another, and of expenses in connection with the administration of such estates by such fiduciaries, when such payment is authorized by the director."

SEC. 3. That section 28 of the World War veterans' act, as amended (sec. 453, title 38, of the United States Code), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 28. There shall be no recovery of payments from any person, who, in the judgment of the director, is without fault on his part, and where, in the judgment of the director, such recovery would defeat the purpose of benefits otherwise authorized or would be against equity and good conscience. No disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount paid by him to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under this section.

"When under the provisions of this section the recovery of a payment made from the United States Government life-insurance fund is waived, the United States Government life-insurance fund shall be reimbursed for the amount involved from the current appropriation for military and naval insurance."

SEC. 4. That a new section be added to Title I of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (title 38, United States Code), to be known as section 34 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 34. The director is hereby authorized to contract for the services of translators without regard to the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882 (secs. 39, 45, 46, 50, title 5, United States Code), and the classification act of 1923 (secs. 43, 45, 46, title 5, United States Code). This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of June 7, 1924."

SEC. 5. That a new section be added to Title I of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (title 38, U. S. Code), to be known as section 35 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. The director is hereby authorized to purchase transcripts of the record, including all evidence, of trial of litigated cases. This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of June 7, 1924."

SEC. 6. That section 201, subdivisions (1) and (3), of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 472, title 38, U. S. Code), be hereby amended as follows:

"(1) If death occur or shall have occurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and before discharge or resignation from the service, the United States Veterans' Bureau shall pay for burial and funeral expenses and the return of body to his home a sum not to exceed $100, as may be fixed by regulation. Where a veteran of any war, including those women who served as Army nurses under contracts between April 21, 1898, and February 2, 1901, who was not dishonorably discharged, dies after discharge or resignation from the service, the director, in his discretion and with due regard to the circumstances of each case, shall pay for burial and funeral expenses and the transportation of the body (including preparation of the body) to the place of burial, a sum not exceeding $107 to cover such items and to be paid to such person or persons as may be fixed by regulations: Provided, That when such person dies while receiving from the bureau compensation or vocational training the above benefits shall be payable in all cases: Provided further, That where such person, while receiving from the bureau medical, surgical, or hospital treatment, or vocational training, dies away from home and at the place to which he was ordered by the bureau, or while traveling under orders of the bureau, the above benefits shall be payable in all cases and in addition thereto the actual and necessary cost of the transportation of the body of the person (including preparation of the body) to the place of burial, within the continental limits of the United States, its Territories, or possessions, and including also, in the discretion of the director, the actual and necessary cost of transportation of an attendant: Provided further, That no accrued pension, compensation, or insurance due at the time of death shall be deducted from the sum allowed: Provided further, That the director may, in his discretion, make contracts for burial and funeral services within the limits of the amounts allowed herein without regard to the laws prescribing advertisement for proposals for supplies and services for the United States Veterans' Bureau: And provided further, That section 5, title 41, of the United States Code, shall not be applied to contracts for burial and funeral expenses heretofore entered into by the director so as to deny payment for services rendered thereunder, and all suspensions of payment heretofore made in connection with such contracts are hereby removed, and any and all payments which are now or may hereafter become due on such contracts are hereby expressly authorized.

"(3) The payment of compensation to or for a child shall continue until such child reaches the age of 18 years or married, or if such child should be permanently incapable of self-support by reason of mental or physical defect, then during such incapacity: Provided, That the payment of compensation shall be further continued after the age of 18 years and until completion of education or training, to any child who is or may hereafter be pursuing a course of instruction at a school, college, academy, seminary, technical institute, or university, particularly designated by him and approved by the director, which shall have agreed to report to the director the termination of attendance of such child, and if any such institution of learning fails to make such report promptly the approval shall be withdrawn: And provided further, That no compensation shall be paid to or for any child who reaches the age of 21 years."

SEC. 7. That the first paragraph of section 202, subdivision (7), of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 480, title 38, United States Code), be hereby amended to read as follows:

"(7) Where any disabled person having neither wife, child, nor dependent parent shall, after July 1, 1924, have been maintained by the Government of the United States for a period or periods amounting to six months in an institution or institutions, and shall be deemed by the director to be insane, the compensation for such person shall thereafter be $30 per month so long as he shall thereafter be maintained by the bureau in an institution; and such compensation may, in the discretion of the director, be paid to the chief officer of said institution to be used for the benefit of such person: Provided, however, That if such person shall recover his reason and shall be discharged from such institution as competent, such additional sum shall be paid him as would equal the total sum by which his compensation has been reduced through the provisions of this subdivision."

SEC. 8. That section 202, subdivision 12, of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 486, title 38, United States Code), be hereby amended to read as follows:

"(12) Where the disabled person is a patient in a hospital, or where for any other reason the disabled person and his wife are not living together, or where the children are not in the custody of the disabled person, the amount of the compensation may be apportioned as may be prescribed by regulations."

SEC. 9. That section 206 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 495, title 38, United States Code), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 10. That section 209 of the World War veterans' act, as amended (sec. 498, title 38, United States Code), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 11. That section 212 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 422, title 38, United States Code), be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"Provided further, That where the widow, child, or children of a deceased veteran are entitled to compensation by virtue of an accrued right under the war risk insurance act, as amended, the rates of compensation shall be the same as those provided by section 201 of this act."

SEC. 12. That section 300 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 511, title 38, of the United States Code), be hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 300. In order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and to every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department protection for themselves and their dependents, the United States, upon application to the bureau and without medical examination, shall grant United States Government life insurance (converted insurance) against the death or total permanent disability of any such person in any multiple of $500, and not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000 upon the payment of the premiums as hereinafter provided. Such insurance must be applied for within one hundred and twenty days after enlistment or after entrance into or employment in the active service and before discharge or resignation: Provided, That any member of the reserve forces whose application was accepted at a time when he was in attendance at a military or naval training camp or station, and from whom premiums were collected, and who becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled, or dies or has died, shall be deemed to have made valid application therefor. This proviso shall not authorize the granting of more than $10,000 insurance to any one person: Provided further, That each officer and enlisted man of the Coast Guard who is serving on active duty at the time of the passage of this amendatory act, or who subsequent thereto enters the Coast Guard service, shall be granted insurance in accordance with the terms of this section upon application within one hundred and twenty days of the passage of this amendatory act, or date of enlistment or entry into the Coast Guard, whichever is the later date, and before retirement, discharge, or resignation.

"Yearly renewable term insurance shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew, niece, brother-in-law, or sister-in-law, or to any or all of them, and also during total and permanent disability to the injured person.

"Where the beneficiary for yearly renewable term insurance at the time of designation by the insured is within the permitted class of beneficiaries and is the designated beneficiary at the time of the maturity of the insurance because of the death of the insured, such beneficiary shall be deemed to be within the permitted class even though the status of such beneficiary shall have been changed.

"The United States shall bear the expenses of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war. The premium rates shall be the net rates based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum. This section, as amended, shall be deemed to be in effect as of June 7, 1924."

SEC. 13. That section 301 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (section 512, title 38, United States Code), be hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 301. Except as provided in the second paragraph of this section, not later than July 2, 1927, all term yearly renewable insurance held by persons who were in the military service after April 6, 1917, shall be converted, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request. Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20-payment life, endowment maturing at age 62, five-year level premium term, and into other usual forms of insurance, and for reconversion of any such policies to a higher premium rate in accordance with regulations to be issued by the director, and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon, but payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each, and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election.

"All yearly renewable term insurance shall cease on July 2, 1927, except when death or total permanent diability shall have occurred before July 2, 1927: Provided, however, That the director may by regulation extend the time for the continuing of yearly renewable term insurance and the conversion thereof in any case where on July 2, 1927, conversion of such yearly renewable term insurance is impracticable or impossible due to the mental condition or disappearance of the insured.

"In case where an insured whose yearly renewable term insurance has matured by reason of total permanent disability is found and declared to be no longer permanently and totally disabled, and where the insured is required under regulations to renew payment of premiums on said term insurance, and where this contingency is extended beyond the period during which said yearly renewable term insurance otherwise must be converted, there shall be given such insured an additional period of two years from the date on which he is required to renew payment of premiums in which to convert said term insurance as hereinbefore provided: Provided, That where the time for conversion has been extended under the second paragraph of this section because of the mental condition or disappearance of the insured, there shall be allowed to the insured an additional period of two years from the date on which he recovers from his mental disability or reappears in which to convert.

"The insurance except as provided herein shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments: Provided, That when the amount of an individual monthly payment is less than $5, such amount may in the discretion of the director be allowed to accumulate without interest and be disbursed annually. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid up and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per centum per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided.

"If no beneficiary be designated by the insured as beneficiary for converted insurance granted under the provisions of Article IV of the war risk insurance act, or Title III of this act, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the present value of the remaining unpaid monthly installments; or if the designated beneficiary survives the insured and dies before receiving all of the installments of converted insurance payable and applicable, then there shall be paid to the estate of such beneficiary the present value of the remaining unpaid monthly installments: Provided, That no payments shall be made to any estate which under the laws of the residence of the insured or the beneficiary, as the case may be, would escheat, but same shall escheat to the United States and be credited to the United States Government life insurance fund.

"The bureau may make provision in the contract for converted insurance for optional settlements, to be selected by the insured, whereby such insurance may be made payable either in one sum or in installments for 36 months or more. The bureau may also include in said contract a provision authorizing the beneficiary to elect to receive payment of the insurance in installments for 36 months or more, but only if the insured has not exercised the right of election as hereinbefore provided; and even though the insured may have exercised his right of election the said contract may authorize the beneficiary to elect to receive such insurance in installments spread over a greater period of time than that selected by the insured. This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of June 7, 1924."

SEC. 14. That a new section be added to the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (title 38, U. S. Code), to be known as section 310 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 310. Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 300 and 301 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (secs. 511 and 512, title 38, United States Code), the United States, upon application to the bureau, shall grant United States Government life (converted) insurance against death or permanent total disability in any multiple of $500 and not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000 to any person who has heretofore applied or been eligible to apply for yearly renewable term insurance or United States Government life (converted) insurance: Provided, That such person is in good health and furnishes evidence satisfactory to the director to this effect: Provided further, That no person may carry more than $10,000 of United States Government life insurance at one time."

SEC. 15. That a new section be added to the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (title 38, U. S. Code), to be known as section 311 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 311. Wherever an insured under a yearly renewable term insurance contract or a United States Government life (converted) insurance policy is totally disabled for a period of 12 consecutive months he shall be entitled to receive total permanent disability benefits under his contract as though he were totally and permanently disabled, such payments to be effective as of the date such total disability began and to be made monthly in accordance with the terms of the contract during the continuance of such total disability. During the period of payments under this section premiums on such insurance shall be waived: Provided, however, That no retroactive payments shall be made under this section except where there is a period of total disability followed by permanent total disability, in which event payments shall be made effective not more than one year prior to the passage of this amendatory act: Provided further, That no application, conversion, or reinstatement shall be invalidated by reason of the provisions of this section. Provision shall be made by regulation for the reexamination of an insured under this section from time to time as the director may deem necessary, and in the event it is found that an insured is no longer totally disabled, payment of benefits shall cease and the provisions of the yearly renewable term insurance contract or the United States Government life-insurance policy, with reference to recovery from permanent total disability, shall apply: Provided, That the benefits of this section shall not prejudice any other cause of permanent total disability."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina for 20 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this act was originally H. R. 10160, which I introduced early in the session. The insurance features contained in the present bill, H. R. 13039, were referred to a subcommittee, of which Representative Perkins, of New Jersey, was chairman. They were unanimously reported by that subcommittee and unanimously reported by the entire committee. The other features were contained in H. R. 10160. There is a very complete statement of what the bill contains in the report, Report No. 1274, and in order to save time I ask unanimous consent that I may include that report in my present remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Therefore, I shall only discuss the three major provisions of the bill, found in sections 1, 9, and 13.

Section 1 of the bill amends section 19 of the act by establishing a uniform Federal statute of limitations for suits on contracts of insurance relating to permanent disability. In the different States of the United States the statute of limitations differs. In some States it is 3 years, in other States 4 years, in some States 6 years, and in New York and perhaps one other State 20 years. As suits are brought under these insurance policies in one State a disabled man would have 20 years in which to bring his action, whereas in another State he would have but 3 years. In the United States as a whole the statute of limitations is 6 years, and the committee, therefore, adopted 6 years for the purposes of this bill.

If this is not adopted, it would be very clear that able lawyers in States where the statute of limitations is but 3 years would, 10 years after the expiration of the statute of limitations in that State, move their clients to the State of New York, where the statute of limitations is 20 years. If there were many of these cases, and there might be a great number of them, it would dislocate the system of Federal jurisprudence over the country. So that is an important provision of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would this give residents of the State of New York six years from the time that this bill, if enacted into law, went into effect?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Six years from the time the right to sue accrues, and one year from the passage of this act.

Section 9 of the proposed law repeals sections 206 and 209 of the present statutes. This is the provision of the proposed law which will be most expensive to the Government, and to my mind it is one of the most important provisions of the proposed law.

On June 7 last the time expired wherein disabled men could file their claims for disability compensation and present evidence in substantiation of those claims. There were two classes of the disabled who did not file their claims and present evidence before the expiration of the time provided in the statute. One class is made up of men who were very badly disabled, but who would not ask the Government for anything. They came back from the war and said they were able to work without the Government helping them. They were not too proud to engage in the conflict, but they were too proud to file their claims. A time may come when the fortunes of life are not good to those men, and they should not be prohibited from presenting their claims and filing their evidence if they desire to do so. Then there is another class of men all over the United States who, no matter what law is passed by Congress, will never know that such a law has been passed, and there are men in this country, who were seriously disabled, that to-day do not realize that this Congress and this Government have been liberal with respect to the disabled men, and they have not filed their claims. There are in the Veterans' Bureau to-day claims which will next year require an expenditure of about $3,000,000. Those claims are already allowed by the bureau; they are absolutely legitimate and they are entirely legal, but these men are prohibited from presenting claims by reason of the statute of limitations.

The third most important of these provisions, as I see them, is section 13.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield before he leaves that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. I do not just get the intent and purpose of the amendment in section 11. I was not aware that there was a distinction under the provisions of the existing law. I am referring to section 11 of the bill which amends section 212.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. At the present time, if a man has a converted insurance policy, which is ordinary life, he can convert it to the more expensive policy.

Mr. NEWTON. I am referring to section 11 of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman is referring to the widows?

Mr. NEWTON. Yes; widows and children.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. At present there is a discrimination. The widows in the class described in the bill secure $25 a month, while the widows immediately before the date given in the report and immediately after the date given in the report receive $30 a month, and all we have desired to do is to equalize those classes of widows.

Mr. NEWTON. I was not aware that there is a distinction.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; it removes a discrimination against that class of widows of $5 a month and puts them on a parity with all other widows.

Section 13 of the bill, which I was about to discuss before yielding to the gentleman from Minnesota, opens up Government insurance to service men who have lapsed their policies. This costs the Government nothing, it is the best insurance in the world, and the men ought to be allowed to take it. It is self-sustaining.

There were many men who came back from the war who had obligations and did not feel they could carry this insurance. They were mostly young men. Their average age to-day is only about 33 years. Many of them dropped their insurance. All the committee has desired to do is to give them the opportunity to take this converted insurance if they are physically able to pass the examination.

This is the best and the cheapest insurance in the world, liberalized as we have liberalized it in this bill. On the average it is 28 per cent cheaper than equivalent insurance written by any private insurance company, and this is because there is no overhead and there are no agents' premiums.

The Congress has not desired to open the insurance privileges to the public and engage the Government in competition with insurance companies, but we have felt that this right of renewal should be given to every service man who was given a policy during the years of the war.

I want to call the attention of the Congress especially to the fact that this is converted insurance and not term insurance. The term insurance which the men were given during the war was paid for partly by themselves and partly by the Government. This term insurance to date has cost the American Government $1,400,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman states that if a veteran has permitted his insurance to lapse or if he has failed to convert his insurance under the provisions of the bill now before us he can convert his insurance provided he is physically perfect. Is there any provision made for the veterans who, on account of illness, did not avail themselves of the opportunity to convert and are now rejected by reason of their physical condition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No; and I will tell the gentleman why that provision could not be included in the law. The payments made out of the insurance fund do not come from the Government. They come from you and from myself and from everyone of us that carry Government insurance. The Government is purely the trustee of the money paid as premiums by the service men of the United States who have this insurance. It is a sacred trust fund. If we would adopt an amendment such as the gentleman suggests it would be paid, not by the Government, but it would be paid from the pockets of the provident men who did keep their insurance and who have paid the premium throughout all these years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So, if a veteran, such as I have described, should die, then his dependents would have whatever allowance the law provides for dependent relatives.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is quite correct.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, certainly.

Mr. SCHAFER. Sometimes in respect of this war-risk insurance it is hard to tell whether the insurance payments are going to be made and to whom they are going to be made. There have been many hundreds of cases held up in the Veterans' Bureau of automatic reinstatement of insurance owing to a conflict in the decisions of the Attorney General, the Comptroller General, the Veterans' Bureau, and the Federal courts. I think the time is at hand when legislation should be enacted to make certain what will become of the insurance that these veterans are carrying. Some of these cases on automatic reinstatements have been held up in adjudication for a year pending a solution of these various decisions.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would say to the gentleman we can only let time work that out, but I want to make it clear that we should not take any liberties or trifle with this fund, because it is purely a trust fund coming from the men who have paid their premiums.

Mr. NEWTON and Mr. HILL of Alabama rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield first to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON. I want to inquire about a case of this sort. Here is a soldier who dropped his insurance or did not take out any insurance at all and he is in good health, and just as long as he remains in good health, as I understand it, he can make application at any time in the future, paying whatever is the then premium.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Based on his age.

Mr. NEWTON. Based on his age, and have the benefits of this insurance?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is correct.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman has really answered my question. In other words, this removes all limitation so far as converted insurance is concerned if the veteran is in good health.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On page 15, line 2, there is the language, "or if the designated beneficiary survives the insured and dies before receiving all of the installments of converted insurance payable and applicable, then there shall be paid to the estate of such beneficiary the present value of the remaining unpaid monthly installments." This is a change in the present law, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not think so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It goes to the estate of the deceased soldier.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. There comes in the difference between converted insurance and term insurance. The soldier himself is paying for this insurance, and we felt there should be no limitation and that he should be allowed to have the money go where he desired; but on term insurance, where the Government, as I have said, has spent $1,400,000,000, it was thought that the Government might have something to say about who the beneficiary should be. On converted insurance, that the soldier pays for himself, we thought the Government ought to have nothing to say about who the beneficiary should be. That is done by this proposed law now under discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why not allow the law of the State to determine that? Suppose the beneficiary has remarried and the deceased soldier leaves parents in needy circumstances?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Then it would be paid to the beneficiaries of the deceased soldier.

I still think that was in the original war risk law or veterans' act of 1924, as amended, and we are not attempting to change it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It goes to the estate of the deceased soldier, and that is where it should go.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is peculiar that a moment ago another Member of the House was objecting because it did not go that way.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will yield, under the war-risk insurance we can only designate certain degrees of relatives. I made certain persons my beneficiaries, because to name others would not be within the relationship. Therefore there was some reason for a provision of that kind. As the gentleman suggests, it is quite possible that if a beneficiary named commences to derive the benefits of the insurance and thereafter dies an entire new set of relatives get the benefit.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I append the report:

(Report to accompany H. R. 13039)

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13039) to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, having considered the same, report thereon with recommendation that it be passed as amended. The bill, as now presented, proposes several substantial changes to which the attention of the House of Representatives should be specifically directed. They are as follows:

1. Section 1 of the bill amends section 19 of the act by establishing a uniform statute of limitations for suits on contracts of insurance. At the present time, under the conformity act, the statutes of limitations of the various States apply. The periods of limitations in these statutes vary from 3 to 20 years, the average being 6 years. The committee believes that the average statute of limitation, namely six years, should be applied to these suits, with an additional year from the date of passage of this amendatory act for all suits. In computing the limitation period it is provided that the time from the date of filing claim for insurance benefits to the date of disallowance of the claim by the director shall not be included. Further, it is provided that the period of limitation shall not run during the time a person is under legal disability or is rated as incompetent by the bureau, and that such person shall have three years from date of removal of disability in which to sue. The amended section is made applicable to suits which have been heretofore rejected under the State statutes of limitations, pending suits, as well as future suits.

2. Section 2 of the bill, as amended, amends section 21, subdivision 2, of the World War veterans' act to provide authority in the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau for the payment of the expenses of original appointments of guardians, curators, and conservators of incompetent beneficiaries. At the present time the law provides for the payment of such expenses incident to any investigation or court proceeding for the removal of a guardian, curator, or conservator, who has not properly executed the duties of his trust, and the appointment of a new guardian, curator, or conservator, but it is not within the power of the director to secure the appointment of such a fiduciary in the first instance and pay the expenses of the proceeding. The cost of this item is estimated at $164,000 per annum.

3. Section 3 of the bill, as amended, amends section 28 of the World War veterans' act, as amended, under which authority now exists for waiver of recovery of payments from any beneficiary who, in the judgment of the director, is without fault on his part and where, in the judgment of the director, such recovery would defeat the purpose of benefits otherwise authorized or would be against equity and good conscience, by the substitution of the word "person" for the word "beneficiary." Under the language of this section at present, as construed by the bureau and the Comptroller General, the word "beneficiary" does not comprehend persons who are not legal beneficiaries under the statute; for instance, in a case where, upon the evidence submitted, the bureau has paid insurance or compensation to a person who was alleged to be the widow of an ex-service man, but who, it subsequently appears, was not his widow for the reason that prior to her marriage to the veteran he was married to another woman from whom he was not legally divorced, recovery can not be waived, because the woman, not being the veteran's widow, could legally not be a beneficiary within the meaning of that term as used in the World War veterans' act, as amended. It is obviously unjust, however, to attempt to recover in such a case, both the payee and the bureau being without fault. The substitution of the word "person" for the word "beneficiary" will cure the situation. There is also included language to the effect that no disbursing officer shall be held liable for any amount paid by him to any person where the recovery of such amount is waived under this section. The purpose of this amendment is to relieve disbursing officers from liability on their bonds through payments made through error, the recovery of which has been waived under authority of section 28. At the present time the Comptroller General holds that, although recovery may be waived in so far as the payee is concerned, the disbursing officer is nevertheless liable under his bond for the erroneous disbursement. It is estimated that this would result in an immediate cost of $218,500 and an annual cost of $84,850 thereafter.

4. Section 4 of the bill, as amended, adds a new section to Title I of the World War veterans' act, as amended, to be known as section 34, and to provide authority for the director to enter into private contracts for the services of translators without regard to the civil service laws and the classification act of 1923. This amendment is included to enable the director to procure the translation of correspondence from foreign languages into English, and English into foreign languages, by the piece, where the foreign language is unusual and so seldom encountered in the administration of the bureau as not to justify the hiring of a translator on a salary basis. The director has found it economical to enter into private contracts in such cases rather than to employ a regular translator at an annual salary, but the Comptroller General has held that such procedure is unauthorized. It is estimated that the cost of this provision would be approximately $300. The amendment is made retroactive to June 7, 1924, in order that translators who have heretofore performed services under this arrangement may be reimbursed.

5. Section 5 of the bill, as amended, adds a new section to Title I of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, to be known as section 35, and to provide authority for the purchase of transcripts of the record, including the evidence of trial of litigated cases. This section is recommended by the bureau in order that in the future review of such cases the bureau would have the full benefit of evidence adduced at trial. It is estimated that this amendment will cost approximately $10,000 per year.

6. Section 6 of the bill amends section 201, subdivision (1), of the statute, which now provides an allowance of $100 plus $7 for a flag to drape the casket in cases where a veteran dies after discharge or resignation from the service and does not leave assets which, in the judgment of the director, should be applied to meet the expenses of burial and funeral and the transportation of the body, so as to provide for the payment of $107 in all cases in which the director, in his discretion and with due regard to the circumstances of each case, may decide that the sum should be allowed. Provision is also made that the director may make contracts for burial and funeral services without regard to the laws providing for advertisement and acceptance of the lowest bid, in order that the director shall be no longer bound by the law requiring him to accept the lowest bid offered, but, on the other hand, may accept the bid which will provide the best funeral within the amount allowed for burial and funeral expenses. Further provision is made so as to permit payments under contracts heretofore made on this basis by the director in an effort to provide respectable burials, but which have been disallowed by the Comptroller General.

This section of the bill also proposes to amend subdivision (3) of section 201 by the addition of a new proviso authorizing the payment of compensation to children after the age of 18 years, and until completion of education or training, where such children are or may hereafter be pursuing a course of instruction at a school, college, academy, seminary, technical institute, or university particularly designated by them and approved by the director. This allowance is to be continued until such children reach the age of 21 years, or terminate their attendance at school. It is estimated that this provision would result in a total increased cost to the Government of $1,007,900.

7. Section 7 proposes to amend section 202, subdivision (7), first paragraph, by increasing the amount of compensation now paid to disabled veterans who have no dependents and who are being maintained by the Government in hospitals from $20 to $30 per month. This amendment would result in an increased cost to the Government of $699,000 annually.

8. Section 8 of the bill proposes to amend subdivision (12) of section 202 by substituting the word "may" for the word "shall," so as to give the director discretion in making apportionments of compensation where the disabled person and his wife are not living together, or where the children are not in the custody of the disabled person. At the present time the language of this subdivision is mandatory and leaves no discretion in the director as to whether an apportionment shall be made regardless of the circumstances in the case. The object of the amendment is to permit the director to inquire into the reasons for the separation and to make apportionments only in those cases where the facts warrant, and although it places on the bureau the functions of a court of domestic relations it nevertheless is important, from the standpoint of justice to those veterans who are separated from their wives through the misconduct of the latter, that the law no longer contain a mandate requiring apportionment in favor of a wife without regard to the circumstances of the separation. There would be no increased cost due to this amendment.

9. Sections 9 and 10 of the bill provide for the repeal of sections 206 and 209 of the statute, which now contain limitations on filing claim and proof thereof. It is estimated that the repeal of these two sections will result in an increased cost to the Government of $3,342,516 the first year.

10. Section 11 of the bill adds a proviso to section 212 of the World War veterans' act, to provide that where the widow, child, or children of a deceased veteran are entitled to compensation by virtue of an accrued right under the war risk insurance act, as amended, the rates of compensation shall be the same as now paid to widows and children who are receiving compensation under the World War veterans' act, as amended. This amendment is proper in view of the fact that the dependents of veterans who died of injuries received during the period of time covered by the war risk insurance act, but not between April 6, 1917, and July 2, 1921, the period of the World War as defined by the World War veterans' act, are now paid at the rate provided by the old statute. It is fair to put all these dependents on the same basis. This amendment will result in an increased cost to the Government of $12,000 annually.

11. Section 12 amends section 300 of the act by removing the restriction on the designation of a beneficiary for converted insurance to a permitted class. The permitted class of beneficiaries will still remain in the statute in so far as yearly renewable term insurance is concerned. The committee is of the opinion that in view of the fact that the insured under converted insurance is paying an ample premium for the protection afforded, he should be given the same right with regard to designating a beneficiary, or changing a beneficiary, as he would have under a commercial insurance policy. This amendment will make unnecessary the amendment providing that trustees be included among the permitted class of beneficiaries for converted insurance. There will be no additional cost attached to this amendment.

12. Section 13 of the bill amends section 301 of the act merely to make the provisions of that section conform to the amendatory section removing the permitted class of beneficiaries for converted insurance and to permit reconversion of converted insurance to policies of a lower premium rate, other than the five-year term, where the insured is in good health. Evidence was produced to show that immediately following the war many men bought endowment policies which carry a high premium rate; they are now finding it impossible to continue the premiums on these policies, and it was believed that by permitting them, if they are in good health, to transfer to a lower premium rate policy they would be able to continue the insurance. No additional cost will result under this amendment.

13. Section 14 of the bill adds a new section to the act to be known as section 310. This section authorizes the granting of converted insurance to any man who has heretofore applied, or has been eligible to apply, for either yearly renewable term or converted insurance if he is now in good health and submits evidence to this effect satisfactory to the director. The committee believes that this amendment will not only be beneficial to the veterans but also to the United States Government life converted insurance fund, as it will permit men in good health to take out converted insurance and thereby increase the number of good risks carrying this form of insurance.

14. Section 15 of the bill adds a new section to the act to be known as section 311. Evidence was presented to the committee showing that under the present law many veterans had been rated temporarily totally disabled for long periods of time and then rated permanently and totally disabled. As a result of this, in many instances the policy lapsed before the permanent total disability was effective, and no insurance was payable. The committee believes that it was the intention of Congress that cases of this kind should be payable, and in order to insure that the benefits might be paid this amendment is recommended. The effect of the amendment is this: It leaves the two previous maturing factors for insurance, namely, death or total disability, as they are. It adds an additional maturing factor, namely, whenever an insured has been totally disabled for 12 months the benefits shall be payable from the beginning of total disability during the continuance of such total disability. The amendment is only made retroactive in those cases where there has been a period of total disability followed by a rating of permanent total disability. It does not cover retroactively cases of men who previously have been rated temporarily totally disabled but who have since recovered. A special proviso is included protecting applications, reinstatements, and conversions heretofore made. The cost of this section is figured at $9,200,000 for term insurance and $450,000 for converted insurance.

The total increased cost of this entire bill for the first year is estimated at $5,632,346.

The figures given in this report are the official figures furnished by the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, there are very few benefits as far as compensation is concerned extended by the bill brought in at this time. The principal benefit is that contained in the provision that there shall be no time limit for filing the applications for compensation, provided the man can show service connection of his disability. I think that is a proper provision. There should be no time limit of you can trace the disability to service.

There are a few administrative changes made to help the bureau in the administration of the law. There is a provision to raise the pay of the mentally incompetent person who is in a hospital and who has been there for six months, and who has no dependents, from the present allowance of $20 a month to $30 a month. There is a provision for the small allowance to children of deceased veterans now entitled to compensation to be continued to them until they become 21 years of age, provided they are in school. This was insisted on by the service organization and I think it is proper legislation.

Beyond that there has been no change in the compensation benefits that I recall. The principal reforms brought about by the bill are those in regard to insurance which have been explained to you. It provides that if the policy has been converted to an endowment policy it can be reduced to the ordinary life policy costing less money providing the man desires to do that in order to carry it at a less cost.

It provides that a man may designate any beneficiary he desires instead of being confined to a class set out in the original insurance, that of a dependent.

It sets a limit as to when the monthly payment from the Government on account of insurance may accrue to him because of total disability. Most of the old-line insurance companies provide in the total-disability clause that when they reach a totally disabled condition for three months, or 90 days, it is conclusive against the company and disability benefits must begin. In other words, if a man is totally disabled for three months he must be paid his disability insurance until he becomes able again to carry on his work. This bill does not go that far, but provides that if a man has been rated by the bureau as having a total disability, whether temporary or permanent, for one year he becomes eligible for monthly payments, and they are paid as long as he is totally disabled.

There are many reforms that I think should have been made in the law which we were not able to get into the bill at this time. Many of these corrections, if made at the present, would postpone the time when service pensions will be demanded. All of us are aware that there is quite an insistence from some parts that we disregard service connection and pay the man for disabilities regardless of the origin of them. If the number of cases who are entitled to compensation but are defeated because of technicalities of the law are permitted to persist and multiply, that demand will grow greater as time passes, and we could easier answer it by doing justice to all who can reasonably show their service-connected injury. I regret that time will not permit me to enumerate them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, before speaking on the bill under consideration I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that sooner or later it will be necessary to consider legislation which will aid the Veterans' Bureau in retaining the services of the physicians and surgeons now serving in the bureau. In the last few minutes the House has passed the hospital bill (H. R. 12821), which authorizes an appropriation of $15,000,000 for the purpose of constructing new hospitals, as well as expanding the facilities at other hospitals. On the 1st of March the United States Veterans' Bureau was operating 50 hospitals and using a part of 48 other Government hospitals, and 168 civilian hospitals. On this date there were 7,301 tubercular patients, 6,985 general medical and surgical patients, and 12,857 neuropsychiatric patients in these hospitals. There were on this date, then, a total of 27,143 patients in these various hospitals.

The House is to be commended for passing this hospital bill. The additional facilities are badly needed, but while we are providing the hospitals for these patients we are not properly caring for the medical personnel and the nurses in all of these institutions. From 15 to 20 per cent of the doctors leave the service each year, and each year it becomes more difficult to procure the necessary personnel. Young doctors are not willing to enter into a service that has no future, and I venture to say that there is no doctor on the floor of the House who would go to work in one of the present Veterans' Bureau hospitals, or engage in medical work connected in the central or regional offices. The peak of the load in neuropsychiatric cases will not be reached until the year 1944, while possibly the peak of the load in tuberculosis, general medical, and surgical cases will not depreciably diminish for some years yet. If the Government is to properly care for the disabled men, then it can be done only by first providing an adequate number of competent doctors and nurses; and, second, by providing the necessary hospital facilities. There is before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation a bill for the creation of a medical corps in the Veterans' Bureau where a future is guaranteed to the physician or nurse who enters the service.

Mr. KINDRED. Do not the remarks of the gentleman apply particularly to those disabled veterans who have mental and nervous diseases?

Mr. BULWINKLE. In answer to the gentleman from New York, who is a distinguished member of the medical profession, they do; and furthermore, as I have stated before, that load is increasing each year. The establishment of a medical corps in the Veterans' Bureau will cost an additional sum of money, but it is absolutely necessary to establish this corps in order to properly care for the disabled and supply the new hospitals, as well as the old hospitals, with the medical personnel and nurses.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is very probable, then, that better service could be rendered the disabled men if there were a thoroughly organized and permanent medical personnel in the hospital. And from a humanitarian standpoint a great advantage would be gained, and undoubtedly the expense would be less in the end, making it an advantage from an economic standpoint.

Mr. BULWINKLE. In my opinion; yes.

The bill now under consideration before the House is a general legislative bill from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and it consists of 15 amendments to the existing law. Five of these amendments are largely administrative, six of them relate to compensation, and four amend the present law in regard to Government insurance. The first amendment, and the first class of cases that I speak of is the administrative, provides for a six-year statute of limitations, which will be, when the law goes into effect, a uniform statute of limitations on suits on contracts of insurance. The periods of limitation in the statutes of the various States are different. They vary from 3 to 20 years.

The second section of the bill as amended amends section 21, subdivision 2, of the World War veterans' act and gives the authority to the director to pay for the expenses necessary for the appointment of guardians of incompetent beneficiaries.

The third amendment waives the recovery of payments heretofore made to any beneficiary who in the judgment of the director is without fault and where in the judgment of the director a recovery would be against equity and good conscience.

The fourth amendment as provided in the bill gives authority to the director to employ translators, and the fifth provides for the purchasing of transcripts in litigated cases.

Now, as to the amendments which affect the disabled men and the beneficiaries of the bureau, the first is amendment 6, which amends section 201 of the World War veterans' act of 1924. This section relates to the payment of the sum of $100 plus the sum of $7 for a flag when a veteran dies.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In regard to the amendment which authorizes the director to pay $100 funeral expenses and $7 for a flag, if a veteran dies to-day you have to show that he is a pauper to get the $100.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; that is practically correct under the present law, but under the proposed amendment, though, the $100, or the $107, as the case may be, can be paid by the director in his discretion and with due regard to the circumstances of each case to such person or persons as are entitled to this sum. The main thought of the committee on this amendment was to authorize the director to pay in the case of each funeral the sum of $100, but only in those cases where a necessity existed for the payment. And the House will take notice that this amendment removes the Comptroller General from passing upon the decision of the Director of the Veterans' Bureau. Too often in the past the Comptroller General ruled that whatever assets, no matter how small an amount, left by the deceased veteran should be applied to the cost of the funeral. From now on, as I have just stated, the Comptroller General will have nothing to do with this section. The amendment allows $7, so that if the family of the deceased veteran wishes to purchase a flag, they can do so, providing, of course, that the item in regard to the flag, as well as to the expenditure of the $100, shall be under the regulations promulgated by the bureau.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It is my understanding that the matter of funeral expenses is entirely in the hands of the director and not subject to a decision of the Comptroller General.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; that is true if the present amendment before the House becomes a law, but under the law as it now stands the Comptroller General reviews the decision of the director.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Go back to the conditions in the hospitals; what the gentleman says about making a career for the Medical Corps is quite correct, but in the very nature of things it is difficult to keep a good medical man in the Government or in any institutional service.

Mr. BULWINKLE. There does not seem to be much trouble in keeping a good medical man in the Army, Navy, or Public Health Service.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman also add on my authority that there is no such difficulty in obtaining and keeping the services of competent physicians in the gentleman's own State of New York in the State hospital system for the insane, where good salaries are paid and proper facilities given.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Reverting again to the bill under discussion, section 7 proposes to amend section 202, subdivision 7, by increasing the amount of compensation now paid to disabled veterans who have no dependents and who are being maintained by the Government in hospitals. The amount of the increase is from $20 to $30 per month. This provision does not in reality cost the Government anything.

Section 8 of the bill merely amends the present law by substituting the word "may" for "shall," thus giving the director the discretion in making apportionments of compensation where the disabled person and his wife are not living together. I imagine that practically every Representative in Congress has had some of these cases within the last few years, cases where a wife has left her husband but continues to receive part of his compensation.

Sections 9 and 10 of the bill, which repeal sections 206 and 209 of the present law, mean more to the disabled men than any of the other provisions of this bill, especially to those veterans who were disabled and who have not filed any claim for compensation. The repeal of these two sections removes the limitation on filing a claim. The bureau estimates that this repeal will cost something over $3,000,000 a year. I do not see how they can arrive at that conclusion. The repeal of these two sections means absolute justice for all veterans.

Section 11 of the bill amends the present law, section 212 of the World War veterans' act, by adding a proviso, and I am very much interested in this section. It provides for continuing to give compensation until the minor arrives at the age of 21, and provided that the minor attends a school, college, or other educational institution. General Harris, United States Army, retired, national director of education and vocational training of war orphans of the American Legion, was very much interested in this proviso, and in a statement that he made to me it is the intention of the Legion to request the various States to give scholarships in the educational institutions to these same children provided for in this section. This section adds a slight cost to the Government each year until probably 1943.

Sections 12, 13, 14, and 15 relate to the insurance provisions of the law, and, in brief, these sections relate to a change in beneficiaries, a change in the policy, the granting of converted insurance to any man who has heretofore applied who is not in good health, and in the event of temporary disability for 12 months that the policy matures. The amendment offered by the chairman of the committee provides that the last-named amendment shall not be retroactive prior to one year before the passage of this act.

This bill will help the veterans of the World War. While it is not all that is to be desired, yet the changes that have been made as provided in these amendments are for the best and will be satisfactory and for the good of all concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I take this one minute to express my especial approval of that provision in this pending bill which allows a veteran to file his claim if he can connect his disability with the service, notwithstanding the time limit may have expired. I think that if a veteran can show by competent evidence that he is disabled, and that this disability is the result of his service in the Army, he should be entitled to compensation, and no statute of limitation should bar him. I am glad the committee has amended the law in that respect.

Under leave to extend my remarks I desire to express my approval briefly of other provisions of the bill. Section 13 of the bill permits reconversion of connected insurance to policies of a lower premium rate. It is quite evident that immediately following the war many men bought endowment policies which carry a high premium rate; they are now finding it impossible to continue the high premiums on these policies. This bill will permit them to transfer to a lower premium-rate policy, and should enable many men to keep their insurance who would otherwise have to drop it. It is very desirable that these men should keep their insurance in force, and this amendment is a good one.

This same section also provides that the bureau may make provision in the contract for converted insurance for optional settlements, to be selected by the insured, whereby such insurance may be made payable, either in one sum or in installments for 36 months or more. Installment payments are often much better than lump-sum payments and afford a much greater protection to the beneficiary.

Too frequently when the beneficiary receives a lump-sum payment bad investments are made and the money is soon gone.

Monthly payments are, therefore, often much preferable to lump-sum payments, and where the amount of the insurance payments are sufficiently large to justify it 240 monthly payments is an excellent plan. There are many other provisions of the bill which I heartily approve and feel will result in a decided improvement over present law. I, therefore, gladly give the bill my support.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the Members of the House that I am sure the members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation realize that there are a good many meritorious amendments incorporated in individual bills that have been introduced by Members of Congress and referred to the Veterans' Committee. I may say that I have in mind certain things that I think should be added to the existing law. Some of these things are covered by individual bills already introduced. Of course, other members of the committee may feel differently about these things which I think ought to be enacted into law, and they no doubt have other remedial amendments in their minds that they think are good and that they would like to see in the law. But all those things will eventually be ironed out. I am sure the House understands that the fundamentals concerning hospitalization and compensation have already been laid down in the law, and these amendments, such as we bring before you in this bill to-day, are in most cases highly technical and very complicated, and a great deal of close study is really necessary if we expect to arrive at intelligent decisions.

So, in bringing this bill before the House to-day, embracing, as it does, many remedial amendments, the committee is suggesting to the House certain needed changes in the law, most of which are noncontroversial, the need for most of these amendments being so clearly evident that there was very little difference of opinion about them in committee, and it seems that no real objection can be raised against any of the provisions of this bill.

For myself, I will say that I wish the committee could have reported out, in this bill, some other propositions that I think ought to be taken care of properly by law at the earliest possible time. For example, I believe we should give consideration immediately to the matter of making provision for a medical corps for the Veterans' Bureau, in order that we may keep intact a splendid corps of doctors and thereby guarantee the best possible attention and treatment for our comrades, those victims of the great conflict who are disabled, or sick, and who should have the best of medical care and attention. So, in order that we may figure on an efficient medical corps in the Veterans' Bureau all along down the years to come, as well as in the present, I feel we should pass the necessary legislation here providing for a real medical corps for the Veterans' Bureau. Then there are some classes of ex-soldiers not now included in the general hospitalization provisions of the law, according to the present language in the law, that I think should be taken in. I believe the law should be amended in that respect. Members of Congress have introduced bills on such subjects as these which I have mentioned, as well as on other subjects concerning the welfare of sick and disabled veterans, and I am sure that I can say to the House that your committee promises that it will continue to study all these problems and we hope to be able to submit further amendments to the House covering other meritorious proposals at the earliest possible time. Let me again say, however, that most of these amendments now being offered raise some very fine points, and considerable study is necessary in order that these matters may be adjusted in a manner which will be wise and which will be fair and just to all parties concerned.

I am glad that there seems to be no indication of any objection here in the House to these remedial amendments which are incorporated in this bill, and which have received the unanimous approval of the members of your committee, and upon which we are now asking your indorsement.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] no doubt means to refer to the proof of 10 per cent necessary to get compensation after showing the connection of the disability with the service?

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Yes. Many of them have not kept their records and have been examined since they came home and have developed diseases which, under the rules, the bureau can not treat for them.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say that we are trying to liberalize the laws every year so as to cover those cases.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I ask the gentleman whether there is anything in this bill that tends to liberalize that proof?

Mr. CONNERY. For six years, I will say to the gentleman, we have been asking the bureau officials, when they came before our committee, what can be done to remedy that defect, and I have not received a satisfactory answer to that question as yet.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the gentleman think there is more complaint against that evil than against anything else?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I think it is the worst evil in the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Many of the men have recently called upon the Veterans' Bureau to pay compensation for tuberculosis where the bureau previously paid them for tuberculosis, and now that the Congress has awarded a rating for that by statute they turn around and say he has never had tuberculosis, but has had bronchitis.

Mr. CONNERY. That can be remedied by having a real medical bureau established in the bureau instead of horse doctors, as some of the doctors of the bureau should be termed.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I want to say that the words "horse doctors" are too flattering to be applied to some of them.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman has referred to the fact that after receiving $50 compensation for tuberculosis such patients had recovered sufficiently to have bronchitis. I will say that in these cases of arrested tuberculosis very few cases of eventual recovery are noticed. That is one of the defective conditions in the administration of the law at the present time.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman, I believe, was speaking sarcastically of the way in which some of the bureau officials try to side-step the real case of the veteran.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts has spoken fairly of the physicians in the bureau when he speaks of their being "horse doctors." Of course, there are in many cases instances like that suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], where men have received compensation for tuberculosis which they never had; cases where doctors who made the prior examination and rating were exceedingly liberal in giving the veteran the benefit of the doubt. I do not think they should be condemned as "horse doctors" for their extreme liberality when subsequent examinations, hospitalization, and review indicate that tuberculosis never existed.

Mr. CONNERY. I did not say that all the doctors in the bureau were "horse doctors." There are many A1 doctors in the bureau who are giving wonderful service to the veterans, but I mean exactly what I say when I called some of them "horse doctors," because from my long experience in disabled men's cases time after time I have run up against the most absurd ratings by these doctors who have rated men at less than 10 per cent disabled who were almost dead at the time of the rating and who did die shortly after such rating. No one realizes better than General Hines that we must have a medical corps if we desire to keep the good doctors and weed out the incompetent. There is much to be done yet for the disabled men of this country before they will be adequately cared for. Let us hope that it will be done as speedily as possible if we intend to even attempt to pay the great debt we owe them for the sacrifices they have made.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the insurance heads of the big insurance companies of the United States who came before the committee, at the request of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PERKINS] who did such wonderful work on the hearings in reference to the insurance provisions of this bill. Everyone of them made it plain to us that they not only favored Government insurance but that they were sending their agents throughout the country and having them tell service men to take out Government insurance. I think that is a fine, patriotic position for those insurance companies to take, and it is in very distinct contrast with certain other companies in the United States which are telling the soldiers to take their insurance. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the measure under consideration at this time appears to be rather technical and not easily understood without considerable study. Not being a member of the committee which brought out the pending bill, I confess I have not given it the study that I should have liked. I was not aware of the fact that the World War Veterans' Committee chairman [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota] would call up the measure to-day, but inasmuch as I have introduced a number of measures proposing to amend the present law to eliminate a lot of red tape, I desire to say a few words in favor of the passage of this measure, which, I am assured by the committee, has been prepared primarily for that purpose.

I thank my distinguished colleague from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] for his unusual kindness in extending to me a small part of his valuable time, and I want to say to Members of this House that I know the former service men of the World War are deeply grateful to him for the valuable services he has rendered in behalf of our disabled soldiers. The name of ROYAL JOHNSON is loved and revered and often mentioned among legionnaires of Oklahoma. I am sure this might also be said in every section of the country.

The pending measure does not contain all the provisions I had hoped and had really expected in this committee bill. There are many provisions of needed legislation which are conspicuously absent from this bill. I wish I had time to name some of them; but merely because the measure does not give the relief I had hoped it would contain, I certainly shall not raise my voice against it, and I hope none of my colleagues will do so.

I am especially interested in section 6, which amends section 201 of the present law, which would provide $107 burial fee to veterans who die without assets, the $7 extra for a United States flag to drape the casket. This belated recognition of World War veterans is a just one and will meet with their unanimous approval.

Another proviso in the same section, as I understand this bill, authorizes the payment of compensation to minors under 18 years of age who are attending school, instead of forcing them to wait until they are of age, as is the case with the present law. Certainly no one can object to this important provision of the bill.

Another section, proposing to amend the present law to pay disabled war veterans who have no dependants and who are in Government hospitals the sum of $30 a month instead of the paltry amount of $20 a month, as is now being paid, is a commendable feature, and I am sure will be given ungrudgingly by this Congress. This extra $10 increase will lighten the hearts of those buddies of ours for whom the war did not end when the armistice was signed.

Other provisions of the pending measure relate to Government insurances, and amends the present insurance laws. That the present law is cumbersome, highly technical, and altogether unsatisfactory no one who is really informed will pretend to deny. But I shall not go into a discussion of that at this time. There is no doubt in my mind but what this law will necessarily have to be amended in several other ways before it can be satisfactorily administered. But the American Legion will never rest, nor will it let the Congress rest until our disabled men and their dependents, including their widows, parents, and children have just and adequate consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire at this time to direct attention to one phase of the service-men compensation that is particularly applicable to the Territory of Hawaii. We have there at the present time 21 men who gave of their services during the World War and who are afflicted with leprosy. According to the World War veterans' act they are only allowed one year in which to prove service connection in which it is presumed that the disease is of service origin. We know nothing at all regarding leprosy. In connection with tuberculosis, about which we know a great deal, they are allowed six years. Not only are these men suffering with what is called a loathsome and terrible disease, but they are segregated. They can not go out into the world and choose an occupation in which they can earn a living of any kind. They are isolated on an island in our Territory, and those in this country who are afflicted in the same way are isolated in Louisiana.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I asked the gentleman about this when he came before the committee, but will the gentleman tell us who is taking care of those who are thus afflicted?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. CONNERY. Did not the gentleman say that Sisters of Charity were taking care of them?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The Territory is taking care of them through employees and helpers and amongst those there are some Sisters of Charity who are doing wonderful work indeed.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the gentleman contend that this leprosy has any service connection?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. We feel it must have been of service origin, otherwise I would not come and ask for any relief in this connection. Leprosy is a disease about which little is known, but it is probably due to contact with others in the service who had been previously afflicted. Eight of these men have been able to prove service connection, but the others have not yet been able to prove such connection. Otherwise than by drawing attention to this particular fact I can not now have the bill amended. Except for the above omission I feel the bill is a very worthy bill and that its other features are admirable. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass H. R. 5527, a bill to prevent fraud, deception, or improper practice in connection with business before the United States Patent Office, and for other purposes, with certain amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules and pass House bill 5527, with amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person who has not complied with the rules and regulations of the Commissioner of Patents governing the recognition of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing applicants or other parties, in the United States Patent Office, which have been prescribed in accordance with the provisions of section 487 of the Revised Statutes, and who has not been so recognized or who is disbarred from practice before the United States Patent Office, to hold himself out to be or assume to be a patent agent, patent attorney, or counselor with respect to patent applications, or in any manner convey the impression that he either alone or together with any other person or persons, has, owns, conducts, or maintains an office of any kind for preparing, prosecuting, or advising with respect to applications for patents, or for compensation to act or practice as a patent agent, patent attorney, or counselor with respect to matters relating to patents before the United States Patent Office, or to habitually aid or assist, directly or indirectly, in the preparation, presentation, or prosecution of any patent applications pending or patent matters contemplated to be brought before the United States Patent Office: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent any attorney who is legally admitted to practice law in any State or Territory of the United States, unless he has been disbarred from practice before the Patent Office, from advising any client as to patent matters, or cooperating with any duly registered patent attorney in obtaining a patent, or acting as counsel in any patent litigation. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than two years, or both. This section shall not apply to clerks or others supervised by persons duly admitted to practice before the United States Patent Office.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for a corporation or an association to be admitted to practice before the United States Patent Office, and it shall be unlawful for a corporation or association to hold itself out to the public, advertise, or otherwise represent itself to be or assume to be a patent agent, patent attorney, or counselor with respect to patent applications, or in any manner convey the impression that it has, owns, conducts, or maintains an office of any kind for preparing, prosecuting, or advising with respect to applications for patents for any person other than itself, or for compensation to act or practice as a patent agent, patent attorney, or counselor with respect to matters relating to patents before the United States Patent Office, or to make it a business to so act for any person other than itself, or to advertise that, either alone or together with or by or through any person, whether such person be duly and regularly admitted to practice before the United States Patent Office or not, it can or does perform such duties. It shall further be unlawful for any corporation or association to solicit, itself or by or through its officers, agents, or employees, an opportunity to prepare, prosecute, or advise with respect to applications for patents. Any corporation or association violating the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not more than $5,000, and any officer, trustee, director, agent, member, or employee of such corporation or association who directly or indirectly engages in any of the herein prohibited acts in behalf of the corporation or association, or assists such corporation or association to do such prohibited acts, shall be liable to a fine of not more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. The fact that any such officer, trustee, or director, or member, or employees shall be duly and regularly admitted to practice before the United States Patent Office shall not be held to permit or allow any such corporation or association to do the acts prohibited herein, nor shall such fact be a defense in a trial of any such person mentioned herein for the violation of this section. This section shall not prohibit a corporation or association from employing an attorney or attorneys in and about its own immediate affairs or the affairs of organizations owned or controlled by it before the United States Patent Office.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent a corporation or association from furnishing to any person admitted to practice before the United States Patent Office such information or such clerical services in and about his professional work as, except for the provisions of this section, may be allowable: Provided, That at all times the attorney receiving such information or such services shall maintain full professional and direct responsibility to his clients for the information and services so received. But no corporation shall be permitted to render any services which can not lawfully be rendered by a person not admitted to practice before the United States Patent Office nor to solicit directly or indirectly professional employment for any persons so admitted.

SEC. 4. That after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person who may hereafter be duly registered to practice in the Patent Office, thereafter to hold himself out as a patent attorney, patent lawyer, patent solicitor, or patent counselor unless he is legally admitted to practice law in a State or Territory of the United States or its dependencies, or in the District of Columbia, or in the Panama Canal Zone; and any person so violating this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed six months: Provided, That this section shall not apply to persons registered to practice before the Patent Office at the time of the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to take a minute of the time myself now. I will simply read the paragraph of the committee report that tells what this bill seeks to do—

The purpose of this bill is to protect inventors from unfair practices of unscrupulous individuals and to reach those who fail to comply with the regulations in force in the Patent Office and who can not be reached by the commissioner.

I may say this bill works no hardship upon the reputable and honest practitioner and is generally indorsed by them as tending to safeguard them in their practice as well as those who intrust their business to them.

Mr. NEWTON and Mr. ABERNETHY rose.

Mr. VESTAL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. NEWTON. The amendment which was submitted at the time the gentleman made his motion and which is a part of the motion is not before the committee in the print of the bill.

Mr. VESTAL. No.

Mr. NEWTON. As I understand it, the bill as originally drawn would have prevented a regularly licensed attorney at law from advising a client in his office on patent matters.

Mr. VESTAL. That is correct.

Mr. NEWTON. As the bill has been offered to the House here, with the amendments, that objection is eliminated.

Mr. VESTAL. Yes. Let me read the amendment, as it is short.

Mr. NEWTON. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. VESTAL (reading):

Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent any attorney who is legally admitted to practice law in any State or Territory of the United States, unless he has been disbarred from practice before the Patent Office, from advising any client as to patent matters, or cooperating with any duly registered patent attorney in obtaining a patent or acting as counsel in any patent litigation.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the bill undertake to deal with the practice of advertising all over the country by these patent attorneys? In our country it is considered unethical to advertise for legal business, but it seems to be the general practice here in Washington. They send out circulars and various things of that sort.

Mr. VESTAL. While this bill does not prevent or prohibit advertising by an attorney or an agent who is registered in the Patent Office, yet he must submit his advertisement to the Commissioner of Patents so that it can bring about no fraud upon the individual who is desiring to obtain a patent. He will not be deceived by any literature of this kind.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. It will prevent anyone from advertising that he can do things which, as a matter of fact, under the law and under the practices of the bureau he can not do.

Mr. VESTAL. That is absolutely true.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this bill contains some very splendid provisions. They are corrective of conditions that exist at the present time with regard to patent practice in this country.

As has just been mentioned by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY], there is a great deal of advertising that is put out by persons who ought not to advertise for patent business. Some of these parties have been disbarred from practicing before the Patent Office, we are informed in the hearings, but they continue a subterfuge, and through this method of advertising solicit clients, and from these clients collect considerable money without returning proportionate service to the persons who think they have, or who really have, meritorious propositions to go before the Patent Office.

The first provision of the bill seeks to cure this situation by making it unlawful and by providing a heavy penalty for any person to carry on this type of soliciting business, simply because they are not in position to handle the business.

The second section prevents corporations, as corporations, from holding themselves out as patent attorneys. In other words, an incorporated body of men can not go before the public as a patent attorney would go individually, and the bill prohibits the incorporated bodies from proceeding under a corporate title, but compels them to practice just as individuals practice with respect to any other legal work.

I am not going to try to cover the entire bill but will only refer to the high points.

The main objection I had to this bill is contained in the last provision in section 4. We require by this bill all persons who are not lawyers, not having passed the requirements of the boards of the several jurisdictions to practice law in those jurisdictions, to register themselves as patent agents. Some objection was made to the proposition of making this apply to all persons who have heretofore been admitted to practice before the Patent Office who are not really lawyers. It is said that a great many efficient practitioners before the Patent Office would be injured if we would compel them to let the world know that they are not lawyers as well as patent attorneys.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is there anything in the bill that prevents a lawyer from coming up here from one of the States and going before the Patent Office if he wants to without having to hire one of these patent attorneys?

Mr. BUSBY. I think the amendment which has been offered takes care of that in a large sense.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Why should it not take care of it in every sense? Why should there be any opposition to a regular practitioner from any of the States coming before the Patent Office is he desires to do so?

Mr. BUSBY. Frequently, a regular practicing lawyer does not have that peculiar knowledge that is necessary to practice before the Patent Office.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Suppose he does not have it, but he wants to appear there and the client wants to employ him to appear there, why should he be shut out?

Mr. BUSBY. Perhaps the reason is because he does not understand the business and is not qualified to practice in the Patent Office the same as any other lawyer.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do not know a thing in the world about this, but I want to ask if the bill is framed to take care of this crowd in Washington that advertises all over the country as experts and then if a man brings his lawyer here he can not get before the Patent Office to present his case.

Mr. LANHAM. He can not do it now unless he is registered in the Patent Office.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Can not he go and talk with the Commissioner of Patents?

Mr. LANHAM. No lawyer is permitted to practice before the Patent Office unless he is qualified as a patent attorney under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Patent Office.

Mr. BUSBY. In other words, he must show some knowledge of the work pertaining to the Patent Office. There is a system of examination and if he passes that then he is certified.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does that same thing apply to the Land Office? Does it apply to the Shipping Board? Does it apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission? Does it apply to the Supreme Court of the United States? Of course, you have to be admitted to practice before the Supreme Court, but should there be a distinction which in effect builds up a business here that requires a man to come here and hire one of these patent attorneys that advertises all over the country, and if they were in my State they would be disbarred as unethical?

Mr. BUSBY. The gentleman assumes premises which do not exist. The law is already here and this bill does not change it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Why do you not change it?

Mr. BUSBY. Why does not the gentleman change it? This bill does not provide for it. The thing I am pointing out is that a great many people over the country are practicing because they qualify before the Patent Office and are not lawyers. We seek to require the persons of that class to register so that they may be known as patent agents instead of patent lawyers. It is not known now when they register as patent attorneys whether they are lawyers or not.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the distinction between a patent attorney and a patent agent?

Mr. BUSBY. A patent lawyer is one who can follow the case into court. There are no patent agents now; they are all patent attorneys. A patent attorney may not be a lawyer and can not go into court.

Mr. BRIGGS. And you make the distinction?

Mr. BUSBY. I would make a distinction, but this bill does not do it, and that is why I was against the bill. It does from now on. This bill provides that after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person who may hereafter be duly registered to practice in the Patent Office thereafter to hold himself out as a patent attorney, patent lawyer, patent solicitor, or patent counsel or unless he is legally permitted to practice law in the State or Territory, and so forth.

Mr. BRIGGS. Why do you not apply it to all?

Mr. BUSBY. I would strike out the proviso at the end of the bill excepting the persons who have not been licensed to practice law, but who have been admitted to practice as "patent attorneys" and compel all such persons to register as "patent agents."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is there anything here that prevents a Member of Congress taking his constituent before the Commissioner of Patents and talking with him?

Mr. BUSBY. I do not think there is.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am not seeking the business, but we have some of our constituents come here who want us to go down and see the Commissioner of Patents some time.

Mr. BUSBY. I think the gentleman can continue the same service that he has been rendering. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIGGS. For a long time the Commissioner of Patents used to indicate a willingness to give a list of a number of patent attorneys who were regarded as reputable from which an inventor might select one to represent him. Now that practice has been discontinued, and the inventor has to select a man without having the advantage of knowing whether he is of reputable standing or not.

Mr. BUSBY. That is what the commissioner says. He makes no recommendation of any party or firm of lawyers to persons or inventors.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does he not have a list, and ought he not to have a list, from whom the inventor can make his selection so that it will be some protection to him?

Mr. BUSBY. He does have a list of all patent attorneys in good standing in the Patent Office.

Mr. BRIGGS. Ought he not to have a list of those in good standing—say a printed list, so that an inventor may make a selection without having to guess who is reputable or who is not? I assume that every inventor thinks that his invention is worth millions. Some inventions are and some are not. At the same time he has a right to arrange for a reputable patent attorney to represent him—ought to be able to get reliable information regarding a list of such attorneys from a trustworthy source without having to make the selection blindly.

Mr. BUSBY. The only thing that he—the Commissioner of Patents—could reasonably say is that all of the attorneys whose names are contained on the list are in good standing to appear before the Patent Office.

Mr. BRIGGS. I know that it is getting very hard to get any list from the Commissioner of Patents if some one writes to obtain a good lawyer, because the Commissioner of Patents, of course, does not want to be unethical and recommend any special attorney; but at the same time I think it is particularly advisable that there should be a list prepared of the reputable attorneys who are accredited to practice before that department, and if the Patent Office is not prepared to recognize them as such, then that fact ought to be known, so that the man who was on the outside, who knows nothing, will not be helpless and at the mercy of anybody, whether that anybody be in good standing or not.

Mr. VESTAL. The Commissioner of Patents would be in the same position as a district judge in recommending two or three attorneys. That would not do at all. What we are proposing to do is to clear this thing up so that he can give to the man who asks it a list of all the reputable attorneys.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is what I am talking about—a list of all the reputable attorneys in good standing. If they are not in good standing, they ought not to be there. As I understand it, a man has to be tested in some way as to his qualifications. He must have certain recognized requirements, and if he gets by with those, he is in good standing.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is there anything in this bill that prevents a man from representing himself before the Patent Office?

Mr. BUSBY. No; nothing at all.

Mr. DENISON. I called up the Commissioner of Patents the other day to get information of that kind, and he advised me that under the regulations the commissioner is not permitted to mention any attorneys' names, and I think that is a very proper regulation.

Mr. BUSBY. I think there is no subject, Mr. Speaker, that is closer to us and that is of more importance to our people who have business with the Patent Office that needs looking into by our Congress than the general jumbled condition that exists in the practice before the Patent Office. This bill does not go far enough. It seeks to prevent one or two evils, but it does not undertake to deal with the other evils, and that is largely my objection to the bill. What answer do they give us as to why we do not go into this thing and do a complete job of the work as it ought to be done? It is said that the pressure is so great that we will never get that legislation through Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Pressure from whom?

Mr. BUSBY. From those patent agents, not from the men of reputable standing in the profession. The patent agents have no bar association of any kind to which they are responsible. They are not responsible any further than to the Patent Commissioner when qualified to practice before the Patent Office. Then what happens to their clients? These men, or some of them, advertise and get the clients to correspond with them, then they get their money, and perhaps the patent agent will disappear or change his firm name, or his firm will go out of business. I have letters to that effect from people who thought they had employed a lawyer but he was an "attorney" instead.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The greatest danger to the public is that these men hold themselves out as attorneys, and a client sends in what he thinks is a good idea, and it may not be patentable, or if it is patentable perhaps there are hundreds ahead of him, but nevertheless these men will take his fee and prepare his specifications.

Mr. BUSBY. Absolutely. They are not the class of people who ought to be turned loose and trusted with the business of our people. That is my objection to the situation. I believe Congress ought to look carefully into that condition, not especially with a view of turning up any crookedness, but with a view of disclosing the weakness of our laws dealing with the situation, and we ought to discover the right course, then undertake a general rewriting of patent practice statutes and remedy the situation. I hope we may do that in the near future for the protection of the public against the depredations of the unqualified and untrustworthy clerks and agents who have been permitted to style themselves "patent attorneys" by the rules of the Patent Office. They are not lawyers and should not be permitted to style themselves "attorneys" and thereby deceive the business public.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the hurry in having this bill called up at this late hour in the afternoon?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that earlier in the afternoon there was an objection made, which has now been withdrawn. There is an emergency. The bridge is financed. They are ready to begin construction as soon as they get authority. Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not a fact that the traffic from Canada is such that it requires more bridges to come back? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. As to that, I think there are enough bridges now to take care of the New York traffic.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement I made in regard to the Permanent Court of Justice.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on what question?

Mr. TINKHAM. The Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations.

Mr. SCHAFER. Are the gentleman's remarks in favor of this court or against it?

Mr. TINKHAM. Against.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, honesty and dignity require that the United States should withdraw its offer of membership in the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations.

The internationalists, disloyal to American nationalism and American independence, in an endeavor to commit the United States to membership in an alien military and political alliance, namely, the League of Nations, frankly presented their unpatriotic proposal to the American people. The American people, faithful to their priceless inheritance of national independence and freedom from entangling foreign political alliances, decisively defeated the proposal in two elections.

Undaunted in their disloyalty and unwilling to accept defeat, the internationalists proceeded by indirection and strategem, by dupery and fraud, to accomplish their purpose. Adherence to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations was their vehicle and the intermediate step into the league itself. Capitalizing the fact that from its earliest history the founders of the American Government were favorable to the substitution of judicial procedure for war in settling the disputes of nations, they represented to the American people that entry into the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations was the realization of this American idea, whereas the court was in direct contravention of the American idea, and in it American traditions virtually frustrated.

The consent of the United States to enter the court was obtained in large measure through misrepresentations and impostures upon American public opinion on the part of the international propagandists. The most reprehensible misrepresentations and impostures were as follows:

The internationalists asserted that a successive line of Presidents and of party platforms had recommended American membership in such a court. This was false. No American President and no party platform prior to 1924, the very year of the false propaganda of the internationalists, had recommended American membership in any international court except one that represented the nations directly, was independent, and wholly nonpolitical in character. The Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations does not represent the nations directly but represents the League of Nations. It has been called in the official journal of the league "the judicial organ of the League of Nations" and "a most essential part of the organization of the League of Nations." It must be elected, and every nine years reelected by the council and assembly of the league, and is under their political domination. It must execute certain political provisions of the Versailles treaty and is bound to construe international law in accordance with the stipulations and the fundamental changes in interational law set up in the covenant of the League of Nations, which treaty and covenant the United States has repudiated. It must render opinions to the council and assembly of the League of Nations upon facts as well as law, political in nature, in order to give to political decisions of the league the sanction of law.

The internationalists asserted that the court was a world court and not a league court. This was false. It is the league's court and nothing more. Its origin is found in article 14 of the covenant of the League of Nations, a part of the Versailles treaty, where its establishment is authorized and some of its functions indicated. The other steps taken for the completion of its establishment were clearly only supplemental steps in the execution of the treaty of Versailles, which treaty the United States declined to ratify. Were the United States to adhere to the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, it would ratify article 14 of the covenant, Part I of the treaty of Versailles, which would mean the acceptance and approval by the United States of every step taken by the League of Nations in executing this article of the treaty.

When the consent of the United States Senate of January 16, 1926, to the signing of the protocol of signatures, with certain reservations, was sent to the various nations for their acceptance or rejection, on instructions from the Council of the League of Nations, the secretary general of the league communicated with the Government of the United States, proposing negotiations on the terms for the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice. The council of the league controlled the situation. The court was a league court and not a world court. And, finally, the reservation made by the United States Senate which has prevented acceptance of the signature of the United States as a member of the court is that in relation to advisory opinions, which involves the political obligations of the court to the league.

The court is not an independent court but a political court.

The court is entirely without compulsory jurisdiction and, therefore, in no way can prevent war. It is not necessary for the United States to join the court in order to make use of it for the settlement of any international dispute, provided it can obtain the assent of the other nation to the dispute to go before the court, because nonmembers of the court have free access to it.

Adherence to the court was advocated with the sole purpose of committing the United States in part to the covenant of the League of Nations and as a preliminary step to joining the league.

Behind the internationalists are the international bankers and alien interests. If the Republican Party in the coming election persists in lending its influence to this intrigue of the internationalists, the international bankers and alien interests, and nominates a candidate for President who is in sympathy with these interests, and is not a nationalist and pledged solely to American interests, it will suffer a humiliating defeat.

Honesty and dignity require that the Republican Party advocate the withdrawal of the conditional assent of the United States to the protocol fraudulently obtained.

The following joint resolution to effect this withdrawal on the part of the United States has been filed today:

Joint resolution

Whereas on December 8, 1925, the President of the United States in an annual message to Congress stated in relation to the Permanent Court of International Justice that "The court appears to be independent of the league"; and

Whereas on January 16, 1926, the Senate of the United States consented to adherence to the protocol of December 16, 1920, of signature of the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice, with certain reservations; and

Whereas the secretary general of the League of Nations, a political and military alliance, on March 29, 1926, on instructions of the Council of the League of Nations, notified the Government of the United States that a committee of representatives of nations belonging to the League of Nations would like to consider with representatives of the United States the resolution of consent of January 16, 1926, and by so doing and by subsequent acts disclosed that the Permanent Court of International Justice was the court of the League of Nations, "an essential organ," and even a political instrument of the league, and not independent of the league as had constantly been alleged in the United States; and

Whereas the statement by the President of the United States that "The court appears to be independent of the league" was induced by false and fraudulent representation by those who were interested to have the United States adhere to the protocol of signatures as a first step toward entry into the League of Nations; and

Whereas the President of the United States has declined to appoint representatives of the United States and has refused to act upon further suggestions of the League of Nations: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the consent of January 16, 1926, to the protocol of December 16, 1920, of signature of statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice be considered as withdrawn from the date of the adoption of this joint resolution.

SENATE

TUESDAY, April 17, 1928

Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Gracious and merciful art Thou, O Lord God Almighty, long-suffering and full of compassion toward the children of men. In Thy wrath Thou thinkest on mercy. In Thy judgments Thou rememberest pity.

We praise and magnify Thy holy name for the revelation both of Thy righteousness and of Thy love that Thou hast vouchsafed to us in Thy dear Son and for the guidance of the spirit of life that Thou hast promised us in Him.

Grant that Thy compassionate dealings with us in this life and Thy sure promises of blessings in the life to come shall fit and hearten us to meet every trial that Thou callest us to bear and to fulfill every duty that Thou givest us to do. We ask it through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I present a letter in the nature of a petition, including resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors of Wayne County, Mich., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the letter and the accompanying resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, COUNTY OF WAYNE,
Detroit, Mich., April 13, 1928.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am directed by the chairman of the ways and means committee of the board of supervisors to transmit to you for your information the inclosed copy of a resolution which was unanimously adopted by the board of supervisors of this county at a session held on Tuesday, April 10, 1928.

It was the unanimous request of the ways and means committee that this resolution be brought to the attention of the Michigan delegation in Congress with the express wish of the committee that every effort be made by the delegation, both as individuals and as a delegation, to pass at this session of Congress some measure which will provide definitely for reapportionment of the membership in Congress, as provided for by the Constitution.

As a member of the Michigan delegation, representing the State of Michigan, you are no doubt strongly in favor of a new reapportionment measure because of the increased representation which will be Michigan's, but it was the expression of the committee that outside of the direct benefit which would fall to Michigan in a suitable reapportionment measure, the provisions of the Constitution should at least be observed by those who constitute the lawmaking body of this country.

Trusting that this action of the supervisors may have your hearty sympathy and your hearty support in bringing the matter to the attention of Congress, I beg to remain,

Respectfully,

BENJ. B. PELHAM,
Clerk to the Committees, Board of Supervisors.

Resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors for the County of Wayne at a session held April 10, 1928

Whereas the past several Congresses of the United States since 1920 have deliberately ignored the constitutional mandate regarding the reapportionment of the representative districts in the several States; and

Whereas Michigan is one of the principal sufferers from this nullification on the part of the several Congresses; and

Whereas over 13,000,000 people in the United States, including Michigan, are being denied their rights as guaranteed to them by the Constitution; and

Whereas the present Congress that is now in session has made a political gesture in the form of a message that proports to give relief on this question to the several States in the year 1931, providing the Congress so desires; and

Whereas this proposed bill continues to ignore the 1920 census and refuses to redistribute not only representatives but the electoral votes in the coming presidential election which, in fact and in substance, is a direct nullification of the constitutional mandate and in violation of all fundamental principles of our constitutional structure: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Board of Supervisors of the County of Wayne, now in session, do by memorial vigorously protest this subterfuge on the part of the present Congress, and that we further urge Congress to make a truthful reapportionment based upon the 1920 census; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each United States Senator and each of the 13 Representatives, urging them to use their influence to amend the proposed reapportionment measure so that Michigan, as well as many of the other States, will be benefited by this immediate and honest relief.

Adopted as follows:

Yeas: Supervisors Adams, Ames, Andrews, Bischoff, Bogan, Bowen, Bradley, Brown, Bryan, Bunte, Callahan, Castator, Cassidy, Chalmers, Christian, Cooley, Cramer, Dingeman, Ely, Anthony Esper, Bernard Esper, Ford, Frost, Goodell, Greenwood, Guiney, Gulnan, Hackett, Harris, Hart, Ireland, Janes, Jeffries, Jeup, Karman, Keppen, Kreger, Kronberg, Kronk, Kunz, Lennane, Littlefield, Lodge, Long, Lowe, Mahoney, Maples, Markland, Marr, Megges, Mills, Miotke, Montieth, McLeod, Nagel, Neckel, Nowc, Nugent, O'Brien, O'Connor, Osowski, Pardee, Peters, Pulford, Rathburn, Reading, Reid, Rood, Rutledge, Salliotte, Shear, Sherwood, Shields, Steele, Stevenson, Stockwell, Stricker, Sumeracki, Szymanski, Taylor, Valois, Van Vlear, Vernier, Von Moll, Voorhis, Vorce, Walters, Wardell, Wilcox, Wilson, Wiseley, Ziegler, Mr. Chairman—93.

Nays: None.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Casper, the Commercial Club of Shoshoni, the Cody Club of Cody, and the Council of Industry of Laramie, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for the passage of legislation to provide for aided and directed settlement on Federal reclamation projects, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented a telegram signed by Edward Spiegel, chairman joint meeting of the Fellowship of Youth for Peace and the Young People's Society of the Community Church, Boston, Mass., containing resolutions favoring a Senate investigation of the American position in Nicaragua, and also the extension of an invitation to the other Central American Republics to join with the United States in supervising the Nicaraguan elections, and further calling for the immediate withdrawal of United States marine forces from Nicaragua, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented numerous petitions signed by members of the Young Women's Christian Associations, of Boston, Mass., Philadelphia, Pa., Lewiston, Me., Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Newark, N. J.; the International Institute, Providence, R. I., Paterson, N. J., and Bridgeport, Conn.; the Visiting Nurses' Association, of New Haven, Conn.; Buffalo Civic Club, Buffalo, N. Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I present a communication from H. Agor, president of the Aberdeen (S. Dak.) Chapter of the Izaak Walton League of America, containing a resolution in support of conservation bills now before Congress, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Very truly yours,

H. AGOR,

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I also present communications in the nature of petitions from two South Dakota people; one is from the American Legion post at Webster, S. Dak., in support of a liberal policy for pensioning Civil War veterans; the other is a petition sent me by Mrs. Anna C. A. Peterson, of Vermilion, S. Dak., bearing the signature of P. W. Peterson and 18 other citizens, in support of the so-called National Tribune Civil War pension bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without the names and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names, as follows:

Resolution by the Herbert McKennet Post, No. 40, of the American Legion, Webster, S. Dak.

At the regular meeting of the Herbert McKennet Post, No. 40, of the American Legion, Webster, S. Dak., held on the 14th day of March, 1928, the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the members present:

"Whereas the proposed increase of pensions to Civil War veterans and the granting of pensions to widows of Civil War veterans who were married after June 27, 1905, is of vital importance to all members of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the needs of the veterans of the Civil War are immediate and great and action for their relief should not be postponed:

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Senators from North Dakota and to the Congressman from the second district, with the request that they use every honorable means to secure favorable consideration of this matter at the present session of Congress; and the publication of this resolution by any member of the Grand Army of the Republic is hereby authorized."

HENRY HOLZMAN, Commander.

Attest:

M. A. HOYT, Adjutant.

TAPS SOUNDED; LIGHTS ARE OUT; THE SOLDIER SLEEPS

The report of the operations of the Bureau of Pensions shows that 13,989 Civil War veterans answered last roll call during the first 10 months of 1927. The names of 18,047 Civil War widows were removed from the pension roll during that period by reason of death. Very few of these widows received any benefit from the meager increases granted by the act of July 3, 1926.

THERE IS YET TIME TO AID THE LIVING

That the need of relief is immediate and very great is recognized in the report of Mr. Elliott, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This report was made on April 9, 1926, when the committee had under consideration a bill providing higher rates for Civil War survivors than those carried by the act of July 3, 1926, and also a $50 rate for Civil War widows. Nearly two years have been added to the age figures quoted by the committee. The committee reported as follows:

"The committee regards this bill as an emergency measure that should be promptly passed, in fulfillment of the obligation the Nation owes to the old veterans whose heroic service and sacrifices in the Nation's defense made forever secure the Union of the States and the perpetuity of the Republic.

"Whatever more is to be done for these old veterans and widows must be done soon. They are fast passing to their reward, where a grateful Nation can do no more to pay the debt it owes to them. These veterans were mere boys when they volunteered at their country's call. To-day their average age is more than 80 years, and the average age of the widows is nearly 75 years."

THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE CIVIL WAR PENSION BILL

The National Tribune has earnestly advocated a bill carrying the following provisions:

Seventy-two dollars per month for every Civil War survivor.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars per month for every Civil War survivor requiring aid and attendance.

Fifty dollars per month for every Civil War widow.

In the light of these facts we, the undersigned, voters of Clay County, State of South Dakota, petition the Congress of the United States and urge that immediate steps be taken to bring to a vote a Civil War pension bill carrying the rates proposed by the National Tribune in order that relief may be accorded to needy and suffering veterans and the widows, and thus partly repay the living for the sacrifices they have made for our country. And we further urge that the most hearty support on the part of our Senators and Representatives in Congress be accorded this legislation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3194) to establish the Bear River migratory-bird refuge.

OAKLAND HARBOR, CALIF.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 244) authorizing a modification of the adopted project for Oakland Harbor, Calif. Inasmuch as this is a mere formal measure which has been passed by the House and to which the United States engineers agree and which they approve, I ask immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the project adopted in the river and harbor act approved June 21, 1927, for the improvement of Oakland Harbor, Calif., is hereby so modified as to provide that the requirement "that local interests shall alter or replace the bridges over the tidal canal when, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, such alteration or replacement is necessary in the interests of navigation, and thereafter operate and maintain them," shall apply only to that feature of the project covering the deepening of the tidal canal to 25 feet.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the purpose of the joint resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a House joint resolution which alters in a formal manner the report of the engineers, to which they assent. I have here the report of General Jadwin and the engineers assenting to the modification.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOUBLE PENSIONS IN SUBMARINE CASUALTIES

Mr. STECK. Mr. President, from the Committee on Pensions I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 10437) granting double pension in all cases to widows and orphans when an officer or an enlisted man of the Navy dies from an injury in line of duty as a result of a submarine accident, and I submit a report (No. 823) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Navy," insert the words "is disabled"; in line 8, after the word "paid," to strike out the words "the widow or dependents"; in line 9, after the word "man," insert the words "his widow or dependents"; on page 2, line 4, strike out "$30" and insert "$24"; and in the same line strike out "$6" and insert "$4"; in line 5, strike out "18" and insert "16"; in line 10, strike out "18" and insert "16," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter in all cases when an officer or enlisted man of the United States Navy is disabled, has died, or shall die as the result of an accident to a submarine vessel, said officer or enlisted man having been employed in duty on or in handling the submarine at the time of such accident the amount of pension to be paid such officer or enlisted man, his widow or dependents, shall be double the amount of that authorized to be paid under existing pension laws should death have occurred by reason of an injury received in service in line of duty, not the result of a submarine accident: Provided, however, That in any event the widow shall be paid a pension of not less than $24 per month and $4 per month additional for each child under 16 years of age of the officer or enlisted man, and in the event of death or remarriage of the widow or forfeiture of title by her, or if no widow survives the officer or enlisted man, the rate of pension herein provided for a widow shall be paid to the minor child or children under 16 years of age of such officer or enlisted man from the date of such death or remarriage of the widow or forfeiture of her title and in other cases from the date of the death of the officer or enlisted man.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FORT M'KINLEY, ME., WATER SYSTEM

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3057) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the Portland Water District, a municipal corporation, the water pipe line, including the submarine water main, connecting Fort McKinley, Me., with the water system of the Portland Water District, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 824) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer or cause to be conveyed to the Portland Water District, a municipal corporation of Portland, Me., organized and existing under the laws of the State of Maine, the Government-owned water pipe line, including the submarine main connecting the Fort McKinley Military Reservation located on Great Diamond Island, Me., with the water system of the said Portland Water District on the mainland and to enter into a contract with the said Portland Water District for the furnishing of potable water to Fort McKinley, upon such terms as the Secretary of War may deem expedient, including payment to the said Portland Water District of an annual charge, payable quarterly, for the putting of the water line in good condition and the relocation of the submarine main so as to furnish at all seasons of the year ample supply of potable water to the Fort McKinley Military Reservation, and that said annual charge to be agreed upon and the rates to be paid for the water furnished shall be paid from appropriations heretofore made and to be made for "Water and sewers at military posts."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I will make a very brief statement of what the bill does. At the present time the United States owns a water main running from the Portland City waterworks to the island on which Fort McKinley is located. The line was laid during war times hastily and somewhat imperfectly. It has repeatedly broken. Every time pressure is put on it the pipes fail and salt water or brine is run into the water service pipes of the Fort McKinley Reservation. There is not enough water to supply the garrison there in the summer when there are training camps on the island. A very favorable bargain has been offered by the waterworks which are owned by the city of Portland. They agreed to take this line, maintain it, and supply water to the Government on the island at the same meter rate which would be charged if Fort McKinley were located in the city.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a municipally owned company?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. There is no private corporation having anything to do with it. The War Department recommended in favor of the bill, and the report of the Committee on Military Affairs is unanimous. My reason for asking consideration now is that it is a Senate bill, and we are very anxious to have the pipe line in operation for the summer's camp. It will be a great saving in money and a great improvement of service for the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

I introduce the bill which I now send to the desk in place of the Senate bill 3792.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 3792 is indefinitely postponed, and the Senator from Wisconsin introduces a bill the title of which will be stated.

The bill (S. 4108) for the relief of Joseph Abel was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the deficiency appropriation bill. It is the same amendment which I submitted on January 4 last to the Interior Department appropriation bill, but because of the failure of the Secretary of the Interior to render a report on the amendment the Appropriations Committee did not give the amendment consideration. Hence the necessity for resubmitting the amendment now.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, insert:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR—BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

"For paying for the Truckee-Carson Irrigation District, Fallon, Nev., the proportionate share of the benefits assessed by said district against 4,877.3 irrigable acres of Paiute Indian lands within the Newlands irrigation project for necessary repairs to the Truckee Canal to restore said canal to its original capacity, $10,096.01."

Mr. CARAWAY submitted an amendment and Mr. BLAINE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to Senate bill 1271, the so-called migratory bird bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO PROPERTY RIGHTS OF AMERICANS IN CUBA

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 201), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Senate Resolution 201

Whereas the Congress of the United States by an amendment (known as the Platt amendment) to the Army appropriation act, approved March 2, 1901, defined the conditions under which the President could turn over to the people of Cuba the government of that island; and

Whereas one of such conditions was that certain parts of the said amendment should be included in the constitution of the Cuban Government and also included in a permanent treaty with these United States; and

Whereas the specified provisions of such amendment were enacted as a part of the constitution of the Republic of Cuba and were embodied in a treaty signed May 23, 1903, and duly ratified; and

Whereas certain of the provisions of the said amendment so enacted in the constitution of Cuba and so embodied in the permanent treaty with Cuba were designed and intended to afford protection to the liberties of the Cuban people and to the property and persons of citizens of the United States resident in such island; and

Whereas American citizens residing in Cuba represent that they have been and are being deprived of their properties contrary to law and in defiance of decisions of the Cuban courts: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, acting through a subcommittee or otherwise, is hereby directed to investigate and report to the Senate whether the property and rights of American citizens resident in Cuba and the liberties of the Cuban people have been and are being fully protected under said Platt amendment and in the treaty made pursuant to said amendment, and if in the opinion of the committee such protection is not being afforded to Cubans and American citizens resident in Cuba that the committee report to the Senate the reasons for such failure to protect such property and rights; and be it further

Resolved, That in consideration of the foregoing preamble and in further consideration of the following specific charges recently brought to public attention by publicists, educators, and other reliable sources, namely, that—

The present political régime is a virtual dictatorship under which freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of petition, and electoral freedom have been destroyed.

Numerous assassinations, imprisonments, deportations, and exiles have taken place.

Political opposition to the ruling group has been destroyed.

The National University has been closed, denying to the youth of Cuba the right to higher education and free speech.

Private property of Cubans and of Americans has been seized without due process of law and without the right to recovery.

The Cuban court system has been so gerrymandered that justice has become a farce and the judiciary has been brought under the absolutism of the political powers.

The Cuban criminal code, administered under political pressure, is still the code of the days of Weyler, making it possible to use the law and the judiciary for the unreasonable and unjustified punishment of Cubans for what should be lawful political activity.

Under a parceling out of agencies for the sale of lottery tickets the National Congress of Cuba is made absolutely subservient to the domination and dictation of the executive department, a condition amazing in its defiance of all decency and political honesty and honor.

That in the course of such investigation the Committee on Foreign Relations is given full power to subpœna witnesses and compel their attendance before the committee or any subcommittee thereof and to require their testimony and to compel the production of books and papers to the end that the Senate may be fully advised as to the result of such investigation and report as to what further action or legislation is necessary to fully protect Cubans and American citizens resident in Cuba in their persons, property, and rights and to insure the fulfillment of the obligations assumed by the United States under the Platt amendment and the permanent treaty of May 23, 1903.

PRISON LABOR FOR STATE USE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] on yesterday introduced in the Senate an editorial written by M. G. Osborn, editor of the Journal-Courier, of New Haven, Conn., entitled, "A leap in the dark," in which it is sought to point out that the passage of what is known as the Hawes-Cooper bill (S. 1940) might result in idleness in the penitentiaries of the various States.

It is unfortunate that a man of Osborn's long relationship with prison problems should be willing, unwittingly perhaps, to lend aid and comfort to the movement of the prison contractors to defeat this legislation.

His editorial "A leap in the dark" is based entirely upon theory, and it is the same theory which certain prison officials advanced before the committees of the House and Senate during hearings on this bill.

Incidentally the bill has been reported with but two dissenting votes out of the entire membership of both the House and Senate committees who heard these men first-hand.

The facts are that in the States now devoting the activities of their prisoners to the manufacture of products for State use, idleness is no longer a serious problem.

I would like to insert at this point in the RECORD the facts. They are not theories, they are not hearsay, they are not opinions. They are the cold facts prepared by responsible executives in four populous States in which prisoners are now employed in the manufacture of products for State use. I insert first the facts with respect to Pennsylvania, as prepared for me by Hon. James C. Tucker, general superintendent of industries, department of welfare, Harrisburg, Pa.:

In further reply to your letter of recent date, I am sending you herewith copy of the distribution of population in our four penal institutions for men and boys as of dates indicated:

Western State Penitentiary, Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 28, 1928:
Number employed in productive industries, construction, and maintenance labor activities	917
Number reported as unemployed	208
Total population	1,125
Eastern State Penitentiary, Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 28, 1928:
Number employed in productive industries, construction, and maintenance labor activities	1,334
Number reported as unemployed	327
Total population	1,661
New Western State Penitentiary, Rockview, Pa., Feb. 28, 1928:
Number employed in productive industries, construction, and maintenance labor activities	749
Number reported unemployed	None.
Total population	749
Pennsylvania Industrial Reformatory, Huntington, Pa., Feb. 22, 1928:
Number employed in productive industries, construction, and maintenance labor activities	993
Number reported as unemployed	None.
Total population	993
Grand total	4,528

In other words, in the State of Pennsylvania prison officials are satisfied with what Mr. Osborn fears may be "a leap in the dark," because they have tried it out and it works satisfactorily. There is no idleness in two prisons, and only 11 per cent for all causes in all State prisons.

I insert at this point the figures for the State of Ohio prepared for me under the direction of Governor Donahey and submitted to me by the Governor of the great State of Ohio, with this statement:

Ohio people would not think of going back to the old penal contract system.

Following are the Ohio figures:

Ohio Penitentiary:
Manufacturing and sales (State use, Ohio Penitentiary)	1,246
Manufacturing and sales (State use, brick plants)	349
Manufacturing and sales (State use, stone quarry)	125
	1,720

Honor camps	153
Ohio Penitentiary—Continued.
General work around institution	651
In school	848
Disabled, infirm, and subnormal	624
Total	4,149
Ohio State Reformatory:
Manufacturing and sales (State use)	1,023
On institution farms and general institution	849
Honor camps	337
In school	728
Total	2,937
London Prison Farm:
Construction work	275
Tailor department	16
General farm work	160
General institution work	56
Total	507
Reformatory for Women:
Sewing department (manufacturing and sales), State use	56
Art class (industrial)	187
General farm work	34
General institution work	192
Total	469
Recapitulation:
Manufacturing and sales (State use)	2,799
Work around institution	2,573
Work, honor camps	490
In school	1,576
Disabled, infirm, and subnormal	624
Total in penal institutions	8,062

No complaint is received from Ohio that idleness is an insuperable problem or that they are working in the dark. In fact, the senior Senator from Ohio, fully conversant with Ohio's problems, is heartily in favor of this bill, which the opposition calls "a leap in the dark," and the last words of our late lamented associate from Ohio in this body, Senator Willis, were an appeal for the passage of this legislation.

I wrote to the Governor of New York, who directed the prison officials of that State to prepare for me the facts with respect to the State-use system of New York.

Answering my letter, the commissioner of the Department of Correction of New York State made this statement:

I feel that the figures shown above will discredit the statement that institutions where State use is in force are troubled by the problem of idleness.

Following are the facts as submitted by the New York commissioner with respect to New York State:

1. The total number of prisoners in the four State prisons on Mar. 17, 1928, was	5,999
2. The number employed on that date, as shown by the labor reports, was	5,057
3. Of these employed, the assignments were as follows:
Industries	2,699
Maintenance	2,023
Construction	294
Road work	41
4. The 942 assigned to the nonproductive group were distributed as follows:
In hospital or idle on doctor's orders	670
Musicians	82
Schools	110
Discipline	47
Under observation	14
In cells for the condemned	11
At court or on escape	8

Mr. President, New York's officials are not worried over the passage of the Hawes-Cooper bill, because they have already complied with its principles, and they did not take "a leap in the dark."

Mr. President, I should like to introduce at this time an excerpt from a letter of Commissioner William J. Ellis, of the Department of Institutions and Agencies of the State of New Jersey, where prisoners are employed in the manufacture of products for State use. Mr. Ellis's opinion is more eloquent than anything I could say on the subject:

Under the State-use system, as you know, we have developed manufacturing enterprises of a diversified character, making goods for the various State agencies and departments as well as the counties and municipalities. We have diversified industries, including printing, auto-license tags, sheet-metal work, repairing of shoes, manufacture of shoes, woodworking and furniture, concrete products, and all sorts of agricultural enterprises, including a large farm, dairy, and cannery, the products of which are interchanged among our various State institutions; a large foundry, which makes marking signs for the highway department and for the municipalities; machine shops, book bindery, tailoring, garment making, dressmaking, knitting, etc.

None of these industries is so large as to furnish undue competition with outside industry, while at the same time it is able to supply the requirements of the State-use market.

We have eliminated the old contract labor, which was a vicious form of exploitation of prisoners under bad working conditions involving no training for work after the man left the prison. In fact, men were used largely at sewing-machine jobs under sweat-shop conditions, which involved the prison and prison-labor situation in a succession of scandals. Under former Gov. WALTER E. EDGE this contract labor was eliminated and the State-use system was installed. It has grown, developed, and expanded so that it now employs far more men than were employed under contract labor, under more constructive and beneficial conditions.

It is our contention that New Jersey, which has been able to develop a State-use system, should not have dumped upon its market the products of contract labor from States which are exploiting their prisoners to the advantage of private contractors.

The private contracts, in the main, go in for shirt making, overall making, and broom making. The broom making and shirt making competes so unfairly with outside private manufacture and the free worker outside of prisons that it has a vicious influence upon these industries in the communities in this State. Under the Hawes-Cooper bill it would be possible to protect the New Jersey industries and the New Jersey laboring man and woman from this unfair competition from convict labor under contract systems in other States, just as we have protected it under the State-use system from unfair competition of convict labor in our own State.

I may state at this point that the State of Connecticut, in which Mr. Osborn resides, is one of those States where the prisoners are employed in manufacturing products which are sent out unlabeled, in ruinous competition with the products of free capital and free labor.

I do not know what the actual number of prisoners in the Connecticut institutions is at this time, but in 1923—the date of the last compilation by a Government agency—the total number of prisoners in the three penitentiaries of Connecticut was 900.

It is interesting in connection with Mr. Osborn's fears to compare a total of 900 prisoners with the vast army of more than 8,000 prisoners in Ohio, of nearly 5,000 in Pennsylvania, and 6,000 in New York.

I have merely placed these facts in the RECORD in an attempt to end this campaign of hearsay and theory.

Men, of course, may juggle figures to suit themselves; and I suppose that the prison contractor will find in the figures that I have given him great cause for complaint by showing that too many are employed in maintenance in one place and too many in school in another.

But the fact is that in these great populous States prison officials find they have not leaped in the dark and would not return to the system advocated by the prison contractors under any circumstances.

The passage of Senate 1940 will merely make it possible for all of the States to conduct their prison affairs without lending sympathy and comfort to the prison contractor, who is growing richer each day through the exploitation of prisoners to the detriment of working men and women who have legitimate capital invested in industry.

I desire at this point to insert a letter from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. New Jersey is a State-use State. Senator EDGE, as governor, helped to put the prison contractor out of business there.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS,
February 4, 1928.

Hon. HARRY B. HAWES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You have asked me to advise you the experience I had as Governor of New Jersey, during which time contract prison labor was abolished in the penal institutions of the State upon executive order.

Briefly, the results were more than gratifying and eminently satisfactory. With the abolishment of the prison contracts, so that the prisoners would not be idle we immediately installed machinery for the manufacture of various commodities to be used exclusively by the State or public institutions in the State. We installed in the States prison machines for manufacturing license tags for automobiles; for the manufacturing of shoes, clothing, etc., for the inmates of correction and penal institutions. In one of the reformatories we installed a complete printing plant through which all the State printing is supplied. The prisoners were in no way permitted to live in idleness, although we did arrange a more considerate program of hours and of recreation and opportunity for daylight.

I repeat, the net result of the experiment started in 1917 has been in every way successful and I am sure no element in the State would for a moment return to the contract system.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) WALTER E. EDGE.

I also introduce a letter from Senator EDWARDS, formerly governor of the same State:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
February 8, 1928.

Senator JAMES E. WATSON,
Chairman Interstate Commerce Committee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WATSON: As a representative, in part, of the State of New Jersey in the United States Senate, I wish to advise you of my views in regard to the Hawes measure, S. 1940, which seeks to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases.

I strongly recommend that the Interstate Commerce Committee report this measure favorable to the Senate with the recommendation that it be passed at this session of Congress. I feel safe in saying that the universal sentiment of the State of New Jersey favors the enactment of this bill into law for the reason that it not only offers additional protection to free American labor but also will be a distinct encouragement to private manufacturers who are now forced to compete with convict-made goods.

Every one must realize that no fair and just competition can be entered into by private enterprises with merchandise manufactured by penal institutions at an abnormally low cost.

At the present time New Jersey does not permit convict goods made within her borders to enter into competition with private manufacturers. But, of course, New Jersey is impotent to prevent the importation of prison-made goods within the State for sale and distribution. This condition of affairs seems to me entirely inequitable inasmuch as a State should be allowed to regulate her own affairs without interference from outside sources.

Free American labor is entitled to as high a wage as is consistent with economic conditions, untrammeled by outside influence of a character which can be safely regulated by Federal statute.

Surely no one will seriously contend that if the State of New Jersey wishes to prevent unfair competition between her private manufacturers and contractors of prison labor, she should be thwarted by an unnatural condition which permits the delivery within the State of prison-made goods and the sale thereof without being subjected to the laws of the State.

I do not believe that any Senator or Representative who believes in State rights and the right of the Commonwealth to regulate its own business in its own way can conscientiously oppose the passage of the Hawes bill.

I sincerely trust that your committee as well as the Senate will take early and favorable action on S. 1940, so that the laboring man of this country as well as those who invest their capital in legitimate manufacturing enterprises will feel free to work and transact their business knowing that their interests will not be jeopardized by State penal institutions and the manufactured products thereof.

May I request that this letter be made a part of the record of the hearings of the Interstate Commerce Committee on S. 1940, and that the suggestions therein contained be given the earnest consideration of the committee before final action is taken.

Most cordially,

E. I. EDWARDS.

HONORABLE DISCHARGE FOR WILLIAM G. BEATY

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of calendar No. 751, the bill (H. R. 8983) for the relief of William G. Beaty, deceased. The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously. I had a conversation with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], chairman of the committee, on yesterday, and it is entirely agreeable to him that the amendment reported by the committee shall be disagreed to.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 12, after the word "shall," to strike out the words "be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" and to insert the words "accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers and dependents William G. Beaty, who was a member of Company C, First Battalion, Mississippi Mounted Rifles (subsequently Company I, Second Mississippi Volunteer Cavalry), shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 20th day of May, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ORGANIZATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate Resolution 197, coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 197) submitted by Mr. CARAWAY April 16, 1928, as follows:

Whereas it is charged that the lobbyists located in and around Washington filch from the American public more money under a false claim that they can influence legislation than the legislative branch of this Government costs the taxpayers; and

Whereas the lobbyists seek by all means to capitalize for themselves every interest and every sentiment of the American public which can be made to yield an unclean dollar for their greedy pockets: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, (1) That a special committee to be appointed by the President of the Senate consisting of three members is hereby authorized.

(2) Said committee is empowered and instructed to inquire into the activities of these lobbying associations and lobbyists.

(3) To ascertain of what their activities consist, how much, and from what source they obtain their revenues.

(4) How much of these moneys they expend and for what purpose and in what manner.

(5) What effort they put forth to affect legislation.

(6) Said committee shall have the power to subpœna witnesses, administer oaths, send for books and papers, to employ a stenographer, and do those things necessary to make the investigation thorough.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may go over for the day without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice.

FOREIGN TRADE IN POTATOES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate Resolution 200, coming over from the preceding day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 200) submitted by Mr. GOULD April 16, 1928, as follows:

Whereas under the present duty on potatoes of one-half of 1 cent per pound established by the tariff act of 1922 the quantity of potatoes imported has increased from 44,000,000 pounds, valued at $1,000,000 in 1923, to over 300,000,000 pounds, valued at more than $5,000,000 in 1927; and

Whereas differences in costs of production in the United States and in the principal competing country apparently are not equalized by the present duty; and

Whereas the potato-growing industry is widely distributed throughout the United States, and in many regions is the most important source of cash income to the farmer; and

Whereas, because of the greatly increased imports of potatoes, an emergency exists in this industry, particularly among producers of seed potatoes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and hereby is, requested to investigate for the purposes of section 315 of the tariff act of 1922 the costs of production of white or Irish potatoes in the United States and in the principal competing country, and to report its findings to the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD], in view of the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill, what is the necessity of the adoption of the resolution, because that bill, as I understand, is designed to take care of all agricultural products that come within its terms?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, perhaps I can answer that question. The question would not need answering if the Senator from Utah had been present during the debate on the bill to which he has referred. An amendment was adopted to that measure taking fresh fruits and vegetables out of the operation of the bill. I suspect that potatoes come under that classification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1462.

Mr. KING. Let the title of the bill be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the title of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was considered on March 2, and an amendment proposed to it by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let the amendment which was adopted on the motion of the Senator from Idaho be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment agreed to on motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is, at the end of the bill, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no appropriation for construction under the gravity plan shall be made until a compact shall have been entered into between the States, either to determine the allocation of waters and definite storage elevation and areas or to determine the basic principles that for all times shall govern these matters. And provided further, That the passage of this act shall not in any respect whatever prejudice, affect, or militate against the rights of the State of Idaho, or the residents or the people thereof, touching any matter or thing or property or property interests relative to the construction of the Columbia Basin project.

Mr. ASHURST. Has that amendment been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been adopted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am much pleased to observe that this amendment has been adopted. It is a brief amendment, but within its scope are assured safety and progress for the States involved. The Senate is to be congratulated and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is to be congratulated and the Senators from Washington, who are the proponents of this bill, are also to be congratulated in that before any work is done or any Federal money expended a compact under the Constitution of the United States must be entered into embodying the assent and express approval of all the States involved. This is a shining example of how to perform a task in a proper way, whereas the Boulder Dam bill introduced by the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is a shining example of how to perform a task in the wrong way.

The Boulder Canyon Dam bill does not proceed upon the correct hypothesis upon which this bill proceeds; indeed, the Boulder Canyon Dam bill proposes that, over the objections of the State of Arizona, which State has not yet consented to or ratified the Colorado River compact, the bill shall be driven through and a draft indirectly upon the Federal Treasury shall be made of $125,000,000 and work shall be started, although the State of Arizona has not ratified the necessary compact and although the State of Utah, having observed the injustice involved in the present Boulder Dam bill, has withdrawn her ratification of the said compact.

It is seldom in the course of events that a Senator is afforded the opportunity so heartily to congratulate his associates and, indeed, to congratulate those proposing a bill, as I am privileged to do this morning. The Columbia Basin reclamation project, with its amendments, can be justified, and the expenditure will be justified; but where is the man of justice and conscience who could justify voting for the present Boulder Canyon Dam bill over the objections of Arizona, which is one of the States furnishing the water of the Colorado River, over the objection of the Senators representing Arizona, and, indeed, against the Constitution of the United States?

There is pending an amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and if I am correctly advised the State of Montana furnishes considerable water to the Columbia River. The amendment is as follows:

At the proper place insert the following:

"Provided, That no appropriation for construction under the gravity plan shall be made until a compact shall have been entered into between the States, either to determine the allocation of waters and definite storage elevation and areas or to determine the basic principles that for all times shall govern these matters: And provided further, That the passage of this act shall not in any respect whatever prejudice, affect, or militate against the rights of the State of Montana, or the residents or the people thereof, touching any matter, or thing, or property, or property interests relative to the construction of the Columbia Basin project."

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that Montana furnishes a large part of the water of the Columbia River.

Mr. ASHURST. My esteemed friend the junior Senator from Montana replies that Montana furnishes a large part of the waters of the Columbia River. I knew the junior Senator from Montana in our college days. I then predicted for him a great career. Since he has come to the Senate he has abundantly verified the predictions I made of him. It is a tribute to his statesmanship and to his courage that inasmuch as the State of Montana furnishes a part of the waters for this project he has offered an amendment which, if adopted, will prevent protracted and expensive litigation in the future over these very waters.

This one act of Senator WHEELER demonstrates that he is a real statesman, worthy to hold a place here, and when the question of the Boulder Dam on the Colorado River comes before us, I ask him and I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] precisely and courageously to apply for and in behalf of Arizona the same just rule, the same fair principle, and the same high degree of statesmanship that they have here applied in behalf of their own States. If and when the Boulder Canyon Dam bill is considered, they should refuse and fail to extend to Arizona that meed of protection and justice they are to-day asking for themselves, then I shall ask that the remarks I am making this morning commendatory of them be stricken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I will have to offer an objection.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has heretofore been considered as in Committee of the Whole and amended.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as heretofore amended, as follows:

A bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands in the eastern part of the State of Washington embraced in what is commonly known as the Columbia Basin project, or all the lands that may be embraced within the boundaries of such project, as may be finally determined by the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same are hereby, adopted as a reclamation project to be known as the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and the appropriation of the necessary funds to determine and carry on such project is hereby authorized from funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated. This project shall be carried on, developed, and dealt with in every respect and pursuant to the terms and conditions of the United States reclamation act and amendments thereto, except for the appropriation provision herein made: Provided, That no appropriation for construction under the gravity plan shall be made until a compact shall have been entered into between the States, either to determine the allocation of waters and definite storage elevation and areas or to determine the basic principles that for all times shall govern these matters: And provided further, That the passage of this act shall not in any respect whatever prejudice, affect, or militate against the rights of the State of Idaho, or the residents, or the people thereof, touching any matter, or thing, or property, or property interests relative to the construction of the Columbia Basin project.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following:

That no appropriation for construction under the gravity plan shall be made until a compact shall have been entered into between the States, either to determine the allocation of waters and definite storage elevation and areas or to determine the basic principles that for all times shall govern these matters: And provided further, That the passage of this act shall not in any respect whatever prejudice, affect, or militate against the rights of the State of Montana, or the residents or the people thereof, touching any matter, or thing, or property, or property interests relative to the construction of the Columbia Basin project.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I ask pardon of the Senate, but I was interrupted during the reading of the amendment. May I ask to have it reread?

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that it is identical with the amendment offered by him, except that "Montana" is substituted for "Idaho."

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not provide for a compact, does it?

Mr. JONES. Yes; it does for the State of Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I thought I would make a brief statement with reference to the bill.

The bill provides for the adoption of a reclamation project in the central part of the State of Washington. It embraces an area of about 1,800,000 acres of land. This land is desert in character and will produce practically nothing without reclamation.

The matter of reclamation in the State of Washington and in this territory is not an experiment. Just across the river from the lands embraced within this project is the Yakima reclamation project, under which there have been developed something like 175,000 or 200,000 acres of land. That land is as productive land as there is anywhere in the United States. The average value of the crops produced on the lands in the Yakima project is from $75 to $100 an acre; and the lands embraced in the Columbia Basin project are substantially the same kind of lands as those in the Yakima project. If there is any difference, it is in favor of the lands embraced within the Columbia Basin project.

Climatic conditions, fertility of soil, transportation facilities, and nearness to markets are exceptional in connection with the proposed project. There are four or five transcontinental railroad lines running through this territory, so that, when developed, transportation facilities will be abundant to markets anywhere in the country.

As I said, the reclamation of the lands in the Yakima project demonstrates the character of these lands, their fertility, and their productive character, so that no question can be raised with reference to these features of this project.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. How was the Yakima project developed? Were advances made out of the Treasury to establish that project originally?

Mr. JONES. No. The Yakima project is a Government reclamation project now. Originally there was considerable private development, but that was under what we might call low-line canals. Finally, after the passage of the reclamation act, the Government decided to enter upon the project in the Yakima Valley. There was a reclamation project that had been undertaken by the Northern Pacific Railroad, or, possibly more accurately, by a subsidiary company of the Northern Pacific Railroad. It was essential for the highest possible development under the Government plan that this canal should be taken over by the Government, and this was done; so that the reclamation of the lands throughout practically the whole Yakima Valley is included under the one Government project, and the reclamation of this project has been proceeding under the reclamation act, and the moneys for its development have come from the reclamation fund.

Mr. FLETCHER. How have the purchasers operating in the Yakima project been keeping up their payments? Have they been able to keep up the payments under their contracts?

Mr. JONES. Until the acute agricultural depression came on, the settlers under this project were paying up practically in full on their lands. With the acute agricultural depression they were affected like everybody else, but possibly not to such a great extent, and so there were some delinquencies there; and, of course, after we passed the general acts for the relief of people on these reclamation projects, these people took advantage of them, too. I think, however, that the settlers under the Yakima project have paid up better than those under any other project in the United States; and there is no question whatever as to their ability and capacity to pay under ordinary agricultural conditions. My understanding is that for the last year the payments are practically up to date.

Mr. FLETCHER. Have those lands been fairly well taken over and occupied, or are there still vacant lands in the Yakima project?

Mr. JONES. In the case of the units that have water furnished practically all the land is taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator feels, does he, that this project is a successful undertaking?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I think there is no question about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under this bill the funds are to be advanced out of the Treasury of the United States for the development of this project?

Mr. JONES. Unless we provide some other method hereafter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, if we provide now for these moneys to come out of the Treasury, that probably will not be changed.

I should like to ask the Senator what is the estimated cost. I see that the gravity plan will involve something like $300,000,000. Does the Senator think that is the limit of the draft on the Treasury?

Mr. JONES. I think $300,000,000 will cover the draft on the Treasury for the reclamation of these 1,800,000 acres of land.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will my colleague yield there?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator from Florida that the plans do not contemplate taking that much money from the Treasury, but an initial draft on the Treasury, and after that the payments from the lands developed will finance the development of other units of the project. So that probably $100,000,000, or at most $125,000,000, would be all that would ever need to be advanced originally out of the Treasury, because this land would not be put under cultivation or under water all at one time, but by units and by parts.

Mr. JONES. That is a feature that, of course, will have to be worked out in the future; and, as my colleague has said, under the plan for this project the first unit will contain about 400,000 acres of land. That will be the part that will be reclaimed first. That will be reclaimed possibly out of appropriations made directly from the Treasury, unless we should hereafter develop some other plan, by way of the issuance of bonds or something of that sort.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator how that is to come back to the Treasury, if at all?

Mr. JONES. It is to come back to the Treasury just as the funds come back under the reclamation projects as they are to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see that the language is very broad. It says:

and the appropriation of the necessary funds to determine and carry on such project is hereby authorized from funds in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no limit at all provided there; but all that may be necessary to accomplish this result and develop this project is to be paid out of the Treasury as it may be required.

Mr. JONES. Of course, that is subject to amendment or change by legislation hereafter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And, of course, if it is found advisable to follow some other plan, that will be adopted; but, as my colleague [Mr. DILL] has said, the development is gradual. It will come about by units.

What our people really have in mind is what my colleague says—that when we reclaim the first unit—400,000 acres—we can then work out a method by which moneys will be received on that unit, and possibly not have to make drafts upon the Treasury thereafter; but whatever expenditures are required from the Treasury are to be repaid in accordance with the terms and provisions of the reclamation act. In other words, the settlers will have to repay this money.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I see that the estimated cost per acre is about $159, and then the cost of maintenance is $2.12 per acre per annum. In other words, the cost of this reclaimed land will be about $161 per acre.

Mr. JONES. It is stated that about $150 an acre is the cost of the reclamation. The other item is maintenance each year.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is not $159 per acre a pretty high cost for agricultural lands on which to grow wheat and alfalfa, to say nothing of the cost of the land?

Mr. JONES. It is a pretty high cost when you look at the figures; but the Senator will note the productive character of these lands, and the fact that they are not going to produce the ordinary agricultural production. They will be put to special production, just as in the Yakima Valley. It has cost over $100 an acre to reclaim the lands of the Yakima Valley, and yet they get at least three fine crops of alfalfa a year from that land. This land will produce not less than that, and possibly even more.

Mr. FLETCHER. I observe that the growing season is about six months, and that the main crops will be wheat and alfalfa and potatoes and livestock and grasses and that sort of thing.

Mr. JONES. And fruit and every sort of Temperate Zone product.

Mr. FLETCHER. With a growing season of six months it will necessarily be limited. I do not know; perhaps that is a wise thing to do; but I can sell the Senator a million acres of land at $25 an acre where the growing season is 12 months of the year.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but the Senator will not do it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator made an estimate a while ago of the average income per acre, as I understand, as being somewhere about $100.

Mr. JONES. From $60 or $75 to $100.

Mr. COUZENS. How is that arrived at? I mean, on what kind of a crop can you get that return per acre?

Mr. JONES. That has been actually demonstrated out there, as I said a while ago. Under the Yakima project there is what is known as the Sunnyside unit. That unit produces general agricultural crops, and the Reclamation Service keeps a record of the production. Of course, they get the returns from the farmers; and my recollection is that the average production under the Sunnyside unit over a period of years has been nearly $70 an acre.

Mr. COUZENS. Is there plenty of market for the product in that territory?

Mr. JONES. Possibly not in that immediate territory; but they ship their surplus production to the different markets.

Mr. COUZENS. Will that product have to come under the McNary-Haugen bill to equalize the cost?

Mr. JONES. I am not prepared to say just how far the McNary-Haugen bill would apply. Our fruits and vegetables, I understand, are excepted; and while, of course, we would not expect this 1,800,000 acres to go to fruit, and so forth, there will be a great amount of fruit produced in that territory, because it is good fruit land.

Mr. COUZENS. What is the estimated time that it will take to complete the project?

Mr. JONES. As I figure it, Mr. President, in my judgment there will be no substantial production brought about on the first unit of this project short of 20 or 25 years. There are those who estimate it at 15 years; but I have lived in that country for 40 years, I have seen reclamation developments, and in my judgment there will be no substantial production under that project short of 20 or 25 years. The great work connected with this project will have to be completed before the first unit can be brought under cultivation.

That is the reason why I say that in my judgment there will be no substantial production short of 20 or 25 years, and in my judgment it will take 50 years to reclaim the entire 1,800,000 acres.

Mr. COUZENS. Has the Senator an estimate of what the Government will have spent in 20 years, when we will first commence to get production?

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the estimate of the cost of building the canal and the tunnels to get to the first unit of 400,000 is about $130,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. About $130,000,000?

Mr. JONES. I think it is about $130,000,000.

Mr. COUZENS. If we become committed to the project, can we stop at that time, or will we have to continue on and on? Can we stop at the first unit?

Mr. JONES. I think if we could get to the first unit we should go on, because in getting to the first unit we will construct the main canal, and it must be constructed, of course, of sufficient size to carry water for the whole 1,880,000 acres. So that while we could stop, I do not think we should, and I do not think we would, I will say frankly to the Senator.

Mr. COUZENS. Is the Government to get a return on this investment of $130,000,000 over this period of 20 years in any way; or is to be loaned without interest?

Mr. JONES. No; there would be no return on that during that period of time. That would all have to be repaid ultimately, however, by the settlers on the project. We would have to spend about $130,000,000 before we would begin actually to reclaim and provide means for cultivation of the land. Then we will have a unit of about 400,000 acres.

Mr. COUZENS. And when that is done the Senator believes that the Government would be reimbursed?

Mr. JONES. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. SACKETT. Suppose we should stop at the end of the first unit; then what does the Senator figure the land would cost?

Mr. JONES. If we should stop at the end of the first unit, of course, we would have about 400,000 acres reclaimed, at a cost of about $134,000,000.

Mr. EDGE. How much is that an acre?

Mr. JONES. That would not be a paying proposition at all. I could not advocate a proposition of that sort, with the idea that we were going to stop with the reclamation of the 400,000 acres.

Mr. SACKETT. Then it means that if we start, we will have to go on through with the whole thing?

Mr. JONES. We certainly should go through with it if we start. As I have said, it is 1,800,000 acres of as productive territory as can be found anywhere in the United States.

Mr. SACKETT. Three hundred million dollars is not quite as large an amount as we would spend reclaiming the Mississippi Valley, is it?

Mr. JONES. How is that?

Mr. SACKETT. We would get more land saved from flood in the Mississippi Valley for about the same amount that we would spend on this, would we not?

Mr. JONES. I doubt that. I do not think it is so much.

Mr. SACKETT. Pretty close to it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I want to get a little clearer idea of this proposition from a business standpoint. Following the question of the Senator from Kentucky, if the project should be stopped at the end of the first unit, with $130,000,000 involved, the land would cost approximately $350 an acre.

Mr. JONES. I have not figured that out.

Mr. EDGE. Something over $300 an acre. As I understand it—and the Senator will correct me if I am mistaken—if it went on to completion, the Government would be involved to the extent of about $300,000,000.

Mr. JONES. That is the estimate, I think, about $300,000,000.

Mr. EDGE. In other words, that would reduce the value to something in the neighborhood of $150 an acre.

Mr. JONES. It would cost per acre about $150.

Mr. EDGE. Just one more question or two. The Senator has referred several times to reclamation projects repaying the Government for funds advanced. I frankly must admit my lack of intimate knowledge of the provisions of the reclamation act. How is that money repaid? What are the requirements or regulations surrounding the repayments to the Government, briefly?

Mr. JONES. Briefly, now, the payments are made over a period of about 40 years. We have been amending the reclamation act, and just two or three years ago we made an amendment along those lines, giving about 40 years for these repayments.

Mr. EDGE. Without interest?

Mr. JONES. Without interest.

Mr. EDGE. Can the Senator say offhand, from his intimate knowledge of the reclamation projects, whether those who have become interested in the average projects have met their obligations to the Government along reasonable lines, or have they met them at all, generally speaking?

Mr. JONES. As I said a moment ago, under our project out there—and I speak of that because I know more about it than about any other—until this acute agricultural depression came on our people had kept their payments substantially up to date, both for maintenance and for construction charges. Of course, when Congress passed legislation suspending payments, relieving our people from payment, they, like everybody else, did not pay up. But now they are paying, and I was advised by the Reclamation Bureau just a short time ago that the payments for last year are substantially up to date. There is no question in my mind but that the people under this project will pay up in full. There are some of the other projects, possibly, throughout the country where they have not paid up as the people on our project have. I have often said, and I think I can say it now without fear of any successful contradiction, that the best reclamation projects in the country are in our State.

Mr. EDGE. Then the Senator's State does offer what might be termed the most flattering result of the reclamation policy, and the other sections of the country are not on that plane.

Mr. JONES. I think that is true. Our climatic conditions, our soil conditions, our market conditions, and our transportation facilities give us a special standing.

Mr. EDGE. One other thought comes to my mind, and I can not reconcile it with the debates to which we have listened in recent days. That is as to the constant leaving of the farm for the city, and the tremendous handicap which I have been inclined to agree exists in regard to farming. Does the Senator really feel that it is a good business proposition for the Government to obligate itself to an investment of $300,000,000 to develop an acreage at a very high price per acre in comparison with fertile land all over the country? Does the Senator really believe that such acreage will ever be applied for and occupied and cultivated by the farmers to-day; and if so, what is the answer?

Mr. JONES. The Senator must appreciate this. As I said a moment ago, there will be no substantial production, no land brought under actual reclamation under this project short of 15 or 25 years.

Mr. KING. Let us wait 25 years, then.

Mr. JONES. It will take probably 15 or 25 years to get the first main canal constructed and the land actually cultivated and brought under protection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it, this money is not to come out of the reclamation fund, but is to be paid direct from the Treasury.

Mr. JONES. This project, of course, is too large to be carried on out of the reclamation fund; it would be absolutely impossible. Hence we provide that it shall be carried on by appropriations made out of the Treasury. Of course, we may adopt some other plan hereafter in order to get the money to pay for the project; but that is the way we provide in this bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DILL. I want to make a suggestion in answer to the Senator from Utah about waiting 15 or 20 years. The fact of the matter is that this project is so big that it must be begun within a few years in order to be able to bring it under production within 15 or 20 years. It is not an ordinary project. If we wait 15 or 20 years, when land must be had, other projects that more quickly can be developed would be considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey? I have the report as to Federal reclamation by irrigation transmitted to Congress by the President of the United States. It is a report made by a commission selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and deals in a comprehensive manner with all reclamation projects. If I understood the Senator from Washington, this report is not in harmony with his statements. It shows that losses have been sustained by the Government in the reclamation projects. There has been charged off more than $25,000,000 in losses out of appropriations approximating $143,000,000, and a number of the projects have proven to be failures.

The Secretary of the Interior, who is favorable to reclamation, and under whose direction reclamation projects are carried on, does not report in favor of the Columbia Basin project. In my opinion the Government should not embark upon reclamation projects without the approval of the Bureau of Reclamation, or at least until a survey has been made and a complete investigation of all questions involved conducted by competent engineers. This has not been done in the scheme before us, and the Secretary of the Interior has given what amounts to an adverse report. Nevertheless, we are asked to authorize a great project which admittedly will cost $300,000,000. I inquire whether it would be wise to commit the Government to this project and this enormous expenditure without further information and an investigation by skillful and competent engineers?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I have been a strong supporter of reclamation projects for a long time, and have been following the workings of the western reclamation projects. I know the desires of the western people for reclamation projects quite well, and I beg to differ with the Senator from Utah in his statement just made, which intimates that it is necessary to have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior for all these projects. Some of us differ very materially from the Secretary of the Interior. We do not consider that he has been altogether friendly to reclamation projects. In fact, we consider, and from our experience we can say, that he has been distinctly unfriendly to some of our reclamation projects.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I concede that this is a big project. Of course it is. It involves a million, eight hundred thousand acres of land. I suppose this is the biggest reclamation project not only in the United States but in the world. We contend that the experience of reclamation in the State of Washington has actually demonstrated the capacity of our land, and the feasibility and the success of reclamation in our State. When I say that, as far as I am concerned, I am not talking about reclamation anywhere else.

As I said a moment ago, I think the actual results have demonstrated that the reclamation projects in the State of Washington are better than those anywhere else in the United States, and possibly anywhere else in the world.

Mr. BORAH. Hear! Hear!

Mr. JONES. The State of my friend from Idaho is substantially the same territory, and they have the same climatic conditions in Idaho that we have in the State of Washington. Their reclamation projects have been successful, too; but I am willing to put up the Yakima Valley and the Yakima project with any project anywhere in the United States, or in the world, for that matter.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. Can the Senator give us the approximate figures covering the expenditures already made in the investigation of the possibilities of this project?

Mr. JONES. Practically $500,000 has already been expended in investigating this project.

Mr. SMOOT. By whom?

Mr. JONES. Largely by State appropriations and contributions by local people. Congress has appropriated, my recollection is, about $125,000, which has been used in cooperation with State and local funds; but our people estimate that in round numbers, with the investigations, surveys, and all that sort of thing, there has been spent practically $500,000 already in determining the character of these lands.

Mr. PHIPPS. Can the Senator tell us what the contemplated expenditure for the coming year will be in the matter of carrying on investigations along engineering lines to determine the feasibility of the canal, or other plans for irrigation?

Mr. JONES. The bill adopts the project. If it is passed, the reclamation people and the Interior Department indicate that they would want further money to investigate soil conditions, and I would expect that we would expend for that purpose, and also for investigating the matter of reservoirs and things like that, possibly $250,000, spread over a period of four or five years—probably $40,000 or $50,000 a year—in order to get such information as they deem necessary to work out the details of the proposition, and that we would not call for appropriations for the actual construction of the project for possibly four or five years yet. I think we would expend in the next year about $50,000 for the investigation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was speaking of the cost. Is the land similar to the lands contained in the Yakima project?

Mr. JONES. It is. It just adjoins that project.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator tell us, in that project, which seems to have been a success, what was the cost per acre which the farmers had to return to the reclamation fund?

Mr. JONES. There were different units where the cost was different. On the Sunnyside, my recollection is they had to pay a little more than $50 an acre. On the Tieton unit it is something over $90 an acre. On the Kittitat unit, which is now under construction, it is estimated the cost will be about $140 or $150 an acre.

Mr. NORRIS. With land of that price, has there been a demand for it, and have the farmers taken it?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes; the Tieton unit contains only about 30,000 acres, and every foot of it is taken. That cost was nearly $100 an acre. On the Kittitat unit, where the estimated cost is about $140 per acre, the construction is not yet completed. They are now constructing the canal. The lands are not taken yet.

Mr. NORRIS. The cost per acre of this contemplated project is how much?

Mr. JONES. About $150 per acre, with a possibility that, under State legislation passed a year or two ago, it may be reduced to about $100 an acre, with a system of taxation so that the communities, the cities and towns, and city and town property, will bear a part of the burden, as they get a tremendous benefit.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KING. I find in an advertisement put out by the Columbia Basin Irrigation League, headquarters Spokane, Wash., which the organization kindly sent to me, that the cost of water delivered to farmers will be about $119 per acre on the Columbia Basin project, but the engineers estimated the acre cost, based on construction, at $157 per acre.

May I digress to remark that in nearly every irrigation project the cost has been 40 per cent or more higher than the estimates of the Government engineers? I know of projects where the engineers estimated $40 or $50 per acre and the cost was nearly double the estimates.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest to the Senator that I think the reduction in the figures to which he calls attention was brought about under State legislation.

Mr. KING. By taxing other property?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. KING. Secretary Work, of the Interior Department, wrote a letter to the Senator's committee in which he stated:

> I have your request for report on S. 1462, a bill for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes, for which the bill proposes to authorize the necessary funds from the General Treasury. The importance of the project to the Nation will make advisable a complete investigation of the feasibility and the cost, extending over several years. This should include the extent of irrigable area, with the classification of soils in the area, measurement of water supply, determination of the cost of the work for storage and distribution, and working out plans for settlement and farm development. All of this information would be necessary in order to make a final and safe determination of the feasibility as a prerequisite to recommending authorization of the project. I am, therefore, unable to recommend favorable consideration of the bill in its present form, but would recommend a reasonable appropriation to further and complete our investigations to determine feasibility.
> The bill was referred to the Director of the Budget, who states the proposed legislation is in conflict at this time with the financial program of the President.

This report indicates that the Secretary of the Interior and the Reclamation Service have not the data to enable them to report upon this project, and consequently the Secretary submits what is equivalent to an adverse report.

Mr. JONES. Of course, the Senator knows that I have not made any statement to the effect that the Secretary of the Interior had recommended the adoption of the project.

Mr. KING. No; I know the Senator has not.

Mr. JONES. It is true the Secretary of the Interior sent that letter to the committee. The committee, however, looked into the matter very carefully. Many of the members of the Senate committee and many members of the House committee visited the section last fall and summer, and they felt justified in recommending the passage of the bill. I think it was done largely on the theory that the bill simply adopts the project, because of the general information that we have had with reference to it, and contemplates that further investigation, to which the Secretary refers in his letter, will be made before actual construction is undertaken.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact, in connection with the complaint raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], that the charge offs which have been made on reclamation projects are a result largely of beginning construction before such a complete and thorough investigation had been made which should have been made and which is now required by law to be made of all projects.

Mr. KING. And several projects, even after full investigation had been made, resulted in failure because the project would have to be abandoned.

Mr. DILL. The purpose of having the project adopted now is to have the investigations and surveys made with a view to construction. The project is so large and will require so much careful investigation that we believe it should be adopted now, although we say frankly there is no possibility of bringing it into production under 15 or 20 years. It is estimated by those who are friends of the project that it will be four or five years before we can begin construction. We all know it will be more nearly double that time. We all know that the project, immense as it is, will require a great deal of investigation and planning before construction can be begun.

There are many things I might say regarding this bill, but I do not want to take time further than to say that this is the biggest project of its kind in America and in the world. We are trying to take the steps now which will make it possible some day for the country to have this land available for development and use when land will be needed, because when the time comes that new land must come under cultivation, as it will necessarily come, it should be land that is worth developing and can produce as this irrigated land can produce. I hope this authorization may be made now, that the project may be recognized as an established project, and that we may systematically and carefully go about making the investigations and surveys which are needed before actual construction begins. There is an abundance of water, the project is feasible, the time has come to adopt the project and proceed with the surveys looking to construction.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, it was my privilege to go over this project last fall in company with several members of our Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. I was most favorably impressed with the character of the country. There is no reason to believe that soil conditions are unfavorable. On the contrary, the proximity of other successful irrigation districts indicated that the country could be made very attractive and that, with the application of water, farming could be very successfully carried on. In fact, there were many evidences that large sections of the territory have been farmed from time to time under the dry-farming method, but one dry season succeeding another led to failure so that there are to-day many ruins of farm improvement scattered throughout this immense district. Where water is available the yields appear to be very much above the average. In more than one instance we saw orchards of various kinds of fruit indicating that at least some portion of the territory is fruit country.

Mr. President, I regret to say that I did not find myself in accord with other members of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation in favoring the bill in the form in which it has been presented to the Senate. My feeling was that we could more safely adopt and follow the suggestion of the Department of the Interior, that appropriations should be made for further investigation so that the development might be begun, or at least demonstration made that would indicate that development could be carried on successfully.

There is a vast engineering problem in connection with the enterprise, and that is readily realized when we consider the extent of the acreage, amounting to practically 1,900,000 acres, which it is proposed to bring under cultivation. Of course, as the Senator from Washington said, it is not reasonable to expect that much of that territory or any great portion of it can be brought into bearing, even to yield crops, within the next few years. But the enterprise should be projected and carried on as a whole, as it seems to me, because of the great distance that the water must be carried before it can be applied to any of the land that is to be reclaimed.

Before proceeding with such a vast undertaking it seems to me that the engineering feature should be most carefully and adequately worked out. It will take perhaps three years, or possibly a little longer, to determine the best method of conserving and conducting the water to the point where it will be put into beneficial use.

While Senators say they are merely asking for the adoption of the project as a Government reclamation project, it seems to me that a moral obligation would be implied at least that people would go ahead in confidence that the Government, having adopted the project, would carry it to conclusion in any event. To my mind the time has not yet come when the Congress could properly adopt this as a Government project. I am strongly in favor of advancing the money that may be necessary to complete the surveys that should be made to carry out the plan to a point where it can be definitely stated that a certain amount of money will be required for construction, and that that will mean so many dollars per acre for the land to be reclaimed. The figures to-day are high, the estimates being about $159 per acre, but with the prospect that they may be materially reduced. I am hopeful that they can be reduced. I think the investigation should be carried on to determine that fact.

I feel that the bill should be modified before being passed. I do not see how it can be well amended merely to give authority, which I think should be the limit at the present time. I feel impelled to vote against the passage of the measure, but I would be heartily in favor of an amended bill that would enable us to go ahead with the investigation that appears to be desirable and necessary.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have not had time to examine the bill in detail. I have had, however, an enormous amount of correspondence that has emanated evidently from some source of propaganda, all of it on behalf of the bill. I have only had opportunity to give it a cursory examination. I have read the bill pretty carefully and have read the report; in fact, I have studied the report, but I have not had any opportunity to go over the hearings. I know that there is very great interest in the measure, especially locally in the West; that is inevitable. I have friends who live in the vicinity of the project who are quite interested in the bill, and quite naturally that would be one source of the correspondence that has come to me.

I am always sympathetic with any project that looks to constructive and creative action; in fact, I think the Senate as a body is apt to yield too much to that sort of solicitation. I recall that I voted with considerable reluctance for the construction of the Alaskan Railroad, but I had come to the conclusion that there was a possibility of great good from that undertaking, and I was definitely convinced that the railroad never would be constructed by private enterprise. Alaska being a Territory under the legislative authority of Congress, and listening to the possibilities that had been pictured to us, I voted for that tremendous governmental enterprise. I must confess that I have been considerably concerned about the additional appropriations that we are constantly called upon to make for it. I was told that $35,000,000 would be the limit; that that amount would be the maximum. I voted for the bill in the belief that those who knew were giving us in good faith the facts, but everybody conversant with the Alaskan Railroad construction realizes how far afield those estimates were; we are not as yet anywhere near the end of our expenditures for that purpose; and every time we vote we are wondering whether the additional appropriation we make is not thrown away.

As to irrigation, I have consistently supported the various enterprises that have been presented by the West. In relation to Boulder Dam, as to which there is considerable controversy, I have rather been convinced, in my own mind, that that is a project which should receive my approval, not so much on the basis that it is going to increase the tillable acreage as because of the flood-control element involved in it, which is more or less emergent, and also water-power development, which a great many people find to be the chief objection to it. However, that has not had the effect upon my mind that it has had upon the minds of some others. I mention these things merely to indicate my general attitude.

I think, Senators, in view of the problem of the agricultural surplus, the proper handling of which every Senator must agree is a subject that is giving us our greatest concern, it is a pertinent question to ask how far the Government should go in the expenditure of public money further to magnify that problem.

I know the answer will come that this work on the Columbia Basin project is not going to be done immediately, that by the time we are realizing upon it the surplus problem will be solved, in that the growth of population may be sufficient to absorb the surplus of agricultural products. However, that does not appeal to me at all. The fact is, Mr. President, that for the last 25 years we have placed emphasis upon production in agriculture. We have employed scientific methods in the production of crops. We have been impressed with the fact that the acreage is more or less fixed, while the population is an unfixed element and will increase constantly without limit, and that the demand, therefore, for agricultural products will be on the upward scale, while the supply of agricultural products, in a sense, will be limited. I believe we shall see the time when the United States will be importing some of the food that we now produce as a surplus; I have no doubt that time will come; but we have, as I have stated, put the emphasis for the last 25 years upon making the acre produce more, employing the best scientific methods possible to that end.

I recall when the Agricultural Department of the Government was established; it was not long ago. I recall when the first appropriation was made, and although it was only a few million dollars, it was regarded as more or less exorbitant and excessive. To-day, however, we are appropriating $140,000,000 for the work of the Agricultural Department. A considerable portion of it, of course, goes to the building of public roads, but we have in the Agricultural Department to-day the largest aggregation of experts and scientists engaged in research that can be found in any unit not only of this Government but anywhere in the world. It is only a very short time, comparatively speaking, since that service was inaugurated. With that body of experts we are making a limited acreage produce vastly beyond what originally it did produce. I admit that we will get to the limit of that production, but we are not to the limit of it as yet.

When the World War came and the order went forth to produce more, millions of acres of grazing lands were plowed up which ought not to have been plowed up; millions of acres of forests were cut off. Since that time we have abandoned 31,000,000 acres of land that had been brought under cultivation under the emergency demand of the war, and there are great areas in various States that are no longer under cultivation that could be cultivated if it were at all profitable to cultivate them. However, there can not be profit in agriculture so long as we have a surplus on our hands, and I am asking the question as one sympathetic to proposed legislation of this character, in the face of an already overaugmented surplus, and with acres upon acres, running up into the millions, which have been abandoned because they can not produce to a degree of profit, how far should we go in the expenditure of public money further to increase the tillable acreage until we have handled the surplus problem? It does not seem to me that it is at all in accordance with sound legislative procedure.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. As the Senator has pointed out, we are becoming more and more an industrial nation, and it will not be so very many years, in my judgment—and I gather from what he has said that that is the Senator's opinion also—before it will be necessary to import commodities of which we have a surplus to-day. Furthermore, a great deal of our land is wearing out in this country because of the fact that certain elements are being taken from the soil which it is very hard to replace.

Under the Columbia Basin project it is not proposed to take money from the Government which is never to be paid back, but the farmers who may settle on that project will be paying it back; and it is going to take some years to put the project in operation and secure its development.

Mr. FESS. I recognize the force of what the Senator is stating both as to the time which will be reached when we probably will be importing and also as to the time it will take to place this project in operation.

I do not agree with the Senator, however, in the statement that the land is wearing out, meaning by that that we are going to abandon it permanently. There is no doubt that the land which is being worn out will be replenished by a better type of agriculture. I think it is more or less criminal that we are allowing our land to be worn out by bad methods of cultivation.

Mr. WHEELER. But the fact is that it is happening at the present time. Of course, it is a waste——

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER. In this case, however, while the project is not in my State at all, it is in the adjoining State, and I am only interested in it——

Mr. FESS. The Senator knows that locality does not mean anything so far as I am concerned. If it is a national project, I would not oppose it.

Mr. WHEELER. The thought that occurred to me was that we ought to be looking forward to the time when great projects of this character are going to induce people to settle on the soil and to take up the land and cultivate it, because we are going to need the production as our industries in this country grow, so that we will not have to depend upon imports from other countries.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate what the Senator says. There is one thing in the item that ought to have our attention, and that is the estimate of the cost which is fixed here at $159 an acre. I have never known a case where the ultimate cost was held within the bounds of the first estimate; as a rule, it goes away beyond that; and I think we ought to think of the possibility of that in this case.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator that the estimates for reclamation projects have heretofore been generally much less than the ultimate cost, but I think that very fact has led those who have investigated this project to be extremely careful and conservative. I feel very confident that the estimates made in relation to the Columbia Basin project are well within what the cost will be. Of course, I am not an engineer, but I am only judging by the existing state of affairs.

It is true, as the Senator says, that the cost years ago was generally greater than the estimate. I have talked with some of the engineers who investigated this project and studied it, and they have assured me that they have been extremely liberal in making estimates so as to be sure to cover all possible contingencies.

Mr. FESS. I hope the Senator is correct in his belief that this estimate is within the limit. I have been afraid that the original practice would be followed. I think, though, the Senator from Washington will agree with me that it is the height of inconsistency that only a few days ago this body voted $400,000,000 to take care of a troublesome agricultural surplus, and now we are proceeding immediately to authorize the expenditure of $300,000,000 more to add to the tillable acreage at least 400,000 acres, and later on the possibility of nearly 2,000,000 acres. I think that is the height of inconsistency.

Mr. JONES. If this area were to come under cultivation within the next year or two, I concede that; but I do not think it is possible to bring any considerable amount of this land into production inside of 20 or 25 years. The population of this country is estimated to be increasing at the rate of 2,000,000 a year; and if that is true—and I think it is—in 20 or 25 years we will have 50,000,000 more people to be fed and taken care of.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in that connection?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. We are importing now in agricultural products considerably more than we are exporting. It was shown by the Senator from Idaho in the debates that we are importing nearly two and a half billion dollars' worth of agricultural products at this time. The development of this agricultural territory out there would produce some of those things that are being imported into this country at this time; and with a constantly diminishing surplus it does not occur to me that it is an argument against the agricultural situation at all to develop some local spot in the United States.

Mr. FESS. I recognize the fact that we do import a very great quantity as measured by its value; but if the Senator will go into the details of those products he will find that they are not the agricultural products that are the chief basis of food to us.

Mr. BROOKHART. Many of them are. I think the Senator from Idaho could give a list of them.

Mr. FESS. It is stated here that what we will produce on this land will be wheat—that is one item——

Mr. BROOKHART. We have a surplus of that.

Mr. FESS. Alfalfa——

Mr. BROOKHART. We have no surplus there.

Mr. FESS. But we can have a surplus. The productivity of the area is such that we can have a surplus.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think not.

Mr. FESS. I rather think we can. Another item is corn——

Mr. BROOKHART. Our surplus of corn is practically gone.

Mr. FESS. Potatoes——

Mr. BROOKHART. We import potatoes.

Mr. FESS. It is not necessary. Whenever we import them, it is to the disadvantage of the producer here. We have the ability to produce vastly more potatoes than we can consume.

The next items that are mentioned here are hay, seeds, and livestock. Those are the items that are going to be produced in that country; and the Senator knows that the great importations we are compelled to make are not of those items.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mainly not; that is true.

Mr. FESS. In reference to the statement of the Senator, the growth of the population from now on, of course, will not be as much as it was in the decade before the war, because then we were allowing by immigration about a million people to come here every year. That is reduced almost to a minimum now—2 per cent of the nationals that are already here. So that the growth of the population from now on will be very largely through natural increase, and not, as has always been the case heretofore, through tremendous immigration from other countries; for it goes without saying that we are never going to resume that practice as we used to observe it.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator with reference to immigration; but I take it that the natural increase in our population is over a million a year. In 25 years that will be 25,000,000. That is a fair estimate.

Mr. FESS. There are a great many people living now who will not be living at the end of 25 years. The Senator must keep that in mind.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but they will be replaced.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the estimates of those who have been studying the subject of the growth of population from year to year are that the increase will be about 2,000,000 a year, because, although immigration may be shut off, the fact that there is a bigger basic population will keep the increase about 2,000,000 per year. That is the estimate.

Mr. FESS. I doubt the increase of 2,000,000 a year, but that is neither here nor there. I do not think that goes definitely to the core of the problem. The big feature that the proponents of this bill have in the argument is the time it will take to get the project in operation. I think that is a feature that must be considered; but I will say to my friends who are back of this project that I can not avoid thinking of this fact:

We have a large amount of land that heretofore was tillable that has been largely abandoned. According to the records of the Agricultural Department, 31,000,000 acres that had been under cultivation have been abandoned because of the stress of the war. We brought under cultivation about 45,000,000 acres then, and now 31,000,000 acres of it has been abandoned; and that does not take into consideration a large amount of New England land that was cultivable that now is not very productive.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator recognizes, of course, that that land was only brought under production because of the unusual demand for foodstuffs.

Mr. FESS. Precisely.

Mr. DILL. The Senator also recognizes that much of it has been abandoned because it is of such poor productive quality that it probably will not be again taken up, even though there were a need for food production, unless that need was very acute. This land, however, is very rich. Its soil is very fertile, and it affords unusually fine opportunities for the production of food, and, may I say also, the production of people, because there are no finer communities in America to-day than the irrigated areas of the West.

Mr. FESS. I admit that.

Mr. DILL. We have more nearly a combination of the good things of city and country life there than can be found in any other place in the world, and without the objections against life in the city alone or life in the country alone.

Mr. FESS. My friend from Washington was an advocate of an effort to handle the agricultural surplus which developed a very sharp difference of opinion on this floor as to the proper method.

As a sincere advocate of that method of solution of that problem will he not agree that it is rather out of the ordinary that with that condition facing us we are proceeding now to increase to rather an unlimited degree the acreage of tillable country that the Senator says will produce tremendously because of its richness of soil, and thus further increase the problem of surplus?

Mr. DILL. This increase of land, with all its rich production, would not supply one-tenth of the increase in population that will occur between now and the time when it will be available for production. May I remind the Senator further that this area lies in the western part of the country and is in touch with the great oriental trade? The trade across the Pacific is fast becoming the growing commerce of the world, and the opportunity to sell products—aye, the demand for products by the commerce on the Pacific—will be greater and greater each year; and this area will afford a production with that outlet without long-distance transportation.

Mr. FESS. Will not the Senator agree that since in the future ahead, some years removed, we may need this source of agricultural product it would be wise to enter upon a further investigation of the plan, so that we may have a little more assurance as to the wisdom of our entering upon it?

Mr. DILL. Let me say to the Senator that it would be impossible to construct this project without several years of surveying and investigation and study to know how to construct it economically and scientifically. In order that these investigations and surveys may go forward on a big scale, with a view to actually constructing the project some day, we believe it is wise to adopt it as a project, and then secure the appropriations as they are needed to make these investigations year by year, instead of being compelled to come here every year and prove that the project some day will be built in order to get an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. FESS. That would be a matter of safety on the part of the people there who are interested; but what about the Government? Suppose we enter upon this completed project of $300,000,000 authorization and later on we find that it is not tenable?

Mr. DILL. We have done that before. Nothing would be lost by adoption and much might be gained by it. In other words, we are not bound by this authorization to appropriate the money to build this project. We are only saying that the project is authorized, and we will go ahead with the investigations and work necessary on the theory that it is to be constructed. No money can be spent under the law until the feasibility of it from an economic standpoint is demonstrated. May I say that it has been proved feasible and declared feasible from an engineering standpoint already; but until its feasibility has been established through the office of the Secretary of the Interior—namely, through the Bureau of Reclamation—no money can be appropriated for construction anyhow.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator will readily see my point of view. Under the stress of a great emergency this body voted almost unlimited authority here the other day, and did it unanimously, in regard to flood control. I suggested that we vote immediately on that bill when I learned that those in the stricken district were satisfied with the proposed legislation. I have since gone into that project further, and I think the authorization there is quite unlimited. I can not imagine what might be the call upon the Treasury under the authority of that bill. I doubt very much whether I would have voted for it, as I did, if I had known the possibilities involved. There is no limit to it that I can see now. We can even go up to the sources of the Mississippi and include rivers the inclusion of which probably would not be warranted at all; and yet the authority seems to have been given.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. FESS. I have been somewhat distressed over that measure, although I voted for it.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to bring that into this discussion; but the Senator is entirely wrong in that. I am not going to take his time now to show him that he is wrong, but I shall be glad to talk with him further about it. The Senator is entirely wrong in that idea.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill says specifically "beginning at Cairo and extending to New Orleans." It is specifically limited.

Mr. JONES. That is all we have adopted.

Mr. FESS. There is a pertinent illustration here in reference to the Alaskan Railroad.

Mr. DILL. May I suggest to the Senator, since he brought up the Mississippi flood situation, that the purpose of that measure is to protect land in order that it may produce.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. DILL. I voted for that bill and I have no regrets over my vote. Its purpose is to keep water off land; and the money is to come out of the Treasury and never be repaid. This is for the purpose of reclaiming land that was settled and developed and found to be impossible of producing enough to support a family without more water, and we will pay back the money. This plan looks to a long future and is fully justified.

Mr. FESS. Yes; the two are different. The one is on the irrigation basis.

Mr. DILL. And certainly the irrigation proposal has the advantage over the flood proposal from the standpoint of the Treasury.

Mr. FESS. Yes, it has; and I will say to the Senator that it appeals to me. If you can take a desert country and make it blossom as the rose, as is the case with many places out in the West, I am for it; and I do not regret voting for any emergency legislation if we have not lifted the lid and gone to the skies on it.

I have an inclination to vote for a matter which comes up that appeals to me, without giving it sufficient attention to know whether we are placing any limit on it. That is why I have hesitancy about this Columbia Basin proposition. I am not opposed to irrigation at all; I have sympathy for it, but with this problem of surpluses on our hands and with the possibility that the problem will be continued because of bringing into use land that has been abandoned, it does strike me that it is rather inconsistent that we proceed on such an elaborate, ambitious program as this right at the time when we are most concerned about the problem of surplus.

If the Senators interested in this would be willing to put it in shape so that we can have further investigation and report within a reasonable time, I think I could give it my sympathetic support, but under the present circumstances I do not believe that I can vote for it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, very much in line with what the Senator from Ohio has suggested, it seems to me that now we have not sufficient information and data before us to justify us in voting for this draft on the Treasury to an almost unlimited extent. We do not know where we may go in that direction.

The Senator has spoken about the number of acres of abandoned farm land in this country. There is undoubtedly splendid farm land in the country where a greater variety of crops can be produced and where there is a longer growing season, which could be had for very much less than the cost of these lands. There has been enormous waste with regard to our agricultural lands because our people cultivating them have failed to take proper care of them. That is a matter they must learn about, because we know that in Europe there are lands devoted to agriculture and which have been cultivated for a thousand years, that are yielding to-day more than they ever did before. We could have the same condition if we would go about taking care of our land.

I am going to offer a suggestion by way of laying the foundation for the adoption, eventually, of this project, if it is found to be feasible. We ought to keep in mind something of our experience with regard to reclamation. I have generally voted for reclamation bills.

Under the act of May 26, 1926, we authorized a charge off on various products of $14,668,065. There is suspended $12,593,329. The projects abandoned or sold are Buford-Winton, Garden City, Hindo, and Williston, aggregating a loss of $1,870,014. That is not a very encouraging experience.

The total expended for construction on all Federal reclamation projects to June 30, 1927, amounted to $183,887,241. There are in cultivation to-day 1,313,830 acres—that is, lands furnished with primary water supply. The construction debt repaid to June 30, 1927, was only $28,482,289, as against a total cost of $183,887,241. The amount of operation and maintenance charges repaid to June 30, 1927, was $26,093,767.

It seems to me these figures demonstrate that we ought to move with some caution before we undertake to create new lands—millions of acres—at this enormous cost, and especially when we are without sufficient information, it seems to me, to warrant us in authorizing that tremendous draft upon the Treasury.

So I am going to propose for consideration this amendment, to strike out all after the word "be," in line 7, page 1, and to insert "investigated as to feasibility and cost, including the extent of the irrigable land, the classification of soils and their areas, measurements and sources of water supply, and determination of the cost of works for storage and distribution, working out plans for settlement and farm development; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100,000 to further and complete the investigations herein authorized."

I will make that a larger amount if the Senators think it ought to be larger, but it seems to me we ought to have that sort of report before we can be justified in adopting a project calling for such an enormous expenditure.

That would not mean the adoption of the project, but it would authorize the investigation. I have followed in this proposed amendment the language of the Secretary of the Interior, where he specifies things that are needed before he could recommend the project. I have tried to follow these things he specifies that he ought to have information about before he could recommend the project.

I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUTTING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not in charge of this bill, but I am familiar with the project, and without further information from the committee or some one who has knowledge of the subject, I certainly would not permit an amendment of that kind to be affixed to the measure. That is the only reason why I shall occupy the remainder of the time until 2 o'clock.

I have found from experience that we can not frame legislation on the floor of the Senate. The proposal made by the Senator from Florida is quite unique and different from that which was considered by the committee. Ultimately it may be the solution of the problem, but one would be recreant who would permit an amendment of that kind to be written into a bill without further thoughtful consideration.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to ask, if I might, whether the Senator from Florida would permit his amendment to begin in line 9 after the word "project," instead of beginning in line 7?

Mr. FLETCHER. That would change the character of my amendment. I would not like to adopt such a project before we had this information.

Mr. DILL. We have already spent $500,000 investigating, and there is certain feasibility that is required before construction can begin; but the other feasibility has been determined. If the Senator would agree to that amendment, I should be inclined to accept it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand; the investigations, though, are not complete, and it is necessary to get further information before we can adopt the project. I would hesitate to provide for the adoption of the project until we have this information, and the fact that some of it has already been obtained, of course, makes it unnecessary to provide a large sum to get what is further required. I did not expect this amendment to be adopted without some consideration. It is open for debate, I will say to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I regret the absence of the distinguished Senator and keynoter from Ohio, who attempted to discuss certain phases of this bill as applied to the farm problem. I concede that there is no economic demand for the cultivation of this area to-day. There is nothing in the bill which suggests such a thing.

Some one has said—and it was a reputable Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Meredith, in the Cabinet of Mr. Wilson—that there are 550,000,000 acres in cultivation through the country. This project involves an acreage of 2,000,000, which is a little less than one-half of 1 per cent of the cultivable area. That is so small as not to make any indelible impression upon the acreage if it were placed upon the market to-day as cultivable land.

Furthermore, anyone familiar with this project must realize that this is merely a preliminary step. All the things necessary to go through, like the estimates of the Interior Department and of the Director of the Budget, and favorable action by the Congress, and reports by committees, are prerequisites to legislation in this field.

Consequently, it may be 20 years, or it may be 25; but I do not measure the time in years at all. It may be 50 years. I can say for those who will succeed me and others present here in the Halls of Congress that this land will never come under cultivation through Government aid until there is an economic demand for its use. The population, perhaps, will bring that about. The worn-out conditions of other areas, perhaps, may contribute to that end. But in this body and in the House we will have to find expression of desire for the appropriation of money to bring this land under cultivation, and the House and this body will never act until there is need for this land.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Ohio spoke about surpluses. The bill which passed a few days ago contemplated surpluses mainly among the staple basic crops of the country, and knowing the character of the land, and being familiar with the soil conditions and the climate, I am sure those settlers in that great basin would limit that area to the intensified agriculture which is found and embraced under terms of fruit and vegetables, of which there is not a surplus in this country.

In my opinion, there would be very little wheat raised there, if any. Some one suggested that wheat would be raised. It is impossible to pay a high water charge in the cultivation of wheat in competition with the area devoted to that crop throughout the country.

Hence, hastening along, if one would consider the agricultural possibilities of the great Columbia Basin area, having any knowledge of the problem, he would know that the products that would be raised in that area would in no wise contribute to the surpluses of the country; and neither this Congress nor any future Congress in its wisdom would permit appropriations of money to bring it into completion and development until there was a real economic demand well known by the legislators and economists of the country.

I rose only to prevent hasty action upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, and I hope that at some future time we may consider that particular amendment further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1271, the migratory bird bill.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—NICARAGUAN AFFAIRS

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I understand that the report from the Secretary of the Navy, asked for by the resolution of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], has come to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 198, agreed to yesterday, information relative to the operations of the naval service in Nicaragua, together with a statement giving data as to cost of maintenance of Marine Corps personnel in Nicaragua from May 4, 1927, to April 16, 1928.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the report has not yet been printed and Senators have not had time to examine it, I shall not call up the naval appropriation bill this afternoon, but will do so to-morrow at the first available opportunity.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest that the report be printed, so that Senators who want to examine it may have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the report be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. I wish to make a statement about a matter appearing in yesterday's RECORD. On page 6761 of the RECORD the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asked me the following question:

> As I understand the Senator from Maine, there have been no additional expenditures for the Navy in connection with the transporting of troops to Nicaragua or to China?

I understood the Senator was referring to Nicaragua alone, and not to China, and I replied:

> No; there have been no additional expenditures.

I will say in this connection that while there were no additional expenditures in Nicaragua, in China there was an additional expenditure of about $210,000. The transports at that time were not available for China, and the Navy had to hire a private transport. The President Grant, of the Dollar Line, was used for that purpose.

LAW LIBRARY OF THE LATE ELBRIDGE T. GERRY

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3640) authorizing the acceptance from Peter G. Gerry of the gift of the law library of the late Elbridge T. Gerry.

Mr. NORBECK. I have no objection if there will be no prolonged discussion.

Mr. BAYARD. There will be no discussion, I am quite sure. The bill authorizes acceptance by the Supreme Court of the gift by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] of a library which formerly belonged to his father. It is a very fine collection of law books and the bill merely authorizes acceptance by the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief Justice of the United States is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, for the use of the Supreme Court, the gift of PETER G. GERRY, a Senator of the United States from the State of Rhode Island, of the law library bequeathed to him by his father, the late Elbridge T. Gerry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE, NEW JERSEY

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, on the desk there is a message from the House of Representatives which came over this morning, which I ask may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. 350) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River to Trenton, N. J.

The bill was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is identical with Senate bill 3814, now on the calendar, providing for extension of the time for the construction of a bridge over the Delaware River. As the bill has passed the House, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration and that it may supersede and take the place of Senate bill 3814.

Mr. CURTIS. It is in the usual form of a bridge bill?

Mr. EDGE. It is the usual form for a bridge bill providing for the extension of time to complete the construction of a bridge.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, to be built by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. across the Delaware River near the city of Trenton, N. J., which has heretofore been extended by Congress to August 24, 1928, is hereby extended for a further period of three years from the last-named date: Provided, That it shall not be lawful to complete or commence the completion of said bridge until plans thereof shall again be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDGE. I now ask for the indefinite postponement of Calendar No. 786, the bill (S. 3814) to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River near Trenton, N. J.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

SHOSHONE AND ARAPAHOE INDIANS OF WYOMING

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 816, the bill (S. 3366) to authorize a per capita payment to the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians of Wyoming from funds held in trust for them by the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "Thirty-fifth" and insert "Thirty-ninth," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States so much of the money credited to the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians of Wyoming under the act of August 21, 1916 (39 Stat. 519), as may be necessary to make a $25 per capita payment to said Indians, and to pay or distribute the same to all recognized members of the tribes under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACOMA PUEBLO INDIANS, VALENCIA COUNTY, N. MEX.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 831, the bill (H. R. 11479) to reserve certain lands on the public domain in Valencia County, N. Mex., for the use and benefit of the Acoma Pueblo Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be reported.

The legislative clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not know enough about the bill to consent to its consideration at this time. Will the Senator let it go over until some other time and I will talk to him about it?

Mr. BRATTON. Very well. I withdraw the request.

VIEW OF THE POLITICAL SITUATION

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have an editorial from the Times, of Reading, Pa. It is a very thoughtful article. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUTTING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

LOOKING FOR A LEADER

Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, the energetic young man from Montana who drove Harry Daugherty out of the Cabinet, is discouraged about the American people.

The Nation, he believes, is selfish and inert. If Lincoln himself were to appear to-day, the Senator declares, he could do nothing because the people would be too indifferent to follow him.

It is hard to blame the Senator for being pessimistic. He courageously made war on corruption in high places, and was rewarded by being indicted on trumped-up charges; nor was there any great outcry of popular indignation over the treatment he received.

Yet it is possible to disagree with him.

It is true that we seem far more interested in baseball, criminal trials, airplane flights, and new flivvers than in our governmental leaders and their problems. But this may not be our fault so much as the fault of our leaders.

As a matter of fact, there is no country on earth where the average man looks so longingly for a capable leader as in America. Our trouble is that too often, of recent years, we have learned that our idols had feet of clay. We have grown somewhat suspicious; we have become clever at detecting shams. But let a really great man arise, or even a half-great man, and we are ready to go wherever he asks.

This explains, undoubtedly, our tendency to idolize our industrial captains. We look up to men like Ford, Sloan, Farrell, and du Pont because we recognize that here, for all their shortcomings, are men who are in their own way genuinely big. They may move in narrow fields, but in those fields they loom large. We are hungry for leaders, and since our politicians so often have failed us we are turning to the business man.

The American does not readily lose his capacity for giving himself to great leaders. There is grounded in every heart an inarticulate idealism, shy but ardent, eager to take command if only there will arise a captain capable of making the right appear. On every battle field from Lexington to Chateau-Thierry there are American bodies to testify to this.

Sir Bertram Hayes commanded the big liner Olympic during the World War, and helped transport many English and American troops to France. In his recently published book of reminiscences he comments on the contrast between the troops of the two nations. The English soldiers, he said, were care free and jovial en route to France; the Americans were sober, serious, "like crusaders."

That was it. "Like crusaders." Whatever the historians may have discovered regarding the causes of the war; whatever may have happened since then in the rooms where treaties have been signed; the fact remains that we entered the war because the common American was convinced that by so doing he was serving a loftier cause than he could know otherwise. We were asked to give ourselves for an ideal, and we responded.

Is that spirit dead, then? Have we lost our capacity for rising to high ideals? We have not. We are still looking for leaders. We have had a dearth of them of late. But we are ready for them.

Let a man arise again—a man of genuine greatness, with a call to real service on his lips—and there will be a response to shake the world. America is waiting now as always. Let every politician remember it.

JAMES A. DE LOACH

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 779, the bill (H. R. 9902) for the relief of James A. DeLoach. If there is objection, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be reported.

The legislative clerk read the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. BLACK. It is; and the bill has passed the House.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $2,500 to James A. DeLoach for injuries received by him while attending a citizens' military training camp at Camp McClellan, Ala.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF PUBLIC UTILITY CORPORATIONS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have the second partial report of the Federal Trade Commission, in accordance with Senate Resolution 83, on the electric power and gas utilities inquiry being prosecuted by that body. I am not advised whether the first report, which was submitted on March 15, was printed or not. I ask unanimous consent that this report be referred to the Committee on Printing, together with the preceding report, with a view to printing the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, in explanation of the bill now before the Senate I will state that several objections were made to the bill in the form in which it was previously pending. I think the most serious objection was made to the plan for a considerable number of Federal wardens. Other objections were made to the granting of power to the Secretary of the Treasury by which rules and regulations could be provided, which would be law in effect. A third objection was made to having 40 per cent of the sanctuaries considered as shooting grounds. I have met all three of those objections by the substitute bill which is now pending as an amendment. Those were the principal changes made in the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, are we to understand that the substitute bill does not retain the license feature?

Mr. NORBECK. Oh, yes; it does retain the license feature as a matter of revenue. That is the only matter to which any objection was raised which I am still retaining in the bill. I do not know how else to get the money.

Mr. SMITH. Is there any restriction placed on the matter of licenses? In other words, would one have to take out a license in the State and would he then be subject to the restrictions of that license no matter where he might want to do his hunting or shooting? As I understood the objection was that the bill was so comprehensive in its original form that a citizen of a State would be restricted in all of his hunting privileges by virtue of there being a game asylum within that State. If one proposes to go within the game asylum, I could see how he might be restricted, but we ought not to have a license so worded that the presence of the preserve would affect the whole hunting condition in that State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I understood it, of course, it would require every one who hunted off his own property to have a license. But the theory of the bill is that the hunting is not to be upon the preserves. The preserves are very largely breeding places. The game that is bred there will scatter out over the State. I would imagine that nearly anybody would rather pay a dollar for a license to hunt when there is something to hunt than to hunt all day and find nothing. The theory that we are going to multiply the game, and that it can be done, has been demonstrated in the State of Pennsylvania.

Besides, there is an amendment to which the Senator in charge of the bill was good enough to say he had no objection, which will be offered at a later time, providing that whenever the State is ready to take over the bill and its enforcement it may do so, and the Federal Government, with all its regulations, except the general regulations laid down, goes out of the business. There will not be a single Federal employee in the State under those conditions.

Mr. SMITH. Provided the State accedes to the legislation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; if the State is willing to preserve the game. All of us that know anything about the matter know it is not worth anything to South Carolina to preserve wild life that goes into other States, because in one State alone we may destroy most of the migratory wild life. It used to be so in my State. There was one lake—I have a plantation that borders it—where 60 per cent of the ducks and wild geese that went through that State used to rest. The pot hunters swarmed there from everywhere, and they almost destroyed the game as it came and went over that one lake. It was made a Federal game preserve, and the hunting has been better in all the country around because of the impossibility of destroying it all in that one refuge.

Mr. SMITH. So the bill, as it would apply to the southern section of the country and the migratory bird life that goes over the northern section, would not apply to it as a breeding place, but an asylum where all game would be immune from being disturbed during the migratory period.

Mr. CARAWAY. It affords both breeding places and asylums. It is the hope of those who so long have fostered the principle of the bill that it is going to make more plentiful the wild life in all the States. Any wild life that is migratory can not be protected in any one of the several States through which it passes, because it may be preserved in one State and destroyed in the adjoining State. It is to make it possible for this kind of wild life to find sanctuaries and for it to have breeding places, so that it will become once more plentiful in the country.

Mr. SMITH. Are we to understand that the terms of the bill operate entirely or are put into effect at the option of the Federal Government?

Mr. NORBECK. Absolutely, and when it comes to buying land in the State for that purpose, the head of the State game department sits in with the commission and acts with them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. NORBECK. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. What does the Senator propose to do in those States which already tax the people to carry out the idea embraced in his bill? For example, in Maryland we have resident and nonresident licenses; everybody who hunts there must take out a license. With that money we have bought land and established game sanctuaries where game breeds, and is then distributed over the State. The Senator, as I undersand, proposes that in addition to our own tax in Maryland, which under the law we are supposed to pay and do pay, the Federal Government is to come along and duplicate that tax and duplicate the work which Maryland is doing. Why do not those who are in favor of creating game sanctuaries concentrate on the various States? Why do they not try in Arkansas or in Minnesota or in Maryland or any other State to accomplish the result desired by local legislation rather than to establish another bureau of the Government in Washington, and under the guise of enforcing a treaty with a foreign country really make local legislation for every State in the Union?

Under the present treaty the Federal Government does protect wild life. There is a uniform system for the shooting of ducks and geese and swan. There are Federal policemen that go into the various States to enforce that law. The Federal courts have tried and convicted many who have broken the regulations adopted by the department. Now, as I understand, the pending measure merely widens the scope of the powers of the department and really takes over game regulation in its entirety by the Federal Government, so that even though the people of Maryland wanted to have their own game sanctuaries and their own laws within the treaty the whole thing would, more or less, be wiped off the map and the Federal Government would be regulating the entire matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORBECK. I think the Senator from Maryland is mistaken in some of his assumptions.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope I am.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Maryland, I take it for granted, is mistaken in every one of his suggestions. This bill could not prevent Maryland doing whatever she saw fit in the effort to conserve game. All it could do would be to prevent the destruction of game under certain conditions; but, so far as the conservation policy of Maryland is concerned, it would not touch it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me interrupt the Senator right there to say that what the Senator has said is but a restatement of what I stated; in other words, in addition to our local legislation protecting game, the Federal Government can pass still further legislation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, the Federal Government has other regulations now.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. It has regulations to define within what period and under what conditions one may shoot migratory birds.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. CARAWAY. In addition to that it now offers to furnish the means of supplying game sanctuaries and breeding places.

Mr. TYDINGS. But we have them already.

Mr. CARAWAY. The bill will not preclude Maryland keeping those that it has.

Mr. TYDINGS. But it will duplicate the cost of them. Should we be penalized for our progressiveness in protecting birds and appropriating our own money therefor by being compelled to pay a double tax to the Federal Government?

Mr. CARAWAY. Maryland has possibly got more out of the preservation of wild life than has any other State in the Union.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; we have gotten less out of it, because we have a natural resource, as it were, there, and other States are attempting to tell us how to handle our own local affairs.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; we are hoping to prevent the people of Maryland trying to kill everything that flies.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is absolutely wrong in his statement, because the regulations of Maryland, which are within the treaty, restrict the killing of game just as do the present Federal regulations.

Mr. CARAWAY. If so, Maryland will not have any cause to complain of this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; Maryland will, because this bill will duplicate the taxes which we already pay, and we do not propose to pay, without protest, a tax to the Federal Government in order to regulate our own affairs.

Mr. CARAWAY. This bill does not regulate local affairs.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to say to the Senator, just to clear up that point before I lose the chance to reply, that in most of the States wild fowl may be legally killed six days in the week, whereas in the State of Maryland wild fowl can be killed on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays only, so that the ducks can come back to the feeding grounds between gunning days every other day when there is no gunning on those grounds. In most of the other States one may legally gun six days in the week. When the other States and the Federal Government place themselves in the position in which we have placed ourselves, we will be very glad to sit down and talk this over with them, but when we pay a local tax and establish our own game sanctuaries and make and enforce restrictions to preserve game further than the Federal Government has done, we do not propose, without protest, to pay a duplication of that tax to the Federal Government for the benefit of game preservation in other States.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. What good will it do to preserve game in Maryland if they kill it in other States before it gets to Maryland?

Mr. TYDINGS. In what States will it be killed before it gets to Maryland?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know. I am asking the Senator that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. What is the use of talking about a proposition concerning which we do not know? Let us talk about the facts.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, let me see if I correctly understand the purport of this bill. As I understand from what has been said, the pending bill does not impose any greater penalties and does not increase the Federal jurisdiction in connection with shooting, does it?

Mr. NORBECK. No, sir.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I interrupt the Senator to say that I do not think that is correct?

Mr. SWANSON. If that be true, the Senator from Arkansas is not correct in urging that this bill will increase the protection to birds. As I understand, it does not increase the present powers in any way at all. All it does, as I understand, is to impose a $1 tax——

Mr. NORBECK. To produce more birds.

Mr. SWANSON. And the dollar so collected is to be used for what purpose? To hire agents to enforce existing law, as I understand.

Mr. CARAWAY. No.

Mr. NORBECK. To buy land.

Mr. SWANSON. To enforce existing law, and, secondly, to buy land.

Mr. CARAWAY. No.

Mr. SWANSON. Where is the land which is to be purchased going to be located?

Mr. SMITH. And who is going to pay for it?

Mr. SWANSON. If there should be collected $200,000 a year in Virginia from such a tax, in five years it would amount to a million dollars. Can any assurance be given to me that that money will be applied in any manner to provide a refuge in Virginia? Can any assurance be given that the money collected from Maryland will be applied to the location of a game refuge in Maryland? Who is to locate the places where the game refuges are to be under this bill?

Mr. NORBECK. Canada has established 50 of them, of which we get the benefit.

Mr. SWANSON. I am asking who determines where this money shall be spent?

Mr. NORBECK. The board which is created is to determine that, in conjunction with the wardens in the States.

Mr. SWANSON. Why does not the Senator provide in the bill that the money shall be spent on refuges in the States where it is collected?

Mr. NORBECK. Of course, the theory is that one place may be better than another. For instance, we passed a bill here a day or so ago establishing a game refuge in Utah.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill of the Senator from South Dakota proposes to tax the people of Maryland, to take money from the people of Maryland, and spend it in some other State and to build a game refuge with it?

Mr. NORBECK. It may be that money of South Dakota will be taken to build a refuge in Maryland. For all I know, if that shall be the best place for the location of a refuge, that is where it ought to go.

Mr. TYDINGS. All we in Maryland want is to keep the money which belongs to the people of Maryland for use in that State.

Mr. NORBECK. The Atlantic coast has a concentration of wild fowl that the rest of the country has not. The last birds will be killed on the seaboard, if they are killed at all. It is the depletion of the bird life that affects the interior, rather than the contrary being true.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORBECK. Just a moment. I do not think the bird refuge the Senator is speaking of has any direct relation to migratory birds. It is for the birds that continue to live in Maryland the year around.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will be glad to vote for the Senator's bill if he will eliminate the license feature and make a direct appropriation. Then there would be no complaint anywhere.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota has convinced me that we ought to have bird refuges. I have heard him with pleasure and profit on that feature of the proposal. However, I do not think it is right to tax the people of the various States by requiring licenses of them and making them pay the Federal Government for the privilege of shooting in order to create a fund such as is proposed. If a national interest is to be subserved, if the purpose is to aid the entire Nation, and to protect the birds everywhere, the money ought to come out of the Treasury. I am willing to vote for funds to be applied to the creation of bird refuges and wild game sanctuaries where needed, in a broad way, for the entire country, but I am not willing to supplement the system we already have by another system of enforcement and another system of taxes, in order to furnish funds to provide refuges. Particularly is that true, so far as I am concerned, with reference to Virginia.

I do not know where the money is going to be spent. I do not think that the theory on which the bill is based is the right one. If, as I have said, a great national interest is to be subserved, it ought to be provided for out of the National Treasury and by national funds. I will vote for such a measure; and I am satisfied if the Senator will introduce a bill which does not require a Federal license, to harass and worry the people of Virginia and the other States who desire to hunt birds, and which takes the necessary money out of the Federal Treasury by a direct appropriation, he will gain much support for it. I would not object to a measure of that kind, even though the money were used in the State of the Senator from South Dakota or some other State and none of it were used in Virginia, if the national interests required such an expenditure. I do object, however, to harassing the people of Virginia and compelling them to furnish a fund when no one knows where the fund is going to be spent.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it would be bad enough if each State were to be the beneficiary of the tax collected within that State for a refuge for domestic birds that are native to the State, but there is not a man on this floor who can not see the palpable injustice of laying a tax on all the States and then leaving it to the Federal Government as to where the refuges or sanctuaries may be located. As the Senator from Maryland has pointed out as to his State, so also in my State we have a resident and nonresident license, and we are strictly conforming to the international treaty in reference to migratory birds. It seems to me that each State could at least be left to decide whether or not, in conjunction with its strict hunting regulations, it would be to its benefit to have a bird refuge within its borders.

Mr. NORBECK. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. SWANSON. I yielded to the Senator from South Carolina, and should like to proceed a moment longer. I do not think the people of South Dakota ought to be taxed to furnish bird refuges that will benefit half a dozen or a dozen States farther south. I think it would be unjust to the State of South Dakota to compel it locally to furnish the funds to protect birds in order that they may breed in that State and fly to a dozen other States. I am willing for the Federal Government to decide where the refuges shall be located; I am willing for the people of Virginia to pay their pro rata part of the taxes to support a refuge that is for the entire country; but I am not willing to have the citizens of Virginia harassed in the effort to furnish revenue which ought to come out of the National Treasury under the ordinary system of taxation.

I ask the Senator from South Dakota not to press this bill. I give him my assurance, so far as I am concerned, that if he will bring in a bill that recognizes that the establishment of refuge for wild life is a national necessity and of importance to all the States and makes a direct appropriation out of the Federal Treasury to provide the means, I shall be willing to consent that the Federal Government shall locate the refuges where it may please, and I will be pleased to support such a bill. I think that would be the right way in which to handle this matter, and I am satisfied the Senator would get possibly a unanimous vote for a bill of that kind on the part of those who want to defeat the pending bill.

If there are those who will oppose such a measure, let them come on the floor and fight it, if they are not willing to have bird refuges and sanctuaries established under such a plan. However, I am not willing to have created the antagonisms that would come from taking care of bird life in the manner proposed, which would result in harassing everybody who wants to obtain a license to shoot any kind of game.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not believe the people in the State of the Senator from Virginia, and certainly not the people of my State, want in their midst a greater number of Federal agents than is absolutely necessary, enforcing their local laws, because it always makes for ill feeling and a bad situation.

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator knows that I have taken the provision with regard to Federal agents out of the bill, except as they are to be stationed at the bird refuges.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but the bill provides that the Department of Agriculture may issue regulations, and so on, governing the game refuges.

Mr. NORBECK. Just on the ground on which the refuges are located; and the Senator, being a lawyer, knows that that is quite necessary.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the department can do that it can appoint any Federal agent it wants to appoint, so long as the law may be in effect.

Mr. NORBECK. The activities of the agents are to be limited to the particular areas.

Mr. SWANSON. We have in Virginia a good game law, and we have a game commissioner. We have regular refuges, where game life is protected and developed and grows and makes increases. Now, the people in Virginia are interested in it; but if they have to come here, and Federal licenses are required for everybody in Virginia that wants to engage in any little matter of shooting or hunting, and they are to be tried for every little infraction of a Federal statute, that is not a wise way to accomplish the result that is sought by the Senator from South Dakota.

It seems to me, as it is a matter of great national interest to preserve, protect, and take care of this game, that it ought to be treated in a national way. The right way for national interests to be treated is to be sustained out of the National Treasury and not by a license system that will be disturbing, injurious, and repulsive to the people when it is administered.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I just want to say in reply to that that I think there is considerable confusion between game and bird refuges, it being recognized that migratory birds are very seldom shot in the State where the game refuge is. It is not important to South Dakota that they have game refuges. It is important to South Dakota that there shall be birds flying across the State. We are entirely indifferent as to where the game refuges are located. As I said before, I think we get a great deal of benefit out of those located in Canada.

I just want to say further that the experience of forty-odd States in the Union—I think 46—that have State departments of game is that they are doing something in the game-conservation line. As far as I have been able to find, they are all taxing it back to the man that hunts, because the taxpayers refuse to bear that kind of a burden. They take the attitude, "If the sportsman wants game, let him pay for it through his license."

In proposing this plan we are following the experience of nearly 48 States in the Union, a long experience in the same line, except that the States have found themselves unable to deal with the migratory-bird problem. We are trying to do for migratory birds what the States have done for the birds that nest and remain within the State borders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota wish formally to present a substitute?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes, Mr. President; I want to offer this amendment in the nature of a substitute. I have made the changes in it as outlined and I have taken out from under the provisions of the bill the dove and the woodcock and the yellowlegs, so as to narrow down the number of birds on which there will be any requirements of Federal license. I ask unanimous consent that it be adopted at this time, and be before the Senate just the same as though it had been reported in that way, and that amendments may be offered to the measure as it will then be pending.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was interrupted for a moment. Does the Senator offer an entirely new bill?

Mr. NORBECK. It is rewritten, with certain changes, and is offered as an entirely new bill, in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. McNARY. Does it in substance change the bill at all as reported by the committee?

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator was not in the Chamber when I explained it.

Mr. McNARY. No.

Mr. NORBECK. It does away entirely with shooting grounds. My friend the Senator from Utah has been very insistent on that, and the Senator from Washington.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator explained it, the explanation will appear in the RECORD, and that is all right.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; it has been fully explained. That is the main change in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is asking unanimous consent to make the substitution?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the Senator's purpose is just to get the matter before the Senate, not for final passage.

Mr. NORBECK. Oh, yes; it is just to get it before the Senate in its new form.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope that consent will be granted. This is an improvement on the bill as originally offered. I have no objection to substituting it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the substitution? The Chair is advised that it can not be amended after the substitution.

Mr. DILL. Just a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what the unanimous-consent request was—to let it stand as the original bill.

Mr. DILL. As the original bill.

Mr. NORBECK. To have it appear before the Senate as the original bill, and to be subject to amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I understood that the Senator's unanimous-consent request was that this should be taken as a substitute for the original bill and treated in the Senate as if it were the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK's substitute is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act shall be known by the short title of "Migratory bird conservation act."

SEC. 2. That a commission to be known as the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, as chairman; the Secretary of Commerce, the Postmaster General, and two Members of the Senate, to be selected by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be selected by the Speaker, is hereby created and authorized to consider and pass upon any area of land, water, or land and water that may be recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for purchase or rental under this act, and to fix the price or prices at which such area may be purchased or rented; and no purchase or rental shall be made of any such area until it has been duly approved for purchase or rental by said commission. The members of the commission hereby created shall serve as such only during their incumbency in their respective official positions, and any vacancy on the commission shall be filled in the same manner as for original appointment: Provided, That the ranking officer of the branch or department of a State to which is committed the administration of its game laws, or his authorized representative, and in a State having no such branch or department, the governor thereof, or his authorized representative, shall be a member ex officio of said commission for the purpose of considering and voting on all questions relating to the acquisition, under this act, of areas in his State.

SEC. 3. That the commission hereby created shall, through its chairman, annually report in detail to Congress, not later than the first Monday in December, the operations of the commission during the preceding fiscal year.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall recommend no area for purchase or rental under the terms of this act except such as he shall determine is necessary for the conservation of migratory game birds.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase or rent such areas as have been approved for purchase or rental by the commission, at the price or prices fixed by said commission, and to acquire by gift or devise, for use as inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds, areas which he shall determine to be suitable for such purposes, and to pay the purchase or rental price and expenses incident to the location, examination, and survey of such areas and the acquisition of title thereto, including options when deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture, from moneys to be appropriated by Congress from the migratory bird conservation fund: Provided, That no lands acquired, held, or used by the United States for military purposes shall be subject to any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things and make all expenditures necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the areas which may be acquired under this act, but no payment shall be made for any such areas until the title thereto shall be satisfactory to the Attorney General, but the acquisition of such areas by the United States shall in no case be defeated because of rights of way, easements, and reservations which from their nature will in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture in no manner interfere with the use of the areas so encumbered for the purposes of this act; but such rights of way, easements, and reservations retained by the grantor or lessor, from whom the United States receives title, shall be subject to rules and regulations prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture for the occupation, use, operation, protection, and administration of such areas as inviolate sanctuaries for migratory birds; and it shall be expressed in the deed or lease that the use, occupation, and operation of such rights of way, easements, and reservations shall be subordinate to and subject to such rules and regulations.

SEC. 7. That no deed or instrument of conveyance shall be accepted by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act unless the State in which the area lies shall have consented by law to the acquisition by the United States of lands in that State.

SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction of the State, both civil and criminal, over persons upon areas acquired under this act shall not be affected or changed by reason of their acquisition and administration by the United States as migratory bird reservations, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States is concerned.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act is intended to interfere with the operation of the game laws of the several States applying to migratory game birds in so far as they do not permit what is forbidden by Federal law.

SEC. 10. That no person shall knowingly disturb, injure, or destroy any notice, signboard, fence, building, ditch, dam, dike, embankment, flume, spillway, or other improvement or property of the United States on any area acquired under this act, or cut, burn, or destroy any timber, grass, or other natural growth, on said area or on any area of the United States which heretofore has been or which hereafter may be set apart or reserved for the use of the Department of Agriculture as a game refuge or as a preserve or reservation and breeding ground for native birds, under any law, proclamation, or Executive order, or occupy or use any part thereof, or enter thereon for any purpose, except in accordance with regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture; nor shall any person take any bird, or nest or egg thereof, on any area acquired under this act, except for scientific or propagating purposes under permit of the Secretary of Agriculture; but nothing in this act or in any regulation thereunder shall be construed to prevent a person from entering upon any area acquired under this act for the purpose of fishing in accordance with the law of the State in which such area is located: Provided, That such person complies with the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture covering such area.

SEC. 11. That no person shall take any wild ducks, geese, brant, swans, rails, coots, gallinules, curlews, black-bellied or golden plovers, snipe, willet, or other migratory game birds (except woodcock, doves, wild pigeons, or greater or lesser yellowlegs), or nest or eggs thereof, included in the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds, concluded August 16, 1916, the taking of which is now or may hereafter be permitted under Federal law, nor shall any person take for scientific or propagating purposes any migratory bird mentioned in said convention, or nest or egg thereof, unless and until he has a license pursuant to this act, and then he may take any such bird, or nest, or egg thereof, respectively, only under the provisions of the Federal law; such license, however, shall not be required of any minor under 16 years of age, nor shall such license be required of any person or member of his immediate family resident with him to take in accordance with such law any such migratory game bird on any land owned or leased by such person and occupied by him as his permanent abode, nor shall such license be required of any employee of the Federal or State government authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture, or of any other person so authorized to take in accordance with such law any migratory birds which have become seriously injurious to agricultural or other interests, nor of any employee of the Federal Government or of any State who is authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to collect migratory birds and their nests and eggs for official scientific or educational purposes, nor of any person to capture migratory birds for banding in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture under permit of the Secretary of Agriculture for this purpose, and nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any person from complying with the laws of the several States relating thereto.

SEC. 12. That each applicant for a license shall pay $1 therefor and shall sign his name in ink on the face thereof, and each license shall be dated the day of issuance and shall expire and be void after the 30th day of June next succeeding its issuance. Every licensee shall have his license on his person at the time of exercising the privileges thereunder and he shall exhibit it for inspection upon request of any person authorized by the laws of the United States or of any State to enforce the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That licenses required by this act shall be issued, and the fees therefor collected, by the Post Office Department under regulations prescribed by the Postmaster General, and such licenses shall be available at post offices throughout the United States. The provisions of the act of January 21, 1914 (38 Stat. L. 278), as amended by the act of July 2, 1918 (40 Stat. L. 754), shall apply to such licenses and funds received from sales thereof in possession of postmasters.

SEC. 14. That all moneys received for such licenses shall be reserved and set aside as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the migratory-bird conservation fund, of which not to exceed $1,000,000 annually is hereby authorized to be appropriated by Congress, and when so appropriated shall be available until expended, for the acquisition of suitable areas of land, water, or land and water, for use as migratory-bird reservations, and necessary expenses incident thereto, and for the administration, maintenancee, and development of such areas and other preserves, reservations, or breeding grounds frequented by migratory game birds and under the administration of the Secretary of Agriculture, including the construction of dams, dikes, ditches, flumes, spillways, buildings, and other necessary improvements, and for the elimination of the loss of migratory birds from alkali poisoning, oil pollution of waters, or other causes, for cooperation with local authorities in wild-life conservation, for investigations and publications relating to North American birds, for personal services, printing, engraving, and issuance of licenses, circulars, posters, and other necessary matter, for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and for the repayment of the $50,000 as provided for in this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General, respectively, are authorized and directed to make such expenditures and to employ such means, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing objects: Provided, That no part of such appropriation shall be used for payment of the salary, compensation, or expenses of any United States game warden, except reservation wardens, for the administration, maintenance, and protection of such reservations and the birds thereon: And provided further, That reservation wardens appointed under the provisions of this act shall be selected, when practicable, from qualified citizens of the State in which they are to be employed.

SEC. 15. That no person shall alter, change, loan, or transfer to another any license issued to him pursuant to this act, nor shall any person other than the one to whom it is issued use such license.

SEC. 16. That no person shall imitate or counterfeit any license authorized by this act, or any die, plate, or engraving therefor, or make, print, knowingly use, sell, or have in his possession any such counterfeit license, die, plate, or engraving.

SEC. 17. That for the efficient execution of this act, the judges of the several courts established under the laws of the United States, United States commissioners, and persons appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce this act, shall have, with respect thereto, like powers and duties as are conferred by section 5 of the migratory bird treaty act upon said judges, commissioners, and employees of the Department of Agriculture appointed to enforce the act last aforesaid. Any bird, or part, nest or egg thereof, taken or possessed contrary to this act, when seized shall be disposed of as provided by section 5 of said migratory bird treaty act.

SEC. 18. That in order to pay initial expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, supplies, printing and distributing of licenses, circulars, posters, and other necessary matter, and all other expenses that may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and when so appropriated shall be available until expended, which sum shall be covered into the Treasury by the Secretary of the Treasury in five equal annual payments from the migratory-bird conservation fund.

SEC. 19. That any person, association, partnership, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of sections 10, 15, or 16 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both; and any person who shall violate or fail to comply with any other provision of this act shall be liable to the United States in the sum of $10 for the first violation, $25 for the second violation, and $50 for each subsequent violation, to be collected in a civil action in the name of the United States: Provided, however, That any person desiring to relieve himself from such action may pay such sum to the Secretary of Agriculture, and said Secretary is authorized for good cause to mitigate or remit the liability hereby created; and the gun or other firearm carried or used by such person shall be liable for the payment of the aforesaid sum and may be seized by any United States game warden or deputy game warden, to be held until said liability is discharged, whereupon it shall be forthwith returned to such person. All sums so received by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Any person brought before a United States commissioner of competent jurisdiction for a hearing on a complaint charging a violation of sections 10, 15, or 16 of this act, or of the migratory bird treaty act, or of title 18, sections 145, 391, 392, 393, or 394 of the United States Code, or any amendment thereof, and who at such hearing admits the violation, may within such time as the commissioner may allow, not exceeding 10 days, pay to said commissioner such sum, not exceeding the maximum fines prescribed by said acts and sections, respectively, as may be fixed by said commissioners, and upon payment thereof and of the legal costs such person shall be relieved from prosecution for said violation. Unless the amount so fixed by the commissioner, and the costs, be paid at the hearing, the commissioner shall require the usual bond for the appearance of the accused before the district court. Upon payment of said amount and costs within the time allowed by the commissioner such bond shall become null and void, otherwise to remain in full force, and at the expiration of said time shall be transmitted by the commissioner to the district court in the usual course. Said appropriation shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman of said commission, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon the General Accounting Office as to the correctness of the accounts of said commission.

SEC. 25. That this act shall take effect upon its passage and approval, except the provisions requiring the use of licenses, which shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1929.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question. I was not in the Chamber for a while, and I want to be clear about the matter. I have not had time to study the bill.

My understanding is that the new bill limits the authority of the Federal game wardens to the migratory-bird reservations.

Mr. NORBECK. Exactly so.

Mr. DILL. They have no authority outside of the reservations?

Mr. NORBECK. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? That may be in the bill, but that obviously can not be so, for this reason: Already numbers of regulations governing migratory birds have been adopted. Already there are appointed Federal game wardens; and, naturally, if a new Federal game warden is sworn in, the very fact that in this bill his jurisdiction is confined to the reservations created for game does not stop him from going ahead and enforcing the other Federal regulations, because he is a Federal game warden; and, even though that is put in the bill, it is just hocus pocus. It does not mean anything.

Mr. DILL. Why not? Does not language mean anything?

Mr. TYDINGS. Do I understand that it is the contention of the Senator from South Dakota that we have one set of Federal game wardens who can enforce all the game laws, and we have another set of Federal game wardens who are only to enforce those laws applying to the reservations?

Mr. DILL. I do not know. I am trying to get clear just what this new measure provides.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Maryland suggested that there were how many Federal game wardens—20?

Mr. TYDINGS. I say that we have already appointed and have in existence now numerous Federal game wardens.

Mr. BLAINE. Let me give the Senator the exact information on that point.

Mr. TYDINGS. It does not make any difference. The principle of the thing is what I am contending for, not the number.

Mr. BLAINE. I think it is very important.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; because they could be increased tomorrow morning 500 per cent if it was desired to do so.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit me to give the number, I know he will be interested.

Mr. TYDINGS. All right; I will.

Mr. BLAINE. This information comes to me from the Civil Service Commission. This is the language they use:

> Referring to the allusion to the activity of Federal game wardens in politics, attention is called to the fact that there are only 23 United States game wardens serving full time in classified positions. There are 630 deputy United States game wardens serving part time in the unclassified service.

Mr. TYDINGS. That seems to be even better than I thought it was——

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the Senator would be interested.

Mr. TYDINGS. Because here you admit that you have not only the privilege of appointing permanent game wardens but any amount of deputy game wardens that you care to appoint. Of course, game wardens can not arrest anybody when the game has gone out of the State.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly not.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are no ducks in Maryland, for instance, in July and August. The fact that there are no game wardens there then does not amount to anything. The point I make is that you can put on 50,000 game wardens if you want to. You can take the entire jurisdiction of this question out of the hands of the State, and lodge it all in the Federal Government. I really do not understand the philosophy of government anyhow, it seems.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Hawes	McMaster
Bayard	Curtis	Hayden	McNary
Black	Cutting	Heflin	Moses
Blaine	Dill	Johnson	Neely
Blease	Edge	Jones	Norbeck
Borah	Fess	Kendrick	Norris
Bratton	Fletcher	Keyes	Nye
Brookhart	Frazier	King	Oddie
Bruce	Gerry	La Follette	Overman
Capper	Glass	Locher	Phipps
Caraway	Greene	McKellar	Pittman
Copeland	Harris	McLean	Reed, Pa.

Sackett	Simmons	Swanson	Walsh, Mass.
Schall	Smith	Tydings	Walsh, Mont.
Sheppard	Smoot	Tyson	Warren
Shipstead	Steiwer	Vandenberg	Waterman
Shortridge	Stephens	Wagner	Wheeler

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] are detained on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the main objection that many of us have to this bill is due to the Federal license feature. We do not want to defeat the main purpose of the bill, which is, of course, to protect wild life, and in order that our good faith may be a matter of record, I am going to yield to the Senator from Washington, who has an amendment which will eliminate any objection that we may have to that phase of the bill.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to say, in the first place, that I have been a consistent opponent of this bill because of certain provisions that have been in it. The Senator from South Dakota has eliminated the public shooting ground feature, and I think the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] will remedy certain other objections.

My objection to the bill as it still stands is that it requires everybody who wants to hunt anywhere in the United States to buy a Federal license. I have prepared an amendment which I think will bring the matter to issue, and I want to offer it to the bill as now before the Senate.

On page 6, line 23, after the word "abode" in the provision that designates who is not required to buy licenses, I would add the words "nor shall any license be required of any person not hunting upon or within the boundaries of a Federal migratory-bird sanctuary or reserve."

That amendment, if adopted, would make it unnecessary for anyone to buy a Federal game license unless he were permitted to shoot on some Federal reserve or sanctuary. I should like to have the amendment taken up for immediate consideration, if the Senator from South Dakota will permit this amendment to be taken up first.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. I merely wanted to ask the Senator to repeat the language.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Washington proposes to insert after the word "abode," in line 23, page 6, the following words:

> Nor shall any license be required of any person not hunting upon or within the boundaries of a Federal migratory-bird sanctuary or reserve.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the reserves created under this bill are inviolate; there can be no hunting on them. Therefore whatever reference there is to hunting on reserves in the amendment relates to one or two reserves created otherwise than under this bill.

This amendment would take out the only provision there is in the bill for getting money, and I do not think that the sportsmen of the United States should ask the taxpayers to pay for bird refuges for the breeding of game for them to hunt. I think hunters are willing to pay a license for the privilege. I have no doubt on that point.

The Senator from Maryland protested violently in the name of the State of Maryland, and I have no doubt that he speaks the sentiments of a good many people in that State, but the conservation department, the game department, in his State has a different view in the matter from that of the Senator, and highly recommends this legislation. That is how Maryland speaks officially to this body.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator that that was true until the merits and demerits of the bill were explained, whereupon the State game department of my State took a different viewpoint from the one expressed to the Senator earlier.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I do not know how the State game department of Maryland got a thorough explanation of the bill, because it was not before the Senate until about five minutes ago. But I am not going to worry about that.

I am free to confess that there is a natural hesitancy upon the part of the Senate to intrude the Federal Government into the regulation of affairs within a State. The amendment before the Senate now, however, does not touch that point at all. Of course, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington should prevail we would have a bill authorizing the purchasing of breeding grounds for game without provision for the raising of one penny to carry out the law. Then either we would have a wholly useless piece of legislation or we would have to go to the Federal Treasury and ask it to put up money to provide sanctuaries to breed game for people to hunt. In other words, we would be putting the burden, not upon the people who enjoyed the sport, but we would be laying it upon everybody in the United States.

I would be very loath, if I wanted to hunt, to ask somebody who was a cripple and could not hunt to pay a fee for me to hunt. Hunting and fishing have always been in the nature of a privilege, and therefore the States have never hesitated to lay the cost of the conservation of game upon the people who enjoyed the sport, and I have never known a sportsman to object to that. It would be a rather small man who wanted to hunt but wanted to lay the burden of the payment of a dollar upon some widow in his State while he went out and enjoyed the privilege of doing the shooting.

That is all there is in this proposition. It undertakes to say that the Federal Government will aid in trying to establish breeding places and conservation places so that game and wild life may be restored to the States. It is no longer an experiment; it is now a demonstrated fact that that can be done.

On the other hand, it is equally well demonstrated that, unless there be some kind of protection, when wild life goes below a certain percentage it will go on to extinction. If our children who are to come after us are to have any of the joys of hunting, we must now have some kind of wise legislation which will protect and preserve wild life so we may transmit it to them. If there is some one who is willing, if the game shall last out his lifetime, that he does not care if it perishes with him, I would say he is like Louis XVI of France, who said, "After us the deluge," and of course such a man would naturally oppose this legislation.

There is no provision in the bill, however, that the State itself may not take over and regulate and run the matter, under an amendment to which I presume there will be no opposition, because the Senator in charge of the bill has no opposition to it, which will provide that whenever a State prefers to administer the provisions of the bill it may make provision for doing so, and take it over, and it will put on its pay roll every person who is on the Federal pay roll in that State for the enforcement of the bill, and the price will be paid by the fees which are collected under the bill.

Mr. DILL. Does it provide that the Federal license will no longer apply in that State?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; that is the source of revenue.

Mr. DILL. And they get their share of the revenue?

Mr. CARAWAY. They get every dollar of revenue that is necessary to enforce the law.

Mr. DILL. And the State draws money from the Federal Treasury for that purpose?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator made reference a moment ago to Louis XVI of France. If he does not regard my interruption as an impertinence, I would like to say that if Louis XVI was a Member of the Senate he would most assuredly vote for the bill, because it is recorded of him that he was so fond of hunting that when for some reason he could not go out and shoot he would simply enter in his diary for that day, "Nothing." When he went out shooting he would say he had been to Fontainebleau, or some other shooting resort, and when for some reason or other he could not go to Fontainebleau or Champigny, or some other resort of that description he would simply enter in his diary, "Nothing." I think the Senator is not exactly fair to Louis XVI when he speaks of him in a slighting, depreciatory manner.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, Louis does not need any defense. He lost his head more than a hundred years ago and, therefore, all I say about him will not very much concern him now. He would have been saved the necessity of writing "Nothing" in his diary if there had been some provision for the protection of wild life. If there had been none, he could have written on the first page of his diary "Nothing" and there would have been "nothing" from the beginning to the end of it. I rather suspect that Louis was not entirely devoid of some intelligence, although he does not need any defense at my hands.

Mr. President, this bill, like the one which preceded it, known as the McNary-Haugen bill, proceeds at least in one respect along the same line, that those who are to have the benefit of the bill are to pay for it. Everybody who was against the McNary-Haugen bill, in other words, against the farmer having the right to protect his own products, voted to strike out the equalization fee. Everybody who wants this bill defeated will vote to strike out the license fee.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. The Senator understands, of course, that there is an appropriation or an authorization for appropriation which would be made——

Mr. CARAWAY. Would the Senator be willing to put upon the backs of the general taxpayers this burden? Governments do not create wealth. Government never created a dollar since governments have been created. We merely take dollars out of the people's pockets in the way of taxes and apply them to certain useful or nonuseful purposes.

Mr. DILL. The Senator asked me a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I do not think so.

Mr. DILL. The Senator said, "Would the Senator from Washington be willing?"

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well; I yield.

Mr. DILL. I can not find anything in this particular game refuge bill that makes it any different from any other game refuge bill we have passed. We authorized an appropriation of $1,500,000 to buy migratory-bird refuges in northern Mississippi Valley. We passed a bill here the other day authorizing the appropriation of money out of the Treasury to buy a migratory-bird reserve in Utah. I do not find anything in this bill that differentiates it and makes it necessary to go out and charge everybody for a Federal license in addition to the State license, when in the other case we would be taking money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. The difference is this: The other bills were to protect wild life in its movement from one section of the country to the other. The provisions of this bill are to establish breeding places, sanctuaries where wild life may replenish itself. There will be no hunting in these sanctuaries. It is the belief of those who have advocated it that wild life will multiply and replenish itself and that it will scatter out over the States and be available to people who want to hunt.

Now a dollar is a dollar, and I do not deprecate its 100 cents' value. I have a good deal of respect for the Scotchman that the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] told about who went to a bank and asked to borrow $10 and wanted to put up $10,000 in Government bonds as security. The bank at first hesitated, and he said, "If you will not accommodate me, somebody else will," so he finally got them to take his note and borrowed the $10 and paid 80 cents interest. The bank asked him why he did it, and he said, "If I had put these bonds in a safety deposit box you would have charged me $1 a month. Now, you care for them for 80 cents for a year and I get the use of the $10." I have some respect for that Scotchman.

I do not know a man who hunts, who enjoys sport, who is not willing to put up the money that will bring something worth hunting for into the territory where he hunts. There are two things about a sportsman. He usually has a very great deal of respect for the game he hunts; he does not want to destroy it. He is always willing to pay the price of his own sport. It does not run in the tribe of sportsmen to want to make somebody else pay the price of seeking game so he can hunt it. I never knew one that did it. He is willing to pay. Somebody has to pay if wild life is to be replenished and preserved in America. Which is the more generous thing to do, to let the man who does the hunting and gets the sport and the game pay for it or make the men and women who are not privileged to hunt and do not get the game, pay and let the hunter have it? That is all there is to it. We can vote it up or down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. DILL and Mr. NORBECK asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to explain that those voting "yea" will be voting to leave us without funds; that is, they are voting against the license feature.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the roll call was ordered, but if we are going to debate the question further I would like to say something.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. MOSES. I have a pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SACKETT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer the pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DENEEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this matter I am paired with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRATTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMITH (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. STECK] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD].

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is necessarily detained on official business. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MAYFIELD] is detained from the Senate by illness. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is recorded as having voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have a pair with that Senator, but I am advised that, if present, he would vote as I have voted, and, therefore, I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the junior Senator from Virginia has not voted.

Mr. McLEAN. Then I shall have to withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 25, as follows:

So Mr. DILL's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the Senate has now acted on the migratory bird bill for the preservation of birds for the purpose of buying large areas in each State and making them inviolate to hunting, and has provided further that not one dollar shall be raised for the purpose. If the amendment had failed, there would have been under the bill as drafted approximately $1,000,000 with which to buy land in the different States. There has been such a claim here that we ought to vote money out of the Treasury that I have an amendment prepared—in fact, I have had it prepared for some time—so as to test the question, in case the vote should turn as it has turned. The amendment provides that the money shall be appropriated out of the Treasury that we would otherwise have gotten under the bill as originally drawn from license fees. The amendment has, at my request, been prepared by the Bureau of Biological Survey, which is thoroughly familiar with this matter. The amendment is rather long, because it involves several changes in the bill, but I desire to offer it at this time in the form in which it is prepared. I first ask, however, for reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment which has just been adopted and which was offered by the Senator from Washington was agreed to. I do not think he will object to that. I make the request in order that I may offer the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. DILL. I understand the Senator is desirous of reconsideration for the purpose of perfecting the amendment and not for the purpose of changing it.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; the amendment I propose to offer provides no license fee. The Senator's idea will prevail even though his amendment shall be withdrawn.

Mr. DILL. I do not want to withdraw the amendment, but if the Senator will perfect his new form of amendment, I will be very willing to accept that, if it strikes out the license-fee provision.

Mr. NORBECK. Of course, it is difficult to rewrite the amendment in a hurry, but I shall do just as the Senator suggests. I offer the amendment. I do not think it will create any real conflict with the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there is no necessity for reconsidering the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. The amendment provides that the money shall come out of the Federal Treasury to the amount of $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as I understand, the license provision contained in the measure has been eliminated by the vote just taken. Consequently that provision disappears from the bill, and the bill itself is still open to any amendment any Senator may wish to offer. So there is no necessity for reconsidering the vote by which the amendment just adopted was agreed to in order to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. NORBECK. Was there objection, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The statement of the Senator from Virginia was to the effect that in order to vote upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota it is not necessary to reconsider the vote by which the other amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. I shall be satisfied with leaving the other amendment in; I do not think they will conflict; but the other amendment makes no provision for anything, while the amendment I have offered does.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator withdraws his motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment just adopted was agreed to?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; I withdraw that.

Mr. DILL. Let us have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 5, on page 3 of the amendment, in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota by striking out in lines 15 and 16 the words "by Congress from the migratory-bird conservation fund" and inserting in lieu thereof "hereunder by Congress from time to time," so that the clause beginning in line 15 will read:

from moneys to be appropriated hereunder by Congress from time to time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is also proposed to strike out section 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 11. That for the purposes of this act migratory birds are those defined as such by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded August 16, 1916.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORBECK. I wish to ask for one change in that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I desire to have inserted the words "(except woodcocks, doves, wild pigeons, or greater or lesser yellowlegs)."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, if agreed to the Senator's amendment would strike out section 11, which is the section that was just amended on my motion. If the Senator intends to strike out all relation to the license feature——

Mr. NORBECK. I propose to strike that out all the way through.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, my attention was diverted from the amendment when the Chair put the question on it. I am not sure whether we have voted a direct appropriation out of the Treasury or not.

Mr. NORBECK. We have not voted for a direct appropriation but for an authorization.

Mr. FESS. We have not voted for a direct appropriation?

Mr. NORBECK. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 11, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 11. That for the purposes of this act, migratory birds are those defined as such by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds (except woodcocks, doves, wild pigeons, or greater or lesser yellowlegs), concluded August 16, 1916.

Mr. FESS. That has nothing to do with the appropriation. The question I had in mind was as to the first amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the substitute of the Senator from South Dakota, on page 3, it is proposed to strike out, in lines 15 and 16, the words "by Congress from the migratory-bird conservation fund" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "hereunder by Congress from time to time," so that the clause, beginning in line 15, will read:

from moneys to be appropriated hereunder by Congress from time to time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I take that to mean an authorization for an appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. NORBECK. That is what it means, to the amount of a million dollars a year.

Mr. FESS. We are not ready to vote on that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota speaks of a million dollars a year.

Mr. FESS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. It is stated about me here that we have already adopted that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. FESS. Then, I shall call for a separate vote on the amendment when the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

Mr. NORBECK. Certainly.

Mr. BRATTON. In connection with the amendment, which is proposed by the Senator from South Dakota, is it his intention after we have voted on that to strike out the first and second lines of section 12, which provide for a license fee of $1?

Mr. FESS. Yes; all that will be stricken out.

Mr. BRATTON. As I understood the amendment proposed by the Senator, it strikes out all of section 11. Section 12 begins with this language:

That each applicant for a license shall pay $1 therefor——

Mr. NORBECK. The Senator will find that a later amendment wipes that all out. The amendment has been prepared so as to harmonize the provisions of the bill with the policy of an appropriation without a license fee.

Mr. BRATTON. I ask that the clerk restate the amendment. As I understand, it strikes out section 11.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is another amendment to follow that.

Mr. BRATTON. That is what I am intending to ask the Senator from South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 11, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 11. That for the purposes of this act, migratory birds are those defined as such by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds (except woodcock, doves, wild pigeons, or greater or lesser yellowlegs), concluded August 16, 1916.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, that strikes out section 11 and substitutes new language. Section 12 expressly provides for a license fee of $1.

Mr. NORBECK. There is an amendment to section 12.

Mr. DILL. That is what I have been endeavoring to ascertain—if there is another amendment dealing with that.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota, in charge of the bill, if any of this $1,000,000 to be appropriated is to be devoted to the enforcement of the act or whether it all goes for the purchase of refuges?

Mr. NORBECK. It all goes to bird refuges and the enforcement of the law on the refuges.

Mr. McLEAN. I desire also to ask the Senator how much the annual appropriation is for the enforcement of the law at this time.

Mr. NORBECK. I can not tell the Senator that. There are 23 regular game wardens and there are quite a number of part-time game wardens in the whole United States.

Mr. McLEAN. Is not more money needed for the enforcement of the migratory bird law?

Mr. NORBECK. Decidedly; but the Senate objects to it, so I had to withdraw it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to make a unanimous-consent request. I know the Senator is actuated by the best of motives, but it is very hard in amending the whole bill for many of us to follow the sequence of the different sections and to see whether they are all in proper order.

I should like to ask that the whole bill be referred back to the committee, with instructions to eliminate the license fee, put in the amendment the Senator now has in his hand, and report the bill to the Senate as soon as possible, and not have it lose its place on the calendar.

Mr. NORBECK. Oh, Mr. President, we have had motions of that kind for seven years. This amendment has been prepared by the bureau at my request to leave out the license and substitute the appropriation, and I think we had better take a vote on it.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator will realize that this is a bill of some 15 pages.

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; but the clerk will read it section by section and the Senator will note the amendments. It will take only a few minutes to go through the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can not read a bill in half a minute and tell what it means, as the Senator can. I really should like to look it over a little bit; and I hope the Senator will let the bill go back to the committee. Of course, if he objects to it, I will withdraw my request. My motive is the best, I will say to the Senator. I do not want to delay the measure, but I should like, at least, to read it in its complete state.

Mr. NORBECK. I have been assured here for years and years of good motives, and all that; and when I get a vote I get just the kind of a vote that I got now. I have been assured that Senators were all anxious to take the money out of the Treasury. Now I propose to act.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will vote for the Senator's amendment to appropriate money for this purpose, but I certainly should like a little time to read the bill. I hate to have it done in sections in this way.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question for information. A great deal has been said about a million dollars a year. We have not come to that amendment yet, have we?

Mr. JOHNSON. That was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. That did not fix any amount.

Mr. NORBECK. It authorizes that as a maximum.

Mr. BLAINE. As a maximum?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator has used words in the amendment that are not generally used in any kind of an authorization for the appropriation of money. That is, he makes it available until expended. Therefore, if it is not expended in one year, it will go over into the next year, and there will be added to the million dollars that much more.

Mr. NORBECK. I think the Senator will agree with me that the experience on bird refuges was that the money could not be spent in any one year or two years or, on the upper Mississippi, even at the end of four years. It seems to me necessary, in order to administer the matter, to have the money remain available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that only happens in cases where there is a deficiency, and another appropriation is made. Then we provide that it shall be made available until expended. This, however, is not for one year. This will be for year after year, as long as the act is in operation; and it is the first time I have ever seen an authorization for an appropriation made in that way. I was wondering if the Senator had not better make it just a straight million dollars a year.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. The trouble is, the first of the year arrives before the abstract comes in, and the money can not be used, and it is necessary to wait for another appropriation. That is one reason why I tried to get the license fund. Otherwise, we will be in the same fix as certain other activities of the Government that have attempted that, and have fallen down utterly for that very reason.

Mr. SMOOT. It could not affect any other than the first year. That would be the only year that would be affected by the wording of the appropriation.

Mr. NORBECK. I am told that there have been abstracts up here in the Attorney General's office for two years. That is, they have not yet been able to finish the title and get it fixed, and so the money reverts to the Treasury. Then another appropriation is asked for, and it reverts to the Treasury again, before it can be expended.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, as I understand, when an appropriation is made it can provide that the money shall be available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. This simply authorizes that.

Mr. SWANSON. But such a provision is not usual in an authorization.

Mr. SMOOT. Never. This is the first time I have ever seen it.

Mr. SWANSON. In bills in which I have been interested, for matters that take some time, when the appropriation is made it is very frequently provided that we shall appropriate so much money, to be available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator feels that the matter can be taken care of in the appropriation bill, I am willing to have the change made.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure it can be.

Mr. NORBECK. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be authorized to perfect that amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield for a moment? I will say to the Senator in all good faith that there are some Members on this side of the Chamber who would like to vote for his amended bill, but who probably will not vote for it because they had not had an opportunity to read it. I am sure, if he would let my unanimous-consent request go through, that the bill could be brought back in two days, and could be disposed of in five minutes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is not necessary to send it back to the committee, even if we wish to do that. The bill can be reprinted with the amendments incorporated in it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be reprinted in line with the amendments that the Senator from South Dakota has offered and be restored to the calendar in its proper number and not lose its place.

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator will add to that a unanimous-consent agreement that we vote at 3 o'clock to-morrow, I will accept it.

Mr. TYDINGS. As far as I am concerned, I will agree to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAINE. I should object to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the bill be reprinted in line with the amendments offered by the Senator from South Dakota and be restored to its regular place on the calendar.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not see why there need be any restoration to a place on the calendar. The reprinting of a bill by the Government Printing Office does not deprive it of its position on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Not in the least.

Mr. SWANSON. I presume the amendments will be printed under the general rules of the Senate. We can have a reprint of the bill, with the amendments adopted, if it goes over until to-morrow, in the regular order; but the reprinting of the bill does not interfere with its position on the calendar. It seems to me that if we discuss it to-day, and make all the amendments we desire, and do not complete it, we can have a print of everything to-morrow and then dispose of it.

I think the Senator who has charge of this bill has shown a great deal of patience and forbearance in dealing with the opposition of Senators and is entitled to have this matter disposed of; and I am disposed to help him, with the fee eliminated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland that the bill be reprinted with the amendments that have been adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Does that fix the hour for a vote at 3 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I did not include that in the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. You have heard the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be reprinted with the amendments that have been adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will this bill retain its status?

Mr. DILL. Let us have the amendments stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. DILL. The amendments of the Senator from South Dakota have not been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to section 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the remaining amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is to strike out sections 12 and 13, on page 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend section 14 by striking out, in lines 7 to 12, page 8, the following words:

That all moneys received for such licenses shall be reserved and set aside as a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the migratory-bird conservation fund, of which not to exceed $1,000,000 annually is hereby authorized to be appropriated by Congress, and when so appropriated shall be available until expended.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

SEC. 12. That in order to effectuate the provisions of this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000.

The Senator from South Dakota has already stricken out the words "and when so appropriated shall be available until expended."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend section 14 by striking out, in line 1, page 9, the word "licenses," and in lines 3 and 4, page 9, the words "and for the repayment of the $50,000 as provided for in this act"; also by striking out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "and the Postmaster General, respectively, are" and inserting the word "is," so as to read "and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed"; and by inserting in line 2, page 9, after the word "matter," the word "and."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out sections 15 and 16 of the substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Renumber section 17, page 10, as section 13; and insert after the word "act," in line 9, page 10, the following:

(Title 16, sec. 706, of the U. S. C.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out section 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Renumber section 19, page 11, as section 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend section 19, page 11, in line 2, by inserting after the word "violate" the words "or fail to comply with."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend in lines 2 and 3 by striking out the words "of sections 10, 15, or 16."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend by inserting a period after the word "both," in line 6, and striking out the balance of the paragraph down to and including line 22, so that the first paragraph shall read:

SEC. 14. That any person, association, partnership, or corporation who shall violate or fail to comply with any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $10 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out in section 19, line 25, the words "of sections 10, 15, or 16," so that the clause shall read:

Any person brought before a United States commissioner of competent jurisdiction for a hearing on a complaint charging a violation of this act—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. And amend section 19, page 12, by inserting in line 1, after the word "act," the following:

(Title 16, secs. 703 to 711, inclusive, of the U. S. C.)

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what the reason for that insertion is, and what it means?

Mr. NORBECK. I was not following it.

Mr. DILL. It is inserted twice in the bill, a certain reference to title 16.

Mr. NORBECK. I am unable to answer that question, except that the whole purpose is to harmonize it with the thought that it would provide for the same enforcement.

Mr. DILL. I wanted to know whether that was another designation of the same provision.

Mr. BLEASE. I would like to know if that amendment means that a United States commissioner is to try a man.

Mr. NORBECK. The original bill, which was pending here for years, provided a method by which offenders could go before a commissioner instead of a judge, and accept a nominal fine in settlement. It is to ease off that disagreeable feature of dragging a man before the nearest Federal judge, perhaps a hundred miles away.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota has admitted that he does not know what those sections which have been inserted in the bill mean, and therefore I do not feel that we can take his explanation in regard to them. I think we ought to have time to see what those sections do mean.

Mr. NORBECK. If the Senator will read the part of the section——

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean these parts of the Federal Code which are now being inserted in the bill. What do those sections provide. If anyone here knows what they provide, I would like to know it. I can not believe the Senate is going to pass a bill when not a Senator on either side knows what it means.

Mr. NORBECK. They can vote it down if they do not want to vote for it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that there is going to be a reprint, as required by the action of the Senate of a few moments ago.

Mr. TYDINGS. All the amendments are being adopted, and the bill may come up and be passed.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not going to insist on the bill passing to-day. The Senator from Maryland has protested against that. For the ninth time I am doing it the way he wants it.

Mr. TYDINGS. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is to renumber the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 18, to amend the section in line 23, page 13, by striking out the words "the migratory bird conservation fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is to insert in lieu thereof the words "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Renumber section 25, page 14, as section 20, insert a period after the word "approval," in line 9, and strike out the balance of lines 9 and 10, so that the section shall read:

SEC. 20. This act shall take effect upon its passage and approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I rather assume will be accepted by the Senator from South Dakota, at the end of line 14, on page 4, to insert the words:

Provided, That no person shall take, hunt, or kill any game birds described in section 11 within the area between the boundary line of any sanctuary herein provided for and a line 10 miles distant from the boundary line of said sanctuary and which are not in the permanent abode of the person taking, hunting, or killing said migratory bird.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the effect of that amendment, of course, will be to make private lands bird sanctuaries, and I do not have any objection to it, except that I do not think that we can get anywhere with it. I do not want to accept the amendment. I suggest that it be printed and lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest that this proposed amendment is not intended to make private property bird sanctuaries, but is intended to prevent private hunting clubs from establishing their clubs next to and adjoining a bird sanctuary which will be paid for by the people of the United States. I discussed this very feature when I was engaged in the debate upon this bill a few days ago. The purpose of this is to exclude private hunting grounds immediately adjoining these sanctuaries.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I can understand the motive that prompts the Senator, and I think it is worthy. But there are a good many objections to it. One objection is to going into a State and passing game laws for the State. It is hardly a Federal matter, for one thing. I believe enough in State rights to think that we should reserve such a power to the States. I wish it could be worked out in some way, but I think there is too much objection to it. Furthermore, it will prevent the boy in a county who buys a dollar license from hunting anywhere within 10 miles of where a bird refuge is. I think it is too broad entirely, for one thing.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the distance may be greater than necessary, but it has been suggested by conservation organizations that the distance be fixed all the way from 5 to 10 miles. I thought 10 miles would be the proper distance from the sanctuary.

I have another amendment I want to suggest, on page 2, in line 8, after the word "prices," to insert the words "at an average cost per acre not exceeding $5." That has reference to the maximum amount that may be paid for the acreage that is to go into the sanctuary.

Mr. NORBECK. I certainly will not favor that, because the experience in the State of Wisconsin in establishing the upper Mississippi game refuge has shown that the estimate of $5 an acre was wrong, and there has been offered or has passed here a bill to increase that maximum. What is the use of tying our hands at the start?

Mr. BLAINE. I think the Senator is unfamiliar with that situation in Wisconsin.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not unfamiliar with the fact that they are here trying to get legislation to raise the maximum to $10.

Mr. BLAINE. The land which the Federal Government is buying in that region is not worth more than $5 an acre, on the whole, and when the department pays more than that they are paying an excessive price. I feel that $5 an acre is the limit that should be offered for the type of land that is going to be embraced within these refuges. It is not prairie land that we would buy, it is not irrigated land. It is, to a large extent, waste land, and I do not want to make this bill or any other legislation an instrument for somebody to profit unreasonably out of the pocketbook of the people of the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. If a man would not take $5 an acre for the land, how would you get it away from him?

Mr. BLAINE. The Government has recourse to condemnation proceedings.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then the Senator would have us go to court, and what if the jury should return a verdict for a greater amount from that? How would we get it?

Mr. BLAINE. The same question might be asked with reference to the purchase of any property the Federal Government gets.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would be amazed to find anybody arguing that if we provide that no man shall receive in excess of a certain amount for his property, we will get it for less than that price. That would be introducing something entirely new.

Mr. BLAINE. I think under the circumstances $5 an acre is the amount that has usually been fixed in legislation of this type, at least with respect to the upper Mississippi Valley wildlife refuge; that is the average maximum. I shall offer the amendment at the proper time.

Mr. CARAWAY. If there is no amendment pending I wish to offer one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will not the Senator from Wisconsin send up the amendments so that they can be printed? Without objection, the amendments will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to offer one amendment, and then a second one to perfect the first.

Mr. NORBECK. They are simply offered to be printed?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will ask the Senator to wait until he hears the amendments. I think the Senator will have no objection.

Mr. NORBECK. Not if they fit in with all the other amendments that have been adopted, so that we will not have a conflict. I suggest that the Senator offer them and have them printed.

Mr. CARAWAY. I offer an amendment on page 9, line 17. It will really be a new section, because of the change in the language. I want the Senator to hear the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, after line 17, insert the following:

That when any State shall, by suitable legislation, make provision adequately to enforce the provisions of this act and all regulations promulgated thereunder, the Secretary of Agriculture may so certify, and then and thereafter said State may take over the enforcement of said act and the regulations made in aid of said act.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before the Senator passes upon that, I offer another amendment to perfect it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. To add the following:

The said State may and shall, so long as it shall enforce the said act and regulations made in pursuance thereof, be reimbursed from said funds for the costs of said enforcement to the extent such services shall have cost had the service been performed by the Federal Government.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I have the attention of the Senator from South Dakota? Those are the two amendments that were agreed upon with reference to the bill when it was before the Senate before, and which we discussed recently. If there is any objection to that, I am perfectly willing for it to go over.

Mr. NORBECK. If I am assured that this does not amend the migratory bird act——

Mr. CARAWAY. It does not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator has been kind enough to present his amendment in a very fair way and I hesitate to object to it, but as a matter of principle I would like to see the amendments go over, because, in my judgment, under them there would be a national law with States in some cases enforcing it exclusively, and the National Government, in other cases, enforcing it. In other words, Maryland would be the National Government for this law, if it complied, but California would not have the right of enforcing the same law, and the Federal Government would enforce it in that State. I think that is a pretty bad practice to have half a Federal law enforced by some States and the other half by the Federal Government.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, if the Senator would be willing to let the State do it when it wanted to, that would be a valid objection. It only provides that when the State has a game department and wants to enforce the law there will be no duplication of service, that the State will be permitted to take over the enforcement of it all, and every employee enforcing the law would be an employee of the State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator objects, and I am willing that it go over.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am willing to withdraw the objection. I do not want to delay action on the amendment.

Mr. NORBECK. I thought it was agreed that the amendments offered by the Senator from Arkansas should lie over until to-morrow, the same as the amendments offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator from Maryland feels that he would like to read the amendments, I will just let them go over with the others until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will go over.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I would like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that, in my opinion, he had better consult some lawyer in regard to the question of United States commissioners. A United States commissioner has no power to try anybody. He has no power to impose a fine on anyone. He is quite a different person from a magistrate in a State court. The only jurisdiction conferred by law on a commissioner of the United States is that when certain information is brought before him he can issue a warrant, and under that warrant he can have a party arrested. The only power he has is either to have a hearing and bind the defendant over to court or dismiss him for want of proper evidence. This bill attempts to make a trial court out of a United States commissioner, and if such a provision should be adopted, it would be in direct conflict with the duties now prescribed for United States commissioners.

Who is going to pass on the question of the amount? The bill says the amount shall be from $25 to $500 and that the money shall be paid to the commissioner. Who is to decide what amount it is to be, whether it is to be $25 or more? A commissioner has no such authority. I call the Senator's attention to this fact in order that he may himself look into it, or have it looked into, before he incorporates such a provision in the bill.

There is another question in connection with the matter to which I desire to call the Senator's attention. Commissioners all over the country are complaining that they are not receiving enough pay. They are now making an effort to have the fees and commissions paid to the United States commissioners increased. I have very frankly written to the commissioners in my State that I think they already get too much for what they do and that I would not vote for any increase in their pay. But if we are going to put this additional duty on the United States commissioners they certainly should be allowed more pay than they are getting to-day. This, I believe, is another matter to which the Senator should give consideration. Unless he wants to increase the salaries and fees in every State in the Union, then there is no use to put such a provision in the bill. Such a provision can not be incorporated in the bill unless it conflicts with the present law relating to the duties of United States commissioners. I have no special objection to trying a case before a United States commissioner. My experience with most of them is that they are about as easy to handle as anybody else, even a Sinclair jury, but I would like to have it made plain so that we lawyers who have to practice before them may know what we are doing.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a communication from F. W. Murphy, who is chairman of the legislative committee of the Corn Belt Federation. I ask that the letter and the accompanying resolutions may be read at the desk by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read the letter and resolutions, as follows:

AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
HAMILTON HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1928.

Hon. W. H. McMASTER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR McMASTER: For your information I am handing to you herewith a copy of some resolutions adopted on April 3, 1928, at a regular meeting of the Corn Belt Federation of Farm Organizations held at Des Moines, Iowa.

A partial list of the farm organizations included within the Corn Belt Federation is also inclosed.

I am the chairman of the legislative committee of the Corn Belt Federation.

Very truly yours,

F. W. MURPHY.

The Corn Belt Federation of Farm Organizations met in Des Moines, Iowa, April 3, 1928, and passed the following resolutions:

"Speaking for more than a million organized farmers reaching from Indiana to Montana the Corn Belt committee hereby serves notice upon the leaders of the Republican Party that if by any chance Herbert Hoover should be nominated for President at the forthcoming Kansas City convention, that the great Corn Belt States will be found solidly against him. The farm vote easily constitutes a balance of power in such States as Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, Nebraska, and the Northwest, and remembering the perfidy of Hoover to the farmer during the World War, and the sinister and relentless attitude he has maintained toward farm-relief legislation during the Harding and Coolidge administrations, nothing is more certain than that in the event of his nomination the farmers of the above States will utterly ignore party lines in their determination to consign this man to private life for all time to come. Therefore we not only protest against his nomination but we give fair warning to the Republican leaders of what they may expect if such an affront is offered to the farmers of the Nation.

"We have not forgotten the shout that 'Food will win the war,' and the manner in which the farmers of America responded to that appeal will ever stand as an imperishable monument to their patriotism. And yet no sooner did the producers of wheat and livestock and of other farm commodities go to the rescue of their country in its hour of peril, when through the activities of Mr. Hoover as food administrator, prices were controlled or depressed to an extent that defrauded these producers out of hundreds of millions of dollars which justly belonged to them—and this at a time when gunmakers and powder manufacturers and other suppliers of war material were rewarded on the notorious and indefensible plan of 10 per cent plus cost. That under these circumstances intelligent and responsible party leaders should seriously propose Mr. Hoover as a presidential nominee is hardly believable, and can be reconciled only upon the assumption that the farmers of this country possess neither memories nor self-respect."

Following is a partial list of the farm organizations included in the Corn Belt Federation:

American Council of Agriculture, Equity Cooperative Exchange of Minnesota, Kansas Farm Bureau Federation, Kansas Farmers Union, Minnesota Council of Agriculture, Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, North Dakota Wheat Growers Association, South Dakota Wheat Growers Association, Minnesota Wheat Growers Association, Iowa Farm Bureau, Iowa Farmers Union, Nebraska Farm Bureau, Nebraska Farmers Union, Missouri Farmers Association, Indiana Farm Bureau Federation, Montana Farmers Union, North Dakota Farmers Union, Oklahoma Farmers Union, South Dakota Farm Bureau, South Dakota Farmers Union, South Dakota Council of Agriculture, South Dakota Agricultural Equality Commission, Illinois Farmers Union, Farmers Union of Wisconsin, Farmers Union Terminal Association of Minnesota, Farmers Union Shipping Association of Chicago, National Producers Alliance, Iowa State Grange, Iowa Trashermen's Association, Iowa Ottumwa Dairy Marketing Association, Minnesota Farmers Union, South Dakota Producers Alliance, Central States Soft Wheat Growers Association, Chicago Milk Producers Association, Wisconsin Cooperative Creamery Association, Wisconsin Farm Bureau, South St. Paul Farmers Union Live Stock Commission House, Chicago Farmers Union Live Stock Commission House, Sioux City Farmers Union Live Stock Commission House, Kansas City Farmers Union Live Stock Commission House, Omaha Farmers Union Live Stock Commission House, Illinois Agricultural Association, National Corn Growers Association.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 242. An act to amend section 90 of the national defense act, as amended, so as to authorize employment of additional civilian caretakers for National Guard organizations, under certain circumstances, in lieu of enlisted caretakers heretofore authorized;

H. R. 1530. An act for the relief of William F. Wheeler;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their name, a quorum is present. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

The bill (H. R. 11022) to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, under objection.

The bill (S. 742) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, under objection.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

The bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of persons came to see me to-day who are very much interested in this bill. They desire to have an amendment to it offered. I know nothing about the bill at all, but I told them I would speak to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and ask that the bill go over so that the amendment might be offered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, did the persons to whom the Senator from Utah refers indicate the character of amendment they desired?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The bill has been pending for a long time; it was before the committee a long time, but nobody asked the committee to have an amendment made to it.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator from Washington that one of the amendments desired was to provide that the provision of the proposed act should apply to ships engaged in the coastwise and intercoastal trade.

Mr. JONES. The committee considered that matter very carefully a year or two ago. The bill has been reported about three times. There were objections to that, and the committee finally, as a sort of compromise, eliminated that part of the bill and thought that that could be dealt with as a separate proposition.

The main reason why this proposed legislation has been urged so strongly is the situation existing between this country and foreign countries. They have load lines on their vessels, and they are threatening to apply their load lines on our vessels going into their ports. We eliminated vessels in the coastwise trade, as we thought that phase of the question could be dealt with in a separate measure.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill being taken up on the next calendar day, but I promised the gentlemen who came to see me to object to its consideration should it come up to-day.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator from Utah will permit us to get the bill through the next time the calendar is called, because it is important to American shipping that the bill should be passed.

Mr. KING. May I say that the contention of the persons to whom I have referred was that the bill was discriminatory and was in the interest of a number of shippers in the United States?

Mr. JONES. That is not correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SEC. 9. That the commissioner provided for in this act shall be paid an annual salary as appropriated for by Congress, payable quarterly: Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of said Lassen Volcanic National Park at a place to be designated by the court making such appointment: And provided further, That all fees, costs, and expenses collected by the commissioner shall be disposed of as provided in section 11 of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a very important bill, and I should be very glad to have some information regarding it. We made an appropriation a short time ago of $40,000,000 for the acquisition of forest lands. I will be very glad to have the Senator from Oregon explain it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the bill in question, about which the able Senator from Utah inquires, is in nowise related to the bill which was passed by this body some three weeks ago, which authorized an appropriation of $40,000,000 for the acquisition of denuded and cut-over land in the watersheds of navigable streams. The bill now before the Senate has been introduced and its passage is asked for the purpose of coordinating the various activities of the Department of Agriculture in order to enable it to do more effective research in the promotion of reforestation in our country. It has had the support of those interested in forestry throughout the country; it has had the support of the Department of Agriculture, and has been unanimously reported by the committee after study.

Mr. KING. I understand the amount appropriated for the Forest Service is not adequate and this is to supplement the activities of that service?

Mr. McNARY. It proposes to coordinate all such activities under one great head in order to prevent duplication, in order to assist in the promotion of reforestation, and in order also to promote research work which has been neglected at the expense of the extension work of the service.

Mr. KING. If I may ask another question, will the forest lands owned by the Indians be able to get any advantage of this activity?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the able Senator knows that the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture does not extend to Indian lands; they are under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior; but I will say as a proposition general in its nature that the Indian lands would profit through the promotion of forestry and through the success of the efforts in combating diseases and insects affecting forests. To that extent only will it affect Indian lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STEIWER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. GILBERT

The bill (H. R. 2294) for the relief of George H. Gilbert was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, may I explain that bill?

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The pensionable status of the soldier who is the beneficiary of the bill was impaired by the fact that on May 17, 1861, he is reported as having enlisted, and he is recorded as having deserted three days later. The reason for that seems to have been some dispute with his company commander. He enlisted again early in 1862 and served with great credit until June, 1865, when he was honorably discharged as a sergeant. He served through most of the war, as the Senator will see, and it is only those three days in his early service that stand against him.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, George H. Gilbert, who was a member of Company C, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 20th day of May, 1861: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. GENS. HUNTER LIGGETT AND ROBERT L. BULLARD

The bill (S. 3269) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Hunter Liggett, major general, United States Army, retired, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the name "Liggett," to insert "and Robert L. Bullard"; in the same line, after the word "major," to strike out "general" and insert "generals"; and on page 2, after the word "act," to insert "Said Robert L. Bullard shall also be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances and the pay and allowances of a major general, retired, from January 15, 1925, to the date of the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the date of the passage of this act, Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired, shall have the rank of lieutenant general on the retired list of the United States Army, and shall receive pay and allowances determined as provided by law for other officers on the retired list, and based upon the active pay and allowances provided for lieutenant generals during the World War. Said Hunter Liggett shall also be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances and the pay and allowances of a major general, retired, from March 21, 1921, to the date of the passage of this act. Said Robert L. Bullard shall also be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances and the pay and allowances of a major general, retired, from January 15, 1925, to the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the title ought to be changed so as to conform with the amendments to the bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; the committee recognized that an amendment to the title was necessary and so reported the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it very proper that the bill should pass.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does this bill propose to give the retired pay of lieutenant general to the two officers mentioned?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The bill does give the retired pay of lieutenant general to the two officers mentioned.

Mr. CARAWAY. The reason I asked the question is this: When the bill passed the Senate giving the grade of brigadier general to General Nicholson and General Barrette, who were then on the retired list as colonels, it made no provision for increasing their pay.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is so, Mr. President; but these two officers, General Liggett and General Bullard, are the only two who commanded an Army corps in action in the World War as lieutenant generals. It was felt by the committee that we ought not to give any special relief to lieutenant generals other than these two.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not objecting to that. I was just wondering, though, why the same thing should not be done for these other generals, who had also very distinguished records of service. One of them, I think, was about the only general who received a medal for bravery under fire in the last war. I simply felt that they ought to have had the same proportionate increase as these generals.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I sympathize with the Senator's question. The reason why they were not given it was that they themselves did not want to benefit in a money way from the recognition.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the reason was that they realized that they could not get the legislation, and I felt that it was an injustice.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not think that was the reason, Mr. President.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I think it is a decidedly anomalous thing that we should be providing for the advancement on the retired list of these two major generals, and yet, so far as some Members of the Senate at any rate are concerned, be unwilling, apparently, to make proper provision for the situation of Mrs. Leonard Wood, notwithstanding the fact that a most admirable precedent for doing it has been set to us by a foreign country.

I am not going to oppose this bill, but I do trust that when the time comes the Senate will be fully advised as to the claims that the widow of one of the most celebrated soldiers and one of the most illustrious administrators in the history of the United States has on the generosity of the people of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to say that it seems to me this bill is entirely right and proper. Surely men who commanded Army corps in France with such signal success as Gen. Hunter Liggett and Gen. Robert L. Bullard are entitled to this reward, if it may be so designated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. This does not bestow upon their families any gratuity or bounty?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired."

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the fact that I offered an amendment to that bill only a few minutes ago. It is on the table. I should like to call it up.

Mr. BLACK. I ask that the bill go over.

SALLIE STAPLEFORD AND OTHERS

Swain, Claude N. Jester, and Charles H. Jamison, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Sallie Stapleford $100.54; Mrs. J. C. Stuckert, $331.74; Mary E. Hildebrand, $266.45; Kate Wright, $362; Mary M. Janvier, $87.85; Harry L. Gray, $212.83; Frank D. Carrow, $121; Harry V. Buckson, $333.31; George H. Swain, $51.65; Claude N. Jester, $341.64; and Charles H. Jamison, $200.15, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated by reason of the losses and damages caused, respectively, to the said Sallie Stapleford, Mrs. J. C. Stuckert, Mary E. Hildebrand, Kate Wright, Mary M. Janvier, Harry L. Gray, Frank D. Carrow, Harry V. Buckson, George H. Swain, Claude N. Jester, and Charles H. Jamison by reason of the damages to the wells on the properties of the said claimants caused by the lowering of the water level of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal at the town of St. Georges, in New Castle County, in the State of Delaware.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN SHIPYARD CORPORATION

The bill (S. 3030) for the relief of Southern Shipyard Corporation was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of Southern Shipyard Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Virginia, of Newport News, Va., for any service, material, or labor furnished or supplied the United States in connection with the reconditioning of the United States Coast Guard cutter Manning or on account of which it sustained a loss and for which it was not adequately paid, and also to determine whether and to what extent if any said Southern Shipyard Corporation furnished service, material, or labor beyond the requirements of its contract to recondition, and also to determine whether Southern Shipyard Corporation furnished any service, material, or labor or was caused loss through no fault of its own in excess of the amount paid by the United States, and the extent to which the United States benefited thereby or through its officers or agents was responsible therefor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have some explanation of that bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this shipyard corporation reconditioned for the United States Coast Guard the cutter Manning. They claimed that they lost money, and there was a dispute as to what the contract was, and what they should be paid. There was no way to settle it. The Secretary of the Treasury would not pay what they claimed was due. There was no possibility of relief. They could not bring suit unless they got authority from Congress. Congress investigated the claim, and asked Secretary Mellon for the letters and correspondence and accounts. Secretary Mellon sent all the correspondence and stated what the issues were, and added the following:

Replying to your inquiry, it being clearly understood that this department admits no existing obligation on the part of the Government toward the Southern Shipyard Corporation, no objection is entertained to sending this claim to the Court of Claims under the terms of the bill.

That is the only way it could be properly disposed of—by sending it to the Court of Claims to render a judgment. The bill does not make any appropriation of money.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all right, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Levin & Sons, San Francisco, Calif., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $269.70, in full satisfaction of their claim against the United States on account of shortage in number of shoes purchased in January, 1921, from the Quartermaster Corps of the Army at Fort Douglas, Utah.

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized to extend to John J. Fitzgerald, a former employee of the Merchant Fleet Corporation, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROMWELL L. BARSLEY

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber a moment ago and in my absence House bill 6152, Order of Business 750, was passed. I should like to ask for the reconsideration of that action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the votes whereby House bill 6152 was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill is now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, this man, Cromwell L. Barsley, enlisted three times in the Army of the United States. Twice he was honorably discharged. During his third term of service he was tried and convicted of stealing two turkeys, valued at $3. He was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment at hard labor and forfeited all of his pay and allowances, and actually served six months of that time, and was then dishonorably discharged.

Mr. President, in one sense that may have been a serious offense, but in a general sense it was a trivial matter. As I said, this man enlisted three times. It occurs to me that courage is one of the greatest of all the virtues. Indeed, it is the parent of most of them; and without courage no other virtue is of any value.

I am going to ask the Senate to pass this bill without the amendment suggested by the Committee on Military Affairs. It seems to me that under all the circumstances this man has been sufficiently punished—indeed, more than sufficiently punished—for doing a trivial act of which many a young man under somewhat similar circumstances has been guilty.

This man having shown such willingness to serve his country, having served two enlistments and been honorably discharged, I feel that it would be but right under all the circumstances that he should be placed back on the roll. While we do not ask any back pay, any bounty, pension, or anything of that kind, I think the amendment suggested by the Military Affairs Committee should be rejected. It reads:

That no back pay shall accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. At least an amendment should be added to the bill providing that this man is to pay for the turkeys, should it not?

Mr. STEPHENS. He paid for them by six months' hard labor. He paid for them by forfeiting his pay, all allowances, and so forth. I think the turkeys have been paid for several times over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the parties from whom he stole the turkeys get this labor?

Mr. STEPHENS. The turkeys belonged to the Government.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh!

Mr. STEPHENS. They belonged to the company of which he was a member. Therefore, the very party that lost the turkeys has been paid many times over for them.

Mr. CARAWAY. They belonged to the captain of the company, did they?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know whether the captain had an interest in them or not; but they were company turkeys, as I understand.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why did the company get them? Does the record show that?

Mr. STEPHENS. I made no inquiry as to that; but I do feel that under the circumstances——

Mr. CARAWAY. Where did this larceny occur?

Mr. STEPHENS. I can look at the report and find that. I am not sure just where it did occur. Apparently it was out in Oklahoma. As Senators know, that section used to be a little wild. This was 20 years ago.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, it is not a Civil War case?

Mr. STEPHENS. No. It occurred in 1907, 20 years or more ago. I remember going out there about that time, and they were not as quiet and peaceful then as they are now.

Mr. CARAWAY. I believe I heard the Senator tell about it. He did not stay long .

Mr. STEPHENS. I will not go into that matter just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite clear as to the difference between the bill and the amendment. As I understand the bill it provides that no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. STEPHENS. The amendment simply cuts off any future action with regard to any right he may have.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is it that occasions his going on the pension roll?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not know that he will go on the pension roll.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator was extolling him for bravery a while ago. I thought he had enlisted during some war; but evidently he enlisted during a time of profound peace.

Mr. STEPHENS. Oh, no; he served in the Spanish-American War, as I understand, or perhaps not. Yes; he was born in Sterling, Ill.; was enrolled June 28, 1898, at Greenville, Miss., for two years; was mustered in, as I said, on July 2, 1898, at Columbus, Miss., as a private of Company D, Fifth United States Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and served his enlistment during that war. Later on he reenlisted, and it was during his third enlistment that he stole the turkeys.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, is the value of these turkeys agreed upon?

Mr. STEPHENS. Three dollars.

Mr. CARAWAY. They must have been mighty small turkeys.

Mr. STEPHENS. Turkeys were not as high priced in those days as they are now.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. I do not see yet that the Senator rests his belief in the bravery of this soldier on any very solid basis of information. The Senator was in doubt in the first instance as to whether or not this man was a veteran of the Spanish-American War. Why does the Senator think he was such a brave soldier? He did not steal the turkeys under circumstances that certified to his bravery; did he?

Mr. STEPHENS. It does require some courage, some bravery, to enlist three times and take the chances of going out and fighting. This man did go out and fight during the Spanish-American War, the record discloses.

Mr. BRUCE. He did not enlist three times in the Spanish-American War, did he?

Mr. STEPHENS. No.

Mr. BRUCE. That would indicate that he deserted three times.

Mr. STEPHENS. No; the Senator did not listen to my statement. I said that he was honorably discharged twice, and it was during the term of his third enlistment that the turkeys disappeared.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I never did find out what act it was he was to be pensioned for. Was it for catching the turkeys?

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not asking for any pension for him; I am asking that this black mark be stricken off the record. He was dishonorably discharged simply for stealing the turkeys under those peculiar circumstances that I have related.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought there was an amendment, which the Senator wanted rejected, that denied him his pensionable status.

Mr. STEPHENS. I want him to have a pensionable status, just like any other man who enlisted in the Army and served his country. I do not know what his physical condition is.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is just attempting to erase from his record the fact that he had been convicted of an offense and dishonorably discharged?

Mr. STEPHENS. He has already served his sentence; he has paid the penalty for the offense. Now I want that black mark of dishonorable discharge stricken from his record.

Mr. CARAWAY. What the Senator is trying to accomplish by an act of Congress is this: To say that this man was honorably discharged when, as a matter of fact, he was discharged as a convicted thief. That is what the Senator is trying to do, is it not?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; in one sense that is very true; but that has been done over and over again. However, I would not call a man who was serving as a soldier, a man who was in camp——

Mr. CARAWAY. In time of peace.

Mr. STEPHENS. Handicapped and tied down—I would not call him a thief simply because he went out and took a turkey. I have no doubt that some men in the sound of my voice have taken more than two turkeys, even in the same night.

Mr. CARAWAY. What would the Senator call him?

Mr. STEPHENS. I would call him a hungry soldier.

Mr. CARAWAY. Not after he had eaten the two turkeys?

Mr. STEPHENS. No; not after the turkeys had been eaten.

Mr. FLETCHER. What this bill would do now, as amended by the Committee on Military Affairs, would be to clear this man's record?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is the fact.

Mr. FLETCHER. He was not supposed to have drawn any pension. My recollection is that, as it came to the committee, all he desired was to have his record cleared, and he did not ask any pension.

Mr. STEPHENS. But we want to put him on this basis, so that if in the future conditions should arise that would require it he might have the opportunity to make application.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, after the man served his term of imprisonment, was he retained in the Army?

Mr. STEPHENS. Then he was dishonorably discharged. He served six months at hard labor for stealing the turkeys and then was dishonorably discharged.

Mr. BRUCE. Without being restored to the Army?

Mr. STEPHENS. Certainly he was not restored.

Mr. BRUCE. He was imprisoned, then dishonorably discharged?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; he served six months. He was sentenced to nine months and served six months.

Mr. BRUCE. I want to be able to vote intelligently. I can not conceive under what system of ethics this application for relief can be made. The man was a thief and had been dishonorably discharged from the Army.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Constitution provides that cruel and unusual punishment shall not be imposed.

Mr. SWANSON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. KING. If we agree to the amendment, it means that the stigma of dishonorable discharge will be removed, but this man may not get a pensionable status. It seems to me we will have gone for enough when we go that far.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, there have been innumerable cases of this kind where bills have been passed providing that their passage shall not result in any back pay or back pension. This bill as introduced was in the usual form. I submit that if it is entitled to be passed at all it should take on and retain the usual form, carrying no back pay, no back pension; but if we are to pass the bill at all—and I think it should be passed—it may well be that this individual, who, it appears, was a brave soldier, might need some little assistance from our Government, and I believe if that should develop the Government should give it to him.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I understand that we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement. If anyone wants to object to this bill, it will go over. If a man's conscience is not satisfied as to its right and justice, he can object. There is no use calling a quorum. I simply called for the regular order.

Mr. BRUCE. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his volunteer advice, but I suppose I am at liberty, nevertheless, to present my ideas about the matter.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator will do that whether it is better to do it or not. We had agreed unanimously that we would consider the calendar until 5 o'clock. I have never seen a unanimous-consent agreement of that kind violated by the protracted discussion of a bill. A bill is called and Senators either consent to its consideration or object. All I ask is that the unanimous-consent agreement be carried out in good faith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to know of the Senator from Maryland if he objects to the consideration of the bill or insists on a roll call.

Mr. BRUCE. I insist on the roll call.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will withdraw the request, I will move for an executive session, because there is some executive business to be transacted.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, let me say just a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not want to interfere with the procedure here this afternoon. If anybody indicates to me, without having a roll call, that he wants to object, I should be very glad to let this bill remain on the calendar and be considered another day. I do not want to take up the time with this measure. If the Senator from Maryland wants to object, let him do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. To cut the knot, I object.

Mr. BRUCE. I do not propose to condone theft, and I do object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill goes over.

SCHOONER "ADDISON E. BULLARD"

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have been trying for some time to get the floor to ask that we return to Calendar 674, Senate bill 1486, for the relief of the owners of the schooner Addison E. Bullard, and to ask for its passage. It has been reported favorably by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. I object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I would like to explain this measure to the Senator, if he has no objection.

Mr. BRUCE. I will be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. This is a bill where a man had a boat during the war. The boat was held up by the Shipping Board. They took his cargo and shipped it, and they received $83,000 for him, of his money, which he has been after ever since. This is a bill to pay him his money, which they received for him, under the report of the committee. I would like to have the Senator withdraw the objection.

Mr. BRUCE. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Horace Turner, managing owner of the American schooner Addison E. Bullard, for and on behalf of the owners of the schooner, the sum of $80,000, with interest at 4 per cent from May 6, 1920, such sum representing losses sustained by the owners of the schooner because of the interruption of a voyage by reason of the proclamation of the President, effective September 28, 1917, forbidding sailing vessels from entering the war zone. The acceptance of such sum by the owners of the schooner shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of the owners in respect of such losses.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BLACK STAR LINE (INC.) SEAMEN

The bill (S. 2291) for the relief of certain seamen who are judgment creditors of the Black Star Line (Inc.) for wages earned was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding any lapse of time or statute of limitation, and without the permission on the part of the Government or its representatives, to interpose any kind of defense to said claim, except to have the person, persons, corporation, or corporations to whom such money or a part of such money shall belong, as a matter of equity and justice, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment, such as equity and justice may require, in favor of such person, persons, corporation, or corporations, as upon a determination of the facts heard by said court, the said court shall determine, is entitled to receive such money in the sum of $21,624.66 less any costs legally incurred in the Court of Claims, which said sum of money has been paid into the Treasury of the United States by the United States Shipping Board, on account of a purchase by the Black Star Line (Inc.) or other persons in their behalf, of a certain ship known as the steamship Orion. It is hereby recognized by this act that the said sum of money above set forth, in equity and good conscience, does not belong to the United States Government, and the Court of Claims is vested with full jurisdiction, under its rules and proceedings, to render judgment for such money or parts thereof as in equity and good conscience any person or persons, corporation, or corporations may be entitled to receive.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will not some one make an explanation of this bill?

Mr. BLACK. I will be glad to explain it. Twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars was paid in by a number of colored people to the Shipping Board on a boat, and they fell down on their trade. The $22,500 belongs to somebody. There are several claimants. I have amended the bill so as to provide that the Court of Claims shall decide to whom the money belongs, and to award it to the proper person. That is the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know of a number of cases where individuals bought ships from the Shipping Board, paying all the way from $20,000 to two or three hundred thousand for a number of ships, and then failed ultimately to make the purchase. Would this be a precedent by which they could come back and get an appropriation from Congress?

Mr. BLACK. This is to pay them the $22,500 which they paid in. There is no objection to it. The Shipping Board has not objected to it. It is not my claim. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] introduced the bill.

Mr. KING. The point I am making is this: Senators know that since the war perhaps two or three hundred sales have been made by the Shipping Board. In a very large number of them payments would be made, from $10,000 to $100,000, and then the purchasers would fall down in the remaining payments.

Mr. BLACK. These people have never gotten the boats. They put up the money as a part of the purchase price in the beginning.

Mr. KING. Was it not given to them, and did they not fail to purchase it, and did not the Government take it back?

Mr. BLACK. No; it was not given to them. They never got the boat.

Mr. KING. It is just a breach of contract; that is, they purchased the boat but the Government failed to deliver it?

Mr. BLACK. The Government never did deliver it.

Mr. KING. Why?

Mr. BLACK. It was for a number of thousand of colored people, who got up money to buy a boat to go to Africa. The head of the movement went to the penitentiary.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let us give them the boat and let them go.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of certain seamen and any and all persons entitled to receive a part or all of money now held by the Government of the United States on a purchase contract of steamship Orion who are judgment creditors of the Black Star Line (Inc.) for wages earned."

BREACHES OF FIDUCIARY OBLIGATIONS

The bill (H. R. 6844) concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. This bill, as I remember the title, is a very significant and important measure. We may not have time in the moment remaining to have it disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6856) relating to the payment or delivery by banks or other persons or institutions in the District of Columbia of deposits of money and property held in the names of two or more persons, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6103) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for fiscal year ending June 30, 1884," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read so that we may know the meaning of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 5 o'clock has arrived.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 18, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, April 17, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, this is the moment of soul silence, and we beseech Thee to hear us. We thank Thee for the mercy of a new day. Bless each one of us with the mercy of a grateful heart. There are many perils of which we are ignorant and many of which we perceive. We can not understand Thy providence, yet we repose our faith in Thee, for Thy abundance overflows and transcends all our needs. Grant that all things base, cruel, inhuman, vain, and ignorant shall lose their power and die away; and may all things pure, upright, ennobling, and enriching grow and gather strength until righteousness and knowledge shall prevail throughout our fair land and the glory of the Lord shall fill the whole earth. Through Jesus Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the St. Lawrence waterway and to include therein certain official notes which have been exchanged between the United States and Canada with reference to that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and print with them some official correspondence between the United States and Canada. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, we are heartened to-day by good news with respect to the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes deep-waterway project. The exchange of notes between the Governments of the United States and Canada announced from Ottawa last evening brings this great undertaking nearer to realization than it ever has been before. All agree that the price of our farm products is determined at those points on our seaboard or abroad where the competitive streams of exports come together. The price at the farm is the price made at this junction market, less the cost of transportation and handling to those centers.

From this it follows that the world market price for wheat is now and will continue to be the base from which is figured the price paid to the producers of the wheat. This is true whether their wheat goes to the foreign market place or remains and is consumed at home.

Stated in another way, the basic price to the farmer is the world price less the costs of selling to the world market. The standard cost of movement of wheat from the head of the Great Lakes to Europe is made up of the normal costs of lake and rail movement to tidewater, plus the normal cost of transportation across the Atlantic.

Owing to increases in railway rates and the distance from seaboard our mid-west farmers must pay from 6 to 12 cents per bushel more on grain to reach those markets than before the war. Therefore, the foreign farmers reach the world market at a lower cost than can our mid-west farmers.

INCREASED TRANSPORTATION COSTS

It is not necessary for me to dwell on the increased cost of rail transportation, which is well known to all. In 1914 the index of transportation cost was 99.4. In 1925 it was 157.5 In 1917 a farmer shipping wheat paid 3.5 pounds out of each 100 pounds for freight. In 1922 he paid 9.3 pounds out of each 100 pounds for freight, an increase of 166 per cent. This increase in freight rates has seriously handicapped the farmers in the mid-west. On the other hand, ocean-freight rates have not advanced in this proportion.

The disparity can best be visualized by again referring to wheat. Pre-war, the freight on a bushel of South Dakota wheat by the cheapest route to Liverpool cost approximately 35 cents, while the freight on Argentine wheat to the same market cost 21 cents, a difference of 14 cents. To-day the increased freight rate charges on this bushel have moved the Argentine farmers only 3½ cents a bushel further away from Liverpool, while the South Dakota farmer has moved 12 cents a bushel further away; or a difference of over 8 cents a bushel to the advantage of the Argentine producer. This uneven increase in transportation charges has handicapped our mid-west farmers in competition with these foreign countries.

The same disparity occurs with other commodities. Steel from Pittsburgh to the Pacific coast carries a rate of $10 a ton. Steel by rail from Chicago to the Pacific coast has a rate of $25 a ton. The rate on flour from Seattle by water transportation through the Panama Canal to New York City is $6 a ton. By rail from Minnesota, Kansas, or North Dakota to Seattle the rate of $8.70 a ton.

First-class freight from the Pacific coast to New York by water and then to Milwaukee by rail is $3.92 per hundred pounds. From Milwaukee to the Pacific coast by rail first-class freight carries a rate of $5.10 per hundred pounds. The illustrations could be multiplied indefinitely. The handicaps that the people of the mid-west face are obvious to all.

FARMERS GAIN WHEN CARRYING CHARGES ARE LOWERED

It is well known that the price which the farmer realizes in the foreign competitive markets sets the price of his whole product, not alone the price of the export balance. Therefore the effect of the increase of transportation rates to seaboard is far greater than its effect calculated only upon the part of the crop exported out of the mid-west.

The price to the farmer will be lifted by the amount that the transportation cost can be reduced. There is no difference in opinion in regard to the dominance of the world price with respect to both wheat and rye. The United States is a heavy exporter of both, as well as of flour. Barley and oats are less affected, although in 1926 the United States exported 13,000,000 bushels of domestic barley and 11,000,000 bushels of domestic oats.

MINNESOTA'S AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION

In Minnesota, my State, the number of bushels of wheat, oats, barley, and rye produced on the average is 240,000,000 bushels per year. A saving of 10 cents per bushel in freight rates would amount in one year to $24,000,000. Wheat and rye produced in the two Dakotas, Montana, and in Minnesota would, at a 10-cent per bushel saving in freight charges, give the farmers of those three States each year the munificent sum of $26,500,000.

Taking Minnesota's annual production of wheat and rye, a 10-cent saving in freight rates for this State alone would amount to $4,000,000.

There are 28,000 farms in my district—the ninth Minnesota district—known also as the Red River Valley district, the banner bread and butter district of the State. These farmers produced 14,000,000 bushels of wheat and rye in 1924. A 10-cent per bushel increase in price would amount in one year to $1,400,000.

The increased price at the farm market of the total production of grain in this district would materially increase this amount. In addition, the reduction in freight charges on articles purchased would amount to a considerable sum. A total benefit amounting to $3,000,000 annually is not too high an estimate.

Our farmers and townspeople are united in their support of the deep waterway and of inland waterways because they know substantial benefits will come. They are against any unnecessary delay. They will welcome the good news that the two Governments are earnestly endeavoring to complete the negotiations so that dirt may fly and the work of construction begin.

We must restore the additional 6 to 12 cents per bushel on grain in order to remove one of the contributing causes of our postwar agricultural difficulties. It is not all of the farm problem, but it is an important part.

CHEAPER TRANSPORTATION WILL SAVE MILLIONS OF DOLLARS

The United States exports annually 250,000,000 bushels of wheat or equivalent in flour. By means of cheaper transportation, 8 to 10 cents a bushel on outgoing freight is saved, bringing a net increase to the farmers of this country on the actual amount exported between twenty and thirty million dollars. The effect on the price of the unexported portion of the total production will increase the income of the farmers to the extent of meeting the total cost of the capital outlay for the St. Lawrence deep waterway in a single year.

The increased cost of transportation also bears upon many of the goods the farmer buys. This increases the spread in prices between what he buys as against what he sells. In terms of freight rates, the farmers of Minnesota have been pushed hundreds of miles further away both from the former markets and from the sources of their supplies.

The same is true of the Dakota farmer, the Montana farmer, and of the entire mid-west area.

PANAMA CANAL ISOLATED THE MID-WEST

I can not at this time enlarge upon the far-reaching effects upon the Middle West caused by the Panama Canal. Undoubtedly this canal has brought benefits to the people living on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts of the United States. It has benefited this country and the world in general. A direct result has been to draw the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards and their back country much closer together. Just to that extent has it isolated the Middle West.

Chicago, in terms of transportation rates, is at a 4 per cent disadvantage in rates from the Pacific coast, as compared to prewar, while New York has a 12 per cent advantage in rates from the Pacific. Here is a difference of approximately 16 per cent favoring New York over the mid-west area where the same ratios apply as to Chicago.

DEEP WATERWAY IS NEEDED

The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway will tend to equalize these disadvantages. Inland waterways will also prove of undoubted benefit. Those who have studied the transportation problem agree that if we were able to run our ocean shipping into the Great Lakes, and if we had the Mississippi waterways fully modernized we could show savings of from 8 to 12 cents per bushel, and perhaps more, in transport from different parts of the mid-west, or about the amount of rail rate increases.

One of the fundamental needs of American agriculture is cheaper transportation. Improvement of the inland waterways offers a large measure of help. Based upon actual going freight rates, on the sea or on the Great Lakes, 1,000 bushels of wheat can be transported 1,000 miles for $20 to $30. Using the modern-equipped Mississippi barges, 1,000 bushels of wheat can be transported 1,000 miles for $60 or $70. It costs from $150 to $200 to carry 1,000 bushels of wheat for 1,000 miles by rail. This gives the facts in a nutshell.

The costs of transportation to and from the farm must be reduced. Every cent of reduction goes into the pocket of the farmer, for where the farmer is a competitive seller in a foreign market the freight comes off his price.

GREAT LAKES CARRY MUCH FREIGHT NOW

To those who are skeptical about the freight business that is being carried on the Great Lakes at the present time, recent figures will prove to be interesting. These figures demonstrate that this waterway is being used very extensively. In 1926 the 13 class 1 railroads of the Great Lakes region moved revenue freight traffic amounting to 93,655,000 ton-miles, at a total freight charge of $1,028,858,000, or 11 mills, or 1.1 cents, per ton-mile. On the Great Lakes in the same year the movement of freight amounted to 96,000,000,000 ton-miles on which the carrying charges amounted to $105,500,000, or 1.1 mills, or a little over one-tenth of a cent, per ton-mile. Three per cent more freight was handled on the Great Lakes than by these railroads and at one-tenth the freight rate. During the same year 10,000,000 tons of freight were carried on the lower Mississippi and 20,000,000 tons on the Ohio. This should be sufficient answer to the skeptics.

SUMMARY OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH CANADA

The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway is of so great importance to the Mid West that every step leading to its construction is of deepest importance. Several notes which have been exchanged by the two Governments concerned in this project mark definite forward progress in establishing this outlet to the ocean.

This exchange of notes began on May 17, 1922, when Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes, speaking for the United States, indicated that the United States Government would be glad to take up with the Canadian Government the negotiation of a treaty looking to the deepening of the waterways which would enable ocean-going ships to reach the Great Lakes.

On June 5, 1922, the British Ambassador stated that the Canadian Government was of the opinion that it was not considered expedient to deal with the matter at that time.

Later, on January 30, 1924, H. G. Chilton, of the British Embassy at Washington stated that the Government of Canada was willing to undertake the preparation of a final report covering the engineering features of the whole project, including its cost as well as to investigate all the problems involved. Then followed several years of investigations and surveys covering both engineering and economic aspects.

LATER NOTES BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENTS

On April 13, 1927, Secretary Kellogg addressed a note regarding the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project to the Canadian Government. On July 12, 1927, the Canadian Government made acknowledgment and stated it was not prepared to make a full answer, but would do so when its advisory committee had reported.

The full answer of the Canadian Government dated January 31, 1928, arrived in Washington, and a reply to the same dated March 12, 1928, was sent to Canada by the Secretary of State. The Canadian answer, dated April 5, 1928, and the reply to this by Secretary Kellogg, dated April 7, 1928, has now been made public. The long forward step which these notes have brought about is of fundamental importance to our country. Under the leave granted I will incorporate the full text of these notes in the RECORD:

TEXT OF CORRESPONDENCE EXCHANGED BY THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES CONCERNING THE PROPOSED ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY IMPROVEMENT

(Note of January 31, 1928, from the Canadian Minister to the Secretary of State)

SIR: I have the honor to refer to your note of April 13, 1927, in which, after reviewing the steps taken in recent years by the United States and Canada to inquire into the feasibility of a St. Lawrence ocean shipway you stated that the Government of the United States had accepted the recommendations of the St. Lawrence River Commission, appointed by the President as an advisory body, and was accordingly prepared to enter into negotiations with Canada with a view to formulating a convention for the development of the waterway.

Acknowledgment of this communication was made in a note of July 12, 1927, addressed to the minister of the United States at Ottawa, in which it was stated that as the report of the joint board of engineers indicated differences of opinion as to the solution of the engineering difficulties presented by the international section of the waterway, the national advisory committee appointed by His Majesty's Government in Canada to report on the economic and general aspects of the waterway question, would not be in a position to advise the Government until certain alternative schemes under consideration by the joint board, and to be included in the appendixes to the main report, had been received and duly considered.

The full report of the board has now been received, and the national advisory committee, which met in Ottawa this month, has reported its conclusions to His Majesty's Government in Canada. The national advisory committee concurs in the finding of the joint board of engineers that the project is feasible. It recommends, however, that should the work be undertaken, fuller allowance should be made for future requirements by providing, in addition to 30-foot depth for the permanent structures, 27-foot navigation in the reaches rather than the 25-foot navigation proposed by the joint board. While the national advisory committee regards the project as feasible from an engineering standpoint and notes the findings of the International Joint Commission in 1921 as to its economic practicability, it considers that the question of its advisability at the present time depends upon the successful solution of a number of financial and economic difficulties, and upon further consideration of certain of the engineering features as to which the two sections of the joint board of engineers are not as yet agreed. I am instructed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to inform you that His Majesty's Government in Canada concurs in these conclusions of the national advisory committee.

In your note of April 13, it was observed that the St. Lawrence River Commission had reported that the construction of a shipway at proper depth would relieve the interior of the continent, especially agriculture, from the economic handicaps of adverse transportation costs which, it was indicated, now operate to the disadvantage of many States and a large part of Canada. It was added that the Government of the United States appreciated the advantages which would accrue equally to both countries by opening up the waterway to ocean shipping, and that the necessary increase in United States railway rates, due to the war, and the desirability of early development of hydroelectric power, were factors which must have equal application to, and influence upon, the Dominion of Canada.

In view of the implications as to Canadian conditions contained in these observations, it may be well to indicate certain features of the transportation situation in Canada which have a direct bearing upon the St. Lawrence waterway question.

For many years past the improvement of transportation has been the foremost task of successive governments of Canada. At heavy cost, an extensive program of railway, waterway, and harbor development has been carried out, with the object of linking up all parts of the Dominion and providing adequate outlets for foreign trade. Two great transcontinental railway systems have been built up, largely with State aid, and both western and eastern Canada are now reasonably well served by railways, though increasing settlement and increasing production render it necessary for both systems to continue to spend large sums annually in the provision of branch lines. Western Canada is now looking to the early completion of the Hudson Bay route to Europe. This route, which it is anticipated will be available in about three years, will shorten the haul to Europe from the Canadian west by a thousand miles and more, and will also be of substantial benefit to shippers from the Western States. Since that work was projected, the completion of the Panama Canal, by the efforts of the United States, has supplied an alternative outlet for much of western Canada through Vancouver and Prince Rupert; and at the present time the Canadian Government is faced with a strong demand for an additional and more direct outlet to the Pacific for the Peace River country. The St. Lawrence route itself has been progressively improved, and has proved of steadily increasing service.

Partly as a result of the existence of competitive alternative outlets, railway rates in Canada are in general lower than in the United States. The rates on grain, which provides 52 per cent of the total traffic of western lines, are now below pre-war level. Material reductions have also been made in another bulk movement of importance to both eastern and western Canada, namely, coal. General commodity rates, which were the subject of the same percentage of relative increase in both countries, due to war conditions, have subsequently been reduced in Canada, in certain instances, to a greater extent than in the United States. In recent months a rate on grain has been established from the head of the Lakes to Quebec, which approximates the charges incident to the movement by water by the present Great Lakes-St. Lawrence route, a route which, in Canada, has always exercised a restraining influence on railway rates. As the greater part of Canada's railway mileage is now owned and operated by the State, the St. Lawrence proposals, in so far as they may possibly affect the revenues of the railways, present considerations as to which Canada's point of view is necessarily somewhat different from that of the United States.

Canada's interest in the improved navigation of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence route would be associated largely with the movement of bulk commodities, such as grain, timber, and coal. The movement of package freight by water in Canada is at present of small volume, and Canadian railways, unlike, it is understood, those of the Mid West of the United States, are in a position to handle much more of that traffic than at present is offered.

It is believed that development of the waterway would prove of advantage to Canadian commerce and industry, not merely in the sections directly tributary to the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence, but in the Maritime sections, which would be afforded more direct access to the great interior markets of the continent. It is, however, apparent that the United States would benefit much more from the enlarged navigation facilities, both in extent of use and in margin of saving. The report of the International Joint Commission in 1921, after a comprehensive review of the economic aspects of the project, presented the following conclusions to which the National Advisory Committee calls attention:

"As to the economic practicability of the waterway, the commission finds that, without considering the probability of new traffic created by the opening of a water route to the seaboard, there exists to-day, between the region economically tributary to the Great Lakes and overseas points as well as between the same region and the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, a volume of outbound and inbound trade that might reasonably be expected to seek this route sufficient to justify the expense involved in its improvement.

"It finds that, as between the American and Canadian sides of the tributary area, the former contributes very much the larger share of this foreign and coastwise trade, and in all probability will continue to do so for many years to come. The benefits to be derived from the opening of a water route to the sea will, therefore, accrue in much larger measure to American than to Canadian interests, though it is reasonable to assume that eventually the advantages may be more evenly distributed."

The report of the International Joint Commission continues, in a direct reference to comparative transportation conditions:

"It finds that the existing means of transportation between the tributary area in the United States and the seaboard are altogether inadequate, that the railroads have not kept pace with the needs of the country, but that this does not apply to the Canadian side of the area, where railway development is still in advance of population and production."

It will therefore be observed that the transportation situation in the two countries is not identical as to available facilities, extent of use, or rates, and that the economic handicaps to which you referred in your note of April 13 appear to have more application to United States than to Canadian conditions. In this connection, it may be said that Canadian agriculture is more directly affected by the restrictions on the importation of Canadian farm products which have been imposed by the United States in recent years, with the object, it is understood, of assisting agriculture in those Western States which would share so largely in the benefits of the proposed St. Lawrence waterway. This situation, and the effects upon the maritime sections of Canada of United States duties on the products of the fisheries, are among the factors which have contributed to bringing it about that public opinion in Canada has not so clearly crystalized in favor of the waterway project as appears to be the case in the United States.

Reference was made in your note to the early development of hydroelectric power as a factor which must have equal application to and influence upon the Dominion of Canada. The opportunity of developing great quantities of power incidental to navigation is, it is agreed, a special advantage possessed by the St. Lawrence project and an important consideration in determining its advisability. In this aspect of the project, however, there are again special features in the Canadian situation which it is desirable to make clear. Public opinion in Canada is opposed to the export of hydroelectric power and is insistent that such power as may be rendered available on the St. Lawrence, whether from the wholly Canadian section or from the Canadian half of the international section, shall be utilized within the Dominion to stimulate Canadian industry and develop the national resources. With this view the national advisory committee expresses itself as in complete accord. The committee further indicates that, in view of the relatively limited capacity of the Canadian market to absorb the vast blocks of power contemplated by the St. Lawrence proposals, it follows that it is most important, in any arrangement which may be considered, that the development of power on the Canadian side should not exceed the capacity of the Canadian market to absorb it.

The situation presented by the differences of opinion brought out in the report of the joint board of engineers as to the best method of development in the international section of the St. Lawrence has also received consideration by the national advisory committee. The committee considers it greatly in the public interest that a further attempt should be made to reconcile these varying views. Conclusive assurance is necessary as to control of the fluctuations of flow from Lake Ontario, so essential to the interests of the purely national sections of the river and the port of Montreal, and as to the situation of those Canadian communities on the St. Lawrence, which under certain of the present plans might be obliged to live under levees or to rebuild in part.

A plan has been presented in the appendices to the report of the joint board of engineers proposing an alternative location of the upper works of the Canadian two-stage plan. It is also considered advisable that opportunity should be afforded for further conference on these alternative proposals between the Canadian section of the joint board and engineers representing the Province of Ontario, who have themselves formulated plans dealing with the international section.

The financial phases of the project have been reviewed by the committee. It is pointed out that for many years Canada has been engaged in improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence River both above and below Montreal and in providing navigation facilities across the Niagara Peninsula. At the same time the United States has been similarly engaged in deepening interconnecting channels of the upper Lakes and in providing suitable works at Sault Ste. Marie. Toward the common object Canada has made particularly heavy contributions. It has expended over thirty millions on the ship channel, which has made possible ocean navigation on a large scale to the port of Montreal, an expenditure by which the proposed St. Lawrence project will directly benefit. The Dominion has spent fifty millions on canals and channel improvements between Montreal and Lake Erie, in which improved navigation United States shipping has had equal use and advantage. To the present Canada has spent eighty-seven millions on the Welland Ship Canal. In view of these facts and of the very heavy financial burdens imposed by the war, by the railway obligations arising out of the war, and by the necessity since the war ended of finding the large sums required for needed public works throughout the Dominion, it is considered that it would not be sound policy to assume heavy public obligations for the St. Lawrence project.

The National Advisory Committee has reached the conclusion that it is possible to work out a method by which provision could be made for the construction of the waterway on terms which would be equitable to both countries and would take adequate account of the special factors in the Canadian situation to which attention has been directed. Several methods have been considered, but the plan which chiefly commends itself to the committee is, in brief, that Canada should consider providing for the construction of the waterway in the sections wholly Canadian—that is, the Welland Ship Canal and the works in the St. Lawrence below the international boundary—and that the United States should consider undertaking the completion of a 27-foot waterway to the head of the Lakes, in addition to meeting the entire cost of the development, under joint technical supervision on lines to be agreed upon, of the international section of the St. Lawrence, both for navigation and for power. The construction of the wholly Canadian (Welland and St. Lawrence) sections and, if the United States should see fit, of the upper Lakes works, would, on this plan, be given precedence of the international section, because of the necessity alike of providing for further consideration of the engineering problems involved in the international section and of permitting reasonable absorption of the power developed on the Canadian side.

In support of this view, the following statement is submitted by the committee, based on expenditures by both countries on the present through waterway, and on the estimated cost of the presently recommended scheme, with 27-foot navigation, a new United States lock at Sault Ste. Marie of the same dimensions as proposed for the St. Lawrence shipway, and the development on the St. Lawrence of such power as is incidental to navigation:

In bringing these conclusions of the National Advisory Committee to the attention of the Government of the United States, His Majesty's Government in Canada desires to add that there are phases of the question, particularly as regards the development of power, as to which it is necessary to take account of the special concern of the two Provinces of Canada bordering on the waterway. The relation between navigation and power involves certain constitutional difficulties, of which, in accordance with the wishes of the governments of Ontario and Quebec, the Government of Canada proposes to seek a solution by reference to the courts. With this preliminary difficulty in process of solution, the Government of Canada will be in a position, upon learning from the Government of the United States whether in its view the procedure above outlined affords an acceptable basis of negotiation, to consult with the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec on the aspects of the problem with which they may be concerned, and thus to facilitate an understanding being reached between all concerned as to the methods and means by which the project could be undertaken.

It is the hope of the Government of Canada that, in any such further consideration of the waterway question, opportunity may be found for reaching a comprehensive settlement of all outstanding problems affecting the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, including the preservation of the waters properly belonging to the St. Lawrence watershed, of which the present discussion indicates the paramount importance.

I shall be obliged if you will be good enough to inform me at your convenience, for transmission to His Majesty's Government in Canada, of the views of the Government of the United States on the representations which are outlined above.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

VINCENT MASSEY.

(Note of March 12, 1928, from the Secretary of State to the Canadian minister)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your note of January 31, 1928, in which you inform me of the findings and recommendations of the National Advisory Committee in regard to the proposed St. Lawrence waterway improvement.

I note the view of the National Advisory Committee that the question of the advisability of the improvement at the present time depends upon the solution of a number of financial and economic difficulties and upon further consideration of certain of the engineering features and the conclusion of the committee that it is possible to work out a method by which provision could be made for the construction of the waterway on terms which would be equitable to both countries and would also take adequate account of the factors in the Canadian situation which you have set forth.

The suggestions outlined in your note have received thorough consideration. While the United States is not in complete agreement with the representations made by the Canadian Government as to the relative benefits and ultimate costs to the two countries of the proposed improvement of the St. Lawrence and the division of expense to be borne by each country, it is inclined to regard as an acceptable basis of negotiation a proposal along the general lines suggested in your note: That the prosecution of the improvement of the St. Lawrence waterway be based on the undertaking by the United States of the deepening of the necessary channels through the interconnecting waters of the Great Lakes and the improvement of the international section of the St. Lawrence both for navigation and for power; and the undertaking by Canada of the construction of the waterway in the sections wholly Canadian, that is, the Welland Canal and the works in the St. Lawrence below the international boundary.

Whether the United States expends its share of the cost on the international section and Canada its share on the national sections would seem to be immaterial if, in the negotiations, there is a fair division of expense for a through deep waterway to the ocean. Of course, in such an arrangement, all sections of the deep waterway should be so constructed as to make them most suitable for a through system of transportation. This is a detail to which I have no doubt your Government will entirely agree. The use of the waterway should be properly safeguarded by treaties between the two countries.

Concerning the value of the route to the sea to the two countries, I have noted the suggestions made in your note of January 31. I might say that, while it may not be very material to the main issue, the United States has the use of the Panama Canal which is of great benefit to it, especially on the Pacific, Atlantic, and Gulf coasts. It has also the use of the Gulf of Mexico which reaches a considerable way across the continent on the South and furnishes valuable water transportation for a large portion of the southwestern part of the United States. Both of these waterways exercise a great influence on freight rates. The United States has other harbors on the Atlantic, such as New York, served by both railways and the Erie Canal, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Norfolk, which involve a shorter railroad haul from the Great Lakes territory to the ocean than is enjoyed by Canada. Nevertheless, I feel that the construction of a deep waterway through the St. Lawrence to the ocean will be of tremendous advantage to most, if not all, of the territory in the northern part of the United States, as well as to the corresponding territory in Canada.

Referring to your suggestions as to the order in which the different works should be undertaken, it would seem to me that this matter will also have to be the subject of negotiation because the works ought to proceed so that all parts of the navigation system would be completed substantially at the same time and the United States ought to have the advantage of its share of the power of the international section without waiting until Canada may be able to sell her power from these works.

Referring to the balance sheet, which undoubtedly was included in your note to illustrate the principles of the division of costs and the work to be done by each country, I am in general accord with those principles. The amounts and some of the items would have to be considered and discussed in the negotiations. To illustrate: I am not inclined to the view that it is right to include in the balance sheet the costs of the St. Lawrence and old Welland Canals except so far as they may be of use to the deeper system. These works are understood to be for lighter craft and of little value for the purposes of the works now proposed. These waterways are understood to have served their purpose in economic returns. It would also seem to be necessary to differentiate between the costs that may properly be chargeable to navigation and those to power in general. Those who now or in the future profit by the power should bear their share of the expense. It is understood that the power development will carry itself. To illustrate: Under the suggestions you make, the United States will have no proprietary interest in the power on the national section. It would, therefore, seem that as this development is for the benefit of Canada, your Government should be responsible for that expense, and that such expense should take into account the costs to be borne by the respective interests whether the power is actually installed now or later. The amount, therefore, which power on the national section should contribute to the cost of the improvement should be left open for consideration and subject to determination in the negotiations. All power, of course, developed for joint benefit in the international section should ultimately be paid for as a part of the joint venture. The application of this principle would change the proposed balance sheet considerably. Therefore, if, as you suggest as to this section, the United States is willing to build not only the waterway but the power, it would seem that the United States ought to be permitted to develop its power and use its half, the other half to be used by Canada or not as it should desire.

The United States is agreeable to the proposal that all navigation channels provided in improvements have a minimum depth of 27 feet, the permanent structures having a depth of 30 feet for future expansion. The United States has at present under consideration the deepening of the lake channels to the extent economically justified by the present commerce of the Great Lakes. There is one question that we should like to leave for discussion, and that is whether it would be economical to at once build a new lock and deepen the Soo Canal until such time as the St. Lawrence is nearing completion, so that there would be a demand for deeper channels. It is clearly advisable that the large expenditures required for depths in excess of present needs be deferred until the greater depths can be profitably used.

The United States fully recognizes the right of the Dominion of Canada to the ownership and use of the Canadian share of the power which may be developed in the international section of the waterway as well as to all that developed in the national section, and it recognizes also that the disposition of the power is purely a domestic question. It recognizes, further, that this share is an inherent attribute of Canadian sovereignty, irrespective of the agency by which the power may be developed.

The United States regards it a fundamental economic principle that the beneficiaries of power developed in the improvement of the international section of the St. Lawrence should pay ultimately their fair share of the cost of its production, whether the agency constructing these works be a corporation, a State or Province, or a national government. It believes that a practicable means can be found for effecting the fulfillment of this principle in the arrangements made for the improvement of the international section of the river for the joint benefit of navigation and power development, and believes that the negotiations entered into in furtherance of the undertaking of the project should have this end in view.

The large expenditures required for the undertaking are a matter of grave concern to the United States as well as to Canada. It is felt that when the United States embarks on the enterprise all expenditures should be on a sound economic basis.

The United States accepts without reservation the principle that the operation of works in the international section must be such as will control fluctuations of the outflow from Lake Ontario in such manner as to safeguard all interests on the purely Canadian sections of the river, including especially the port of Montreal. It regards as acceptable the proposal that the design and operation of works in the international section of the river be under joint technical control and assumes that the design of all works on the waterway will comply in general with the plans agreed upon by the joint engineering board as embodying the best principles.

The United States is fully in accord with the view that the advisability of undertaking the improvement at the present time depends on the solution of the financial and economic problems involved. It shares the hope expressed that a solution will be found which will fully safeguard the interests of the two countries and will afford an equitable basis for a division of the cost. It is confident that when these economic principles are determined, the solution of the engineering problems required for their fulfillment will be speedily realized.

I have the honor to suggest, therefore, that the two countries proceed with the appointment of commissioners to discuss jointly the problems presented in your note, and those which I have presented herein with a view to the formulation of a convention appropriate to this subject.

The Government of the United States will be glad to have this discussion extended to the further consideration of any outstanding problems affecting the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence as suggested in your note.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

(Note of April 5, 1928, from Mr. Laurent Beaudry, First Secretary of the Canadian legation, to the Secretary of State)

SIR: I have the honor to refer to your note of March 12, 1928, on the St. Lawrence waterway project.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has noted that while the United States is not in complete agreement with the representations contained in my note, No. 30, of January 31, 1928, as to the relative benefits and ultimate costs to the two countries of the proposed improvement and the division of expenses to be borne by each country, it is inclined to regard as an acceptable basis of negotiation the suggestions of the National Advisory Committee summarized in my note as to the division between Canada and the United States of the tasks involved in the completion of the deep St. Lawrence waterway.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has also noted that the United States agrees that a channel of 27 feet minimum depth would be advisable, accepts the principle that the works in the international section must be so operated as to control fluctuations of the outflow from Lake Ontario in such manner as to safeguard all interests on the purely Canadian sections, including the port of Montreal, and agrees that the design and operation of the works in the international section should be under joint technical control. It is noted also that the United States would be prepared to have the discussion extend to the consideration of any outstanding problems affecting the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence watershed, as suggested in my previous note.

In your note under reference you raise some question as to the relative advantage of the waterway to each country and as to the validity of some of the items included on the Canadian side of the balance sheet presented for illustrative purposes by the National Advisory Committee, and refer also to the problems involved in the allocation of costs as between navigation and power. At the present stage it does not appear necessary to discuss these points in detail.

It is further noted that you do not favor the recommendation of the National Advisory Committee, which was an integral feature of its plan and of the division of tasks which it proposed, that the works on the national section should be given priority over the works on the international section in order to permit an agreed solution of the engineering difficulties in this area, and to insure reasonable absorption of the power developed on the Canadian side. In view of the fact that the market for hydroelectric power in Canada, though large and rapidly expanding, has definite limitations, and that export of power is considered contrary to public policy, it is an essential factor in any plan economically feasible from the Canadian standpoint that, whether through the priority procedure set out by the National Advisory Committee or by some alternative method, the development of power to be utilized in Canada should not outrun the capacity of the Canadian market to absorb and thus to meet the proportion of the costs of the waterway fairly chargeable to power.

The National Advisory Committee laid emphasis on another phase of the situation—the necessity of reconciling the divergent views of the two sections of the joint board of engineers as to the best method of development in the international section of the St. Lawrence. Definite and agreed engineering proposals for the development of this section would appear to be a necessary preliminary to any computation of costs or decision as to the order of construction or division of tasks. His Majesty's Government in Canada has previously referred to the view of the National Advisory Committee, which it shares, that a conference should be held between the Canadian section of the joint board and engineers representing the Province of Ontario. It would appear advisable that such a conference should be followed by reconsideration of the engineering problems in the international section by the whole joint board.

Reference was made in my previous note to certain constitutional questions affecting the Canadian situation and to the intention of His Majesty's Government in Canada, in accordance with the wishes of the governments of Ontario and Quebec, to seek a solution by reference to the courts. Steps have since been taken to this end, and it is anticipated that the reference will come before the Supreme Court of Canada at an early date.

It was further indicated in my previous note that with the constitutional question in process of solution His Majesty's Government in Canada would be in a position upon learning whether the Government of the United States considered that the procedure suggested by the national advisory committee formed an acceptable basis of negotiation to consult with the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec upon the aspects of the problem with which they may be concerned. While the acceptance by the United States of this basis of negotiation is attended with important qualifications, yet the position of the Government of the United States has been made sufficiently clear and definite to permit the Government of Canada to take the necessary steps thus contemplated and discuss with the Provinces the aspects in question. Following this consultation His Majesty's Government in Canada will be in a position to inform the Government of the United States further of its views on the proposals contained in your note of March 12.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir,

Your most obedient, humble servant,

LAURENT BEAUDRY
(For the Minister).

(Note of April 7, 1928, from the Secretary of State to the Canadian minister)

SIR: I have the honor to receive your note of April 5, 1928, with reference to the negotiations between the Canadian Government and the United States looking to the construction of the deep St. Lawrence waterway. I note your suggestion that the position of the United States has been made sufficiently clear and definite to permit the Government of Canada to take the necessary steps contemplated and to discuss with the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec the aspects in question. I entirely agree with you that there is no reason why at this time the Government of Canada should not take up such discussion with the Provinces.

I note also that His Majesty's Government of Canada suggests that it would be advisable that definite and agreed engineering proposals for the development of the international section would appear to be necessary preliminary to any computation of costs or decision as to the order of construction or division of tasks and that a conference should be held between the Canadian section of the joint board and engineers representing the Province of Ontario. Further, that it would be advisable that such a conference should be followed by reconsideration of the engineering problems in the international section by the whole joint board. Of course, the Government of the United States fully realizes the desirability of the Canadian Government's consultation with the Provinces and with the Canadian section of the Joint Board of Engineers. The United States section of the joint board will be prepared at any time to take up with the full board and discuss and reconsider engineering problems connected with the construction of the international section. I have the honor to suggest, however, that it would seem as though the entire subject of treaty negotiation need not be postponed until the termination of these discussions and of the reconsideration by the Joint Board of Engineers, and that it might be desirable for the negotiations to go on concurrently with the examination of such engineers as their advice and assistance would be necessary. The United States will be prepared to cooperate to the fullest extent with the Canadian Government at any time for the purpose of accomplishing the improvement contemplated.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

MINNESOTA A LEADER IN THIS PROJECT

My own State of Minnesota takes a peculiar pride in the St. Lawrence waterway project.

It was in Minnesota that the idea originated.

Minnesota was the first State in which the legislature officially declared for the project.

At Grand Forks, N. Dak., I had the privilege of presenting testimony to the members of the International Joint Commission, who, acting for the two Governments—Canada and the United States—sought information bearing on the economic service that the St. Lawrence waterway might render.

The interest of a Minnesotan, therefore, in this great work can be readily understood.

STATE LEGISLATURES ASSIST

Since its inception, 22 States by legislative enactment have associated themselves in this movement. These States are Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Oregon, South Carolina, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Washington.

Here is a notable array of great Commonwealths of our country, embracing in area more than one-half of continental United States. Joined to this great area and working in cooperation with the representatives of these 22 States is another noteworthy group, that of the New England Council of Thirty which includes a committee of five from each of the six New England States.

Consider for a moment the financial, industrial, agricultural, and commercial importance of these 28 States. Remember also, the territory in Canada that is beneficially affected by this project. The total area includes the major portion of the entire North American Continent. The zone of benefits embraces nearly 50,000,000 people in city and in country.

HISTORICAL REVIEW OF ACHIEVEMENTS

I will not attempt a detailed statement of what has been accomplished, as that would take too long. A brief historical review, however, will serve to bring the present status into bolder outline. The present movement for connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean for the uninterrupted movement of ocean-borne commerce via the St. Lawrence River had its beginning with an address by Charles P. Craig, the present executive director of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association before a large civic dinner in the city of Duluth, in January, 1919.

This was followed by a call by him upon the governors of border Lake States to authorize the sending of delegates to attend an organization meeting in the city of Washington in February of the same year. At this meeting, with six States represented, the formal organization was effected. Coincident with this organization meeting, there was initiated through I. L. Lenroot, at that time United States Senator from Wisconsin, the amendment to the rivers and harbors bill, providing for a joint engineering board to study the engineering features, and a reference of the economic phases of the project to the International Joint Commission, a permanent tribunal existing under the treaty of 1909, between the United States and Canada. This in turn, was followed by a number of extended conferences in Canada leading to their concurrence in such references.

FIRST MEETING OF THE ASSOCIATION

The first meeting of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association for discussion and adoption of a program occurred in Chicago, April, 1919. Since that date the association has gradually expanded until to-day it comprises 22 sovereign States, as has already been said.

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

From that day until the present the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association has functioned as an association for the single purpose set forth in the statement of principles, as adopted at its organization meeting. I quote this article:

The general purpose of this association shall be to bring the Atlantic to the heart of the continent through connecting the heart of the Great Lakes with tidewater, via the St. Lawrence River, and for such purpose cooperate with the Dominion of Canada in what the Dominion is now so unselfishly engaged in doing to that end, and to secure like cooperation with the Dominion and her navigation and power interests in the further development and canalization of the St. Lawrence River and the rivers connecting the Great Lakes to a depth sufficient to accommodate ocean-going vessels of at least 30-foot draft, and also the development and utilization of the possible potential power development of these international waters in connection therewith and to use all lawful and proper means within the power of this association to—and in the shortest possible time—accomplish the purposes stated.

LATER EVENTS

Later events followed in rapid succession.

First. Cooperation was secured from the Canadian Government to enter upon a joint study of the engineering and economic factors involved in the project.

Second. The International Joint Commission held 44 hearings in 16 States of the United States and in 5 Provinces of Canada, with more than 300 citizens giving testimony.

Third. This commission submitted a unanimous report on the economic phases and recommended the immediate undertaking on the part of the two Governments. During this period the importance and economic necessity of the project were kept constantly before the administration in the United States.

Fourth. An enlarged international board of engineers undertook early in 1925 a further study of the engineering questions. This board submitted a report signed by every member of the board.

Fifth. The St. Lawrence Commission of the United States was appointed by President Coolidge on March 14, 1924, to advise upon development of a shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ST. LAWRENCE COMMISSION

The recommendations made by the St. Lawrence Commission of the United States were final and conclusive. I quote their conclusions:

First. The construction of the shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea is imperative both for the relief and for the future development of a vast area in the interior of the continent.

Second. The shipway should be constructed on the St. Lawrence route, provided suitable agreement can be made for its joint undertaking with the Dominion of Canada.

Third. That the development of the power resources of the St. Lawrence should be undertaken by appropriate agencies.

Fourth. That negotiations should be entered into with Canada and an endeavor made to arrive at agreement upon all these subjects. In such negotiations the United States should recognize the proper relations of New York to the power development in the international section.

COMMERCE THAT WILL BE BENEFITED

A very significant part of the economic findings of benefits that would result from the building of the St. Lawrence seaway have been prepared by the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association. No one presumes to say that all the products mentioned will move via the waterway when it is opened, but it is held, and with good reason, that all the products named, whether they move via the St. Lawrence waterway or not, will share in the benefits which a cheap major transportation route will bring to the interior of the continent. They will have the benefit of sea rates. They will have an option between such sea rates and such direct ocean movement and the present land and ocean rates via the Atlantic coast.

GREAT PROGRESS MADE

Each year witnessed headway and progress. As was to be expected, there were objections raised. They came from certain quarters in both the United States and from Canada. The opposition from Canada to the development of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes as a seaway for the commerce of the world to unlock mid-western Canada and the United States can be summarized as follows:

The first was that joint control would be required. Second, that it is a power project and not purely navigation. Third, that the port of Montreal would be jeopardized. Fourth, that the cost of the St. Lawrence deep waterway would be too great.

There also arose opposition within the United States, but to this the report of the Secretary of War and the recommendations of the St. Lawrence Commission gave a convincing answer.

OBJECTIONS WERE MET

Let us consider briefly the objections that were advanced from the Canadian side regarding joint control. The reply is that joint usage prevails now. In the treaty of 1871 the right of citizens of the United States was granted to navigate the waters of the St. Lawrence to the sea. Just 88 years previously, in 1783, a treaty was signed providing that navigation of the River Mississippi shall forever remain free and open to the subjects of Great Britain and to the citizens of the United States. There remained no issue on this point.

POWER TO BE DEVELOPED IS A BY-PRODUCT

The power that will be available when the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway is completed is a by-product that will be of great value to both Canada and the United States. The development of 5,000,000 horsepower of water power is a potential asset that goes a long ways toward making this project financially feasible. Both countries will divide the power along the international boundary. The investment for power will pay for itself. The chief benefit of the deep-waterway development is and will always be transportation relief. Twenty-two States, with a population of 40,000,000 people, all of whom are far removed from any possibility of direct benefit from the power developed, are insistently demanding transportation relief and looking to the joint action of the two nations in constructing the St. Lawrence ship channel as bringing about that relief.

What other interest has Minnesota, the first State to broach this project? And Iowa, and the two Dakotas, and Wisconsin, and Illinois? And so I could go through the entire list of 22 States. They seek lower transportation rates. That is their objective.

OBJECTIONS BY MONTREAL

Much has been said and written about the port Montreal and the effect of the improvement of the St. Lawrence on that city. Any increase in the general prosperity of Canada would certainly not injure Montreal. It is inevitable that this improvement shall be made. The taxpayers of the entire Dominion have furnished a large sum of money to improve the St. Lawrence River up to Montreal. The taxpayers now demand that the entire course to the international boundary be made a waterway of sufficient draft to accommodate large ocean-going vessels.

DIVISION OF COST

As to the cost, the cost of the Welland Canal will be credited Canada as part of the whole scheme of the improvement of the St. Lawrence. The total cost of the St. Lawrence project is estimated at $123,000,000. One-half of this $123,000,000, or $61,500,000, would be Canada's share in the cost. If Canada gets credit for half the cost of the New Welland Canal, or $57,000,000, and this be deducted from the half of the $123,000,000, it would leave only the difference for Canada to provide, namely, $4,500,000. Even if the engineers' estimates are appreciably higher, the cost to Canada can not but be regarded as trifling in comparison to the great benefits to Canada's prairie Provinces and her industrial Provinces bordering the Great Lakes.

I have touched briefly upon the international phase and the objections that have been raised from time to time by persons speaking for our neighbors on the north in Canada.

CANADA AND UNITED STATES SEEK A SEAWAY

We have passed the day when this project can be classed as a myth. The old cry of "Wolf, wolf," featuring water power as the whole objective, is also outworn. Twenty-two States of the United States and the greater portion of the Dominion of Canada seek relief to ship cheaply out by the St. Lawrence rather than as now via the all-rail routes, with rail rates steadily rising, or else by water to Lake Erie and then rail to Atlantic Ocean ports.

And why? Because the rail haul from Lake Erie to Atlantic points, some 400 miles, costs exactly what the average rate is for the 3,200 miles across the ocean.

Low-cost water transportation facilities lie along the border of both these countries awaiting the dredge and the mighty army of workmen to fashion it into use. The land-locked empire in the great mid-west of the United States and Canada must be opened to the sea. It is the duty of both nations to see that this is done. The United States has already expended nearly $50,000,000 in improving portions of this waterway. Canada has spent over $250,000,000. A great deal has already been done.

PROMPT ACTION IS WANTED

The interest of 40,000,000 people is behind the deep waterway movement. Now that the preliminary negotiations are completed, prompt action is wanted. The task now is to begin the actual work of drafting the treaty and to secure its ratification by the two countries. Nothing should interfere with this.

The history of past relations with Canada is one of fine cooperation and of mutual respect. In this project the interest of a large part of the population of both countries is so vital and the economic stake is of such great value that there can be no valid reason for delay.

ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES M. BECK

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by Representative BECK of Pennsylvania at the recent meeting of the Sons of the Revolution in Washington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by permission of the House, I insert an address delivered at the Jefferson Day dinner of the Sons of the Revolution by Hon. James M. Beck, president of the Washington Chapter of the society, in Washington, on April 12, 1928.

The address is as follows:

THE MEMORY OF JEFFERSON

My fellow members, we are met on the eve of a great anniversary. To-morrow will be the one hundred and eighty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. It would be strange, indeed, if the Sons of the Revolution failed to note the natal day of the author of the Declaration of Independence. Such a commemoration is a debt not only to the dead but to the unborn.

Thomas Jefferson was the most successful politician that the American Commonwealth has yet given to the world. I used the word "politician" in its original and nobler sense, for, as the late Thomas B. Reed once aptly said, "A statesman is only a dead politician." For a quarter of a century he dominated the politics of this country as no other man has before or since. His extraordinary career is the more remarkable, for apparently his equipment for leadership was slight. His personality had none of the leonine majesty of the greatest of Virginians, who impressed men as the aged Lear did the intrepid Kent, in having that which men obeyed, "authority." His was not the handsome presence and magnetic personality of his great rival, Alexander Hamilton, that Admirable Crichton of our history. Nor did he have the analytical mind of John Marshall. He was not an orator like Henry or Adams. A shy, diffident man, he hated the "morbid rage of debate," rarely spoke in public, and when he did his voice quickly became husky and inarticulate. He was by temperament and choice a philosopher and philanthropist and was most happy when "far from the madding crowd." He loved his garden more than the councils of the mighty, and yet, paradoxical as it may seem, he was the most aggressive and militant leader of a political party that our history has known.

A successful political career was furthermore the more improbable in his case, as Jefferson was the born idealist. This can be seen if we contrast what the Declaration of Independence would have been if Franklin, Hamilton, or Marshall, instead of Jefferson, had been its draftsman. Franklin would have restricted it to a utilitarian discussion of the advantage to foreign nations of assisting in the creation of a new government and weakening the power of the British Empire. He would also have enlivened his discussion of practical politics with a touch of humor which would have increased the gaiety of nations. Hamilton or Marshall would have restricted the declaration to an analytical statement of the constitutional principle involved in taxing the colonies without the consent of the legal legislators.

Jefferson, however, sounds in the very opening sentence a keynote of such lofty moral purpose that the literature of State documents of that time can be searched without a fitting parallel. In an age when might made right and international morality barely existed, he broadly asserted that a nation, which resorts to force, must justify itself upon moral grounds at the bar of the nations, for "a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation."

Mark the word "requires." This assumes that there is a law of right and wrong, which, standing higher than laws, precedents, and conventions, regulates the relations of nations as well as individuals. It avows its belief in a great human conscience which, rising above the interests of nations and races, would approve the right and condemn the wrong.

The concluding portion of the declaration further recognizes that even above the conscience of mankind was the Ruler of Nations, by its solemn appeal "to the Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of our intentions." The enthusiasm of the idealist is further indicated in the sweeping statement that it is a self-evident truth that "all men are born equal," although no truth is less self-evident and, except in a restricted and purely political sense, it was not a reality then and is not now. In this respect Jefferson was again a great human paradox, for this inspired idealist was one of the most practical statesmen of his or any time.

Idealists are generally supposed to be out of place in practical politics. Shakespeare's wonderful character study of Brutus illustrates this by suggesting that if Cassius, the practical politician, had headed the progressive movement in ancient Rome, instead of the noble idealist, Brutus, there might have been a different result. The contrast between the two characters is finely pointed in the quarrel scene, when Brutus speaks of the assassination of the foremost man of all that time as in the nature of a holy sacrifice, while Cassius says—like every practical politician in a crisis—

> "At such a time as this it is not meet
> That every nice offense should bear his comment."

Did Shakespeare intend to satirize the occasional unconscious inconsistency of some sincere idealists in this same scene, when he makes Brutus quarrel with Cassius for the latter's failure to give Brutus money to pay his legions, while criticizing the methods by which Cassius obtained the tainted money?

Jefferson's ruling passion and dominant characteristic was that of the student. No one of his time, with the exception of Franklin, ever gave so much of a life to intellectual pursuits. From early boyhood until his latest hours, he remained the unwearying and zealous student of the great subjects which challenge the attention of the human intellect. A valued correspondent of four great colleges, the successor of Franklin as president of the American Philosophical Society, he crowned his most useful life by founding the University of Virginia, upon lines so broad and catholic as to anticipate many of the most valued improvements in education. Art, music, literature, history, politics, science, agriculture, philosophy, religion, all engaged his thoughts, and of these, the great library, which in the days of his poverty he was compelled to sell to the Government, is a demonstration. In those days men did not buy books as decorative furniture, but each book was bought to read and study.

It required 16 wagons to transport his 10,000 books to Washington, and it was found that they were written in many languages and comprised in their sweep nearly every department of intellectual activity. When he planned the great university, his idea of the curriculum was botany, chemistry, zoology, anatomy, surgery, medicine, natural philosophy, agriculture, mathematics, astronomy, biography, politics, commerce, history, ethics, the law, the industrial and the fine arts, and in all of these his versatile mind took an intelligent interest. Few men in recorded history have been more versatile. In this respect he is only surpassed in his century by Franklin, and he belongs to the class of universal genius of which Franklin and Leonardo da Vinci were the greatest illustrations. Here was a man who could supervise a farm, study nature like a scientist, make useful inventions, draw the plans for a mansion or a public building with the detail of a practical architect, play a Mozart minuet on the violin, ride after the hounds, write a brief, or manage an intricate law case, draft State papers of exceptional importance, and conduct correspondence with distinguished men in half a dozen languages upon questions of history, law, ethics, politics, science, literature, and the fine arts. To him the ancient classics were "a sublime luxury," and he thanked God that He had given him in his early education this great source of delight. One of his recreations was the reading of Homer in its melodious original. His linguistic studies included Latin, Greek, French, Spanish, Italian, and Gaelic. With his all-absorbing love of study, his unflagging intellectual activity, and his natural preference for a scholar's seclusion, he would have been in more peaceful times a philosopher or scientist or a president of a college or university.

The general tendency is to associate the subjective literary faculty with a certain atrophy of the will and a clouding of the judgment. Excessive mental activity does tend to destroy the equilibrium which should prevail between the subjective and the objective faculties of the mind. In this respect, Jefferson's extraordinary career seems to contradict the common experience of life and leads us to repeat our inquiry, What was the secret of his unequaled success? How did he, the intellectual recluse, become, in the apt language of one of his contemporaries, "the most delightful destroyer of dust and cobwebs that his time has ever known?"

I find that secret primarily in his sturdy optimism—in the fact that he believed in the work which he attempted to do, in his own ability to do it, in its significance in the predestined advancement of humanity and in the ability and disposition of his fellow men to follow a true leader. Even these qualities would have availed but little had not his work of establishing democracy synchronized with the spirit of the times. He was the most successful leader of the masses, because he understood their higher inspirations and best voiced their then inarticulate voice.

Democracy is still a prophecy and of its many prophets few surpass Jefferson in real achievement. This is far from saying that he brought about the democratic era with which the nineteenth century began. To that mighty development, many illustrious men and uncounted millions of unknown men had contributed in the long centuries before the emancipation of the masses. The first American democrat was Franklin, but, in that darkest hour before the dawn, Jefferson played the rôle of Chanticleer—his clarion call to wider freedom, while not causing the reddening skies, yet proclaimed the morn. In this is his transcendent merit.

From his earliest manhood Jefferson best voiced the spirit of his time by proclaiming eternal warfare against every tyranny over the mind of man. Only nine days before his death he again showed his unconquerable faith in the triumph of the cause, to which he had dedicated his life, when he wrote for the fiftieth anniversary of the great Declaration, upon which he was destined to die:

"All eyes are opened or opening to the rights of man. The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth that the masses of mankind have not been born with saddles on their backs nor a favored few booted and spurred ready to ride them legitimately by the grace of God."

Jefferson truly had the "oversoul," of which Emerson wrote, "the personality that neither flatters nor fails, and which never appeals from itself but believes in itself." It consisted in that faith which can "remove mountains" and "overcome the world," for he powerfully aided in removing mountains of old customs and habits of thought and overcame a world, in which the common man had had but too little opportunity. The world has no use for half-hearted men. Its prizes are for those who throw their whole soul into their work, and with the devouring fire of determination and energy consume the obstacles which lie in their path. Such was the spirit of Thomas Jefferson. He met responsibility halfway. He rejoiced as a strong man to run his course.

To succeed in life, moreover, we must not only have faith in ourselves and in our work but in our fellow men. Democracy has proved a great leveler, and if a man has a public work to do he had better not commence with the premise that he is of a superior caste. Jefferson believed passionately in the people. While he did not regard them as infallible and never assumed that the oil of anointing had fallen from the head of the monarch and conferred infallibility upon the multitudinous tongue of the people, yet, with a passionate fervor which was with him as a religion, he believed that the common sense of the majority could be better trusted than the interested views of a property-holding class. Speaking to his neighbors of Albemarle on returning from France in 1790, he said:

"The will of the majority, the natural law of every society, is the only sure guardian of the rights of man. Perhaps even this may sometimes err, but its errors are honest, solitary, and short lived."

In his first inaugural he said:

"If there be any among us who would wish to dissolve this Union or change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the sanity with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it."

I have already quoted the optimistic prediction which he made nine days before his death, to be read on the fiftieth anniversary of the great Declaration, when, with trembling hand but with a buoyant and eternally youthful heart, he wrote: "All eyes are opened or opening to the rights of man."

Viewed in the colder light of a later age, his countless critics have charged him with having been excessively suspicious of his opponents' motives, but it must never be forgotten that, throughout the whole of his long public career, his political opponents continuously impugned Jefferson's motives and denounced him as a demagogue, a Jacobin, an atheist, and an anarchist. For many years he accepted with heroic composure a greater storm of abuse than was possibly ever visited upon any public man in our history, and if, in his later years, his pent-up spirit found bitter and at times unjust expression in his later writings, something must be allowed to a proud spirit who had for so many years accepted insult without reply. If the furious tempest of his times occasionally drove him from his true course, let it be remembered that only one of his contemporaries—the great-souled Washington—always remained true to the north star.

The greatest inconsistency charged against Jefferson was his acquisition of "Louisiana"—meaning thereby the whole trans-Mississippi region—in supposed violation of his own construction of the Constitution, but this may be due to a misconception of his position and it is possible that if his critics, comprising in this respect most historians, had been as good constitutional lawyers as was Jefferson, they would recognize that Jefferson, in this greatest achievement of his whole career, was more consistent than his critics have supposed.

The problem of acquiring new territory was a new one, and in solving the problem of Louisiana, Jefferson was treading an unbeaten path. He appreciated the enormous importance of the opportunity. He wrote to Monroe:

"On the event of this mission depends the future destinies of this Republic."

And again he wrote to Livingston:

"We are satisfied nothing else will secure us against a war at no distant period."

His opponents opposed the acquisition as in violation of the Constitution, and certain passages in Jefferson's letters apparently indicate that he believed that it would be better for the country to avail itself of an unrivaled opportunity to complete our continental domain even if its constitutionality was doubtful, especially as he felt complete confidence in a subsequent ratification of the acquisition by the American people.

It is, however, inaccurate to say—as nearly all historians have said—that Jefferson had reached the definite conclusion that it was unconstitutional to acquire Louisiana without a constitutional amendment. In his letter to Gallatin, written in January, 1803, he thus aptly states his real conviction:

"You are right in my opinion as to Mr. Lincoln's proposition. There is no constitutional difficulty as to the acquisition of territory and whether, when acquired, it may be taken into the Union by the Constitution as it now stands will become a question of expediency. I think it will be safer not to permit the enlargement of the Union but by amendment of the Constitution."

In other words, Jefferson believed that it was constitutional to acquire Louisiana as territory, but that it was of doubtful constitutionality to incorporate it into the Federal compact without an amendment, and this distinction between "acquisition" and "incorporation" was the very distinction which the Supreme Court subsequently recognized in the insular cases.

Jefferson was more sagacious than his critics; and to-day this constitutional distinction is familiar to us under which we hold the Philippines and Porto Rico as colonial dependencies without admitting them into the Federal Union considered as a constitutional compact.

Without suggesting that Mr. Jefferson was never guilty of inconsistencies—for a successful political career is only too apt to involve at times a compromise of conviction—yet the judicious historian will recognize that Jefferson was as consistently loyal to his lofty political ideals as any public man of our history, with the single exception of Washington.

Freely recognizing his failings and errors, they were far outweighed by his transcendent merits. His idealistic abstractions have turned the world upside down. If it be true, and I think it is, that they have done a great deal of harm, yet it is also true that they have done even greater good. They gave the common man hope and inspiration. The level of the human race was appreciably raised by Jefferson.

As one of his most engaging biographers, Parton, has well said:

"He defended the honor of the human intellect when its natural foes throughout Christendom conspired to revile, degrade, and crush it. He enjoyed his existence and made it a benefaction to his kind."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, a rule will be presented within a few minutes for the consideration of the flood control bill. In order that the discussion of this bill may be consecutive I have been requested by a number of gentlemen on both sides of the aisle to ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that business on Calendar Wednesday to-morrow be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what committee has the call?

Mr. TILSON. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and this is agreeable to that committee, I am told.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 165

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3740, an act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 12 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the legislation made in order under this rule is the most important matter that has been brought before this House since the declaration of war about 11 years ago. This legislation provides for the most gigantic undertaking in construction and engineering that any government in the civilized world has ever undertaken. It is most far-reaching in every respect and has a most important bearing upon the economic life of a large portion of our country; it is much larger and will cost four times as much as the Panama Canal.

This legislation should receive the most careful and considerate attention of every Member of this House. All of the hysteria of the times and all of the propaganda which has been brought about in whole-page advertisements in daily newspapers of the country should be forgotten for the present and this legislation should be considered entirely on the merits of the situation. We should try to do what is absolutely right to the people who live in the flood-stricken areas of the Mississippi River and at the same time we should be careful to remember that we men represent constituencies in every part of this country and that we must do justice to them.

This rule provides for 12 hours of general debate. Perhaps we may need more time, but we have limited the general debate to 12 hours because we appreciate the fact that under the five-minute rule, on account of various amendments which will be offered and important discussions on various paragraphs of the bill, the time will necessarily be liberal. The six hours to be controlled by the proponents of the bill will be in charge of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REID], the chairman of the committee; the time in opposition, it is expected, will be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], and it has been agreed between Mr. FREAR and the Rules Committee that he will immediately yield 1 hour and 15 minutes of his time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], who is very much opposed to certain provisions in the bill.

This bill does not necessarily meet the entire approval of all of the members of the Rules Committee, but we well appreciate the fact that it is a very important national problem and that it is vitally necessary to have legislation at the earliest possible date. Therefore, we have brought this rule on the floor at this time.

Speaking personally, I have been very much interested in this flood-control situation. I was interested enough so that I took two weeks' time, at my own expense, and visited this area. I tried in a limited length of time to get as much information as the average layman could get. I went over the whole proposition from Memphis to New Orleans. I saw the main breaks in the river; I saw devastated areas and similar country that was not reached by the flood, for purpose of making comparison. I visited with a great many of the people in that section of the country and I found them representing a high grade and fine quality of citizenship. From the talks I had with the various people in that section I did not think they had in mind to ask of Congress anything but what was absolutely right, not only to themselves but to the other parts of the country.

The Flood Control Committee has worked long and laboriously on this proposition. They had one of the biggest and most complicated problems that has ever been presented to any committee of Congress, and it can not be a matter of surprise that they were unable to bring in a bill that would meet with the unanimous approval of every member of the committee or of every Member of this House. On the whole, I know they have done the best they could, and we are willing to bring this proposition on the floor of the House, have it properly debated and carefully considered, with the intention that when this bill is finally completed it will be one that will fairly represent the views of the Members of the House, be fair to the devastated area, and meet with the approval of the people of the whole country. While I do not intend to discuss the bill in detail, I want to call attention to some features that I think are essential to be contained in the bill.

I feel it is of the greatest importance that this work should be done by the Board of Army Engineers and under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers.

I met the representatives of the War Department on the Mississippi River when I was down there, and I doubt if you can find anywhere in this country men of greater ability, experience, or better qualified to carry on this work. They are men who are giving the best of their whole lives to this proposition, men who are deeply interested and want to solve the problem. There are no men better trained in every respect to do this work than the men who are in charge of the work at the present time, and I speak especially of Major Connelly, Major Lee, and Major Holcombe. If I recall correctly, these are the three men in charge of the three divisions of the Federal work on the Mississippi River. If these gentlemen and the people they represent have charge of this work, you need not fear any graft or irregularities creeping into the work. Their heart and soul is in it, and you can depend upon it that they will do what is right to the best of their knowledge and ability for the local communities and the people of the whole United States.

I am also very strongly in favor of the principle of local contribution. That principle has never yet been abandoned, and I am strongly opposed to doing it now. In my judgment the people who receive the major part of the benefits are entitled to pay a little bit more than the average citizen of the United States.

In taking this position I do not want to put a single burden on any man or on any community that it is not able to bear, and I have thought that when the President of the United States recommended an economic commission to study the whole proposition and report back what the various communities are able to pay in connection with this work this was absolutely fair and sound in every respect, and no sound-minded or fair-thinking man should oppose it. One of the main reasons it is claimed these people should not pay anything is because they are not able to pay; no man so far has said he was against the principle. If this commission reported back that such and such a community is not able to bear any part of the expense, well and good; if another community could pay 5 per cent, all right; if still another could pay one-third, we could act accordingly; this would cover the situation; and to my mind this is absolutely fair in every respect; and in informal conversations I had with various representatives in that part of the country not one of them ever advanced the idea to me that he expected to get out without making any special contribution to these improved works. It is against our fixed policy and should not be done at this time.

I also feel that all the land for the levees on the main stream and also on the by-passes or spillways should certainly be furnished by the local people. If the States or the localities buy this land, every man on the floor of this House well knows it will be purchased for 25 per cent of what it would cost if the Federal Government goes in there with carte blanche authority to buy the land and bear the entire burden. You must get some local cooperation, or you will more than double all the costs.

I want this bill so drafted that it will contain all the safeguards necessary for the Federal Government. If we go down there and furnish protection to these people—and I assume it is a national responsibility—I do not want to have anything left out of the bill that would protect us now and for all time to come. I for one do not want to open up a situation that will cause thousands of lawsuits for damages against the Federal Government in the next 10, 20, or 50 years. We are entitled to have all of these provisions in the bill, and the American people will not forgive you if you fail to put them in when you have the opportunity. I feel after this bill is properly discussed on the floor, and every man has given it the attention is entitled to, we will improve the bill; and I hope we will finally pass a bill that every man in this House can get squarely behind and say that we have passed a constructive piece of legislation, such a piece of legislation that will not only be approved by the people of the whole country at the present time but in all time to come. That is what I hope will be the result of the consideration of this legislation at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] such time as he may need.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the rule. This tremendous subject, one of the very greatest, certainly, that the Government has ever attempted to grapple with in all its history, is entitled to consideration, and the rule, I think, provides an entirely fair method for its consideration. The time which is allowed for the general debate seems to be satisfactory to all interested.

Therefore I deem it unnecessary to talk about the rule, but in view of the fact I shall not wish to trespass upon the time for general debate which will be under the control of the members of the Flood Control Committee, I will at this moment take advantage of the opportunity which comes to me as a member of the Rules Committee to once more call the attention of my colleagues to an omission from the bill which, at a later period in its consideration, I shall feel it to be my very solemn duty to try to cure.

It just so happens that practically the entire flooded area of one of the States bordering upon the Mississippi River, my own State of Tennessee, lies within the congressional district which I have the honor to represent.

The Jadwin plan is made the basis of the present measure. In so far as the engineering phases of the problem are concerned it is proposed to have the Jadwin plan become the official plan of Congress. In this plan there is nowhere any provision or suggestion for doing anything in regard to the State of Tennessee except to bring further injury upon her, nor is there in the bill, as it passed the Senate and as it has been reported from the House committee, any provision dealing in any effective way whatsoever with this omission from the plan which is made the basis of the work that is to be done. The only thing in the bill as it passed the Senate and as it has been reported by the committee that even squints in this direction, is section 11, and I wish to insert the verbiage of section 11 at this point in my remarks, as follows:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of War shall cause the Mississippi River Commission to make an examination and survey of the Mississippi River below Cape Girardeau, Mo., (a) at places where levees have heretofore been constructed on one side of the river and the lands on the opposite side have been thereby subjected to greater overflow, and where, without unreasonably restricting the flood channel, levees can be constructed to reduce the extent of this overflow, and where the construction of such levees is economically justified, and report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable with such recommendations as the commission may deem advisable; (b) with a view to determining the estimated effects, if any, upon lands lying between the river and adjacent hills by reason of overflow of such lands caused by the construction of levees at other points along the Mississippi River, and determining the equities of the owners of such lands and the value of the same, and the commission shall report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable with such recommendation as it may deem advisable: Provided, That inasmuch as the Mississippi River Commission made a report on the 26th day of October, 1912, recommending a levee to be built from Tiptonville, Tenn., to the Obion River in Tennessee, the said Mississippi River Commission is authorized to make a resurvey of said proposed levee and a relocation of the same if necessary, and if such levee is found feasible, and is approved by the board created in section 1 of this act, the commission is authorized to build same out of appropriations hereafter to be made.

An analysis of this section immediately discloses that it does nothing definite even in the matter of constructing one possible levee, nor does it do anything whatsoever of a definite character with regard to the compensation or the working out of the equities of that part of Tennessee which is incapable of being leveed but which will be injured by the constructions upon the west bank that will throw upon us water which does not belong there by nature.

I should certainly be very recreant in my opinion to the duties which I owe the people of my section if I did not do all within my power to bring about in this bill a definite commitment which will give to us at least equality of justice with all other sections down the great stream affected by the bill.

And so at the proper time I shall have an amendment to offer. I can not conceive it possible that in entering on this great plan, which it is proposed to make a national one, at least by many, that the Congress, when it appreciates the physical problems that confront us and the equities we have, will not gladly join in caring for that situation.

If it should be necessary, if the bill takes the form that it may take should the suggestions of the gentleman from New York be followed and the policy of local contribution is definitely indorsed, then I think I shall be able to demonstrate that under that plan there would be an obligation of the Government to meet the situation in Tennessee, at least pro tanto bearing in mind always that there is nothing in the proposed engineering plan that is to benefit the State in any way, but is all to the injury of the State.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that is all I care to say at this time. It is a matter of great importance to a large number of people in one of the States of the Union. I have taken advantage of this time to say what I have heretofore said to many of my colleagues. The situation is perfectly understood by the Committee on Flood Control, and I give notice that when the stage of amendments is reached I shall hope to offer an amendment that I think will protect our rights, doing justice to our State.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Can the gentleman give us some information as to the nature of his amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will gladly give the gentleman the idea of it. Of course, the gentleman understands that the wording of it will necessarily depend on the form the bill may take. My thought is, without undertaking to give the wording of the amendment, that where under this general plan works are constructed upon one bank of a stream, and those works cause injury to property upon the other side of the stream, that the same rule that it is proposed to apply to compensation for flood rights and for property rights on the side where the works are built should be applied to the opposite side, because the opposite side of the stream will be taken as a flood way without there being any work done upon it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Are there other States that occupy a similar position?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Sections of other States—Mississippi and Louisiana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. What reason did the Flood Control Committee assign for not granting the relief that the gentleman asked for?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The committee as a committee has not assigned to me any reason I will say to the gentleman. There have been many private discussions between myself and individual members of the committee, and I have a strong suspicion as to the source of opposition, but I do not believe that there is a member of the committee who will say that there is any argument against it. Of course I can not speak for all of them, but I dare say that there will not be throughout the debate any member of the committee who will have anything to say against the justice of working out something—whether they will be satisfied with the amendment I shall offer I can not say.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would not this be assumed to be property damages and payment be made under the provision for flood rights?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think I could demonstrate that the people of Tennessee would have good cause to ask for compensation even if you required local contributions in other sections.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As a matter of law?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As a matter of equity.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REID] chairman of the committee.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am only going to take five minutes on the rule, and I only do that because of what the chairman of the Rules Committee has said. I did not understand that it was the province of the chairman of the Rules Committee to attempt to argue the merits of the bill. His entire time, it seems to me, was devoted to an argument against doing away with local contributions. The committee has worked hard and long on this bill. We do not claim that it is a perfect bill.

I do not want any Member of this House to be prejudiced before he hears the arguments pro and con. Every position that we will bring to you we expect to maintain, not only by sound logic, but by solid facts. There have been a great many supercommittees working on this bill. I have tried to please as many as I could, but up to date we have not been able to please our own committee. Consequently, if we seem to be in different rôles during the debate, we shall expect you to bear with us. We expect to squarely meet the issue, and the only way that we can do it is to have the bill brought in under a rule.

Mr. Speaker, this problem is bigger than any man or set of men in this Congress. It affects the entire Nation, not directly affecting alone a small portion of the Nation, the South. It is the view of the committee, after long debate and many hearings, that any flood-control project that has local contribution as a basis is doomed to failure. For that reason the bill is reported in the way in which it is now. This bill was passed unanimously by the Senate and reported out of our committee with only one dissenting voice. When the House goes into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider this bill, I want every Member of the House to be on the job and hear for himself and decide for himself; and if he does, then I have faith that we shall decide this question right. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we want any more time at present on the resolution. I move the previous question on the resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NATIONAL RIFLE MATCHES

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8550) to amend the national defense act, with a Senate amendment thereto, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8550) to amend the national defense act, with a Senate amendment thereto, and moves to concur in the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent for control of the time in accordance with the statement I made in presenting the rule, namely, that six hours be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REID] four and three-quarters hours by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] and one and one-quarter hours by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that of the 12 hours assigned for general debate under the rule, six be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REID] four and three-quarters by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] and one and one-quarter by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3740.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3740, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, one year ago to-day the people of America were stunned by the news of the crevassing of the levees along the Mississippi River at Dorena, Mo. One year ago to-day began the record-breaking flood of 1927 in the valley of the mighty river, which, before its waters had receded months later, was to lay waste with death-dealing desolation a veritable empire and to shock this Nation by what was called America's greatest peace-time disaster. It must indeed be the hand of fate which directs us to a consideration of this measure upon the first anniversary of that event, and its passage must surely be certain if we but turn back our minds to the scenes of those terrible hours and determine our course from what then happened.

The Mississippi River, when in flood, is a constant menace to those who make their homes behind the levees. In many cases the homes, stores, barns, and other buildings are away below the flood level. When the levee breaks, a raging torrent—60,000,000 horsepower—rushes across the country like a tidal wave, sweeping everything before it.

From Arkansas to Louisiana the swirling waters of the Mississippi carried on its tide animals, fences, bridges, houses, barns, outbuildings, trees, and lumber, a huge mass of wreckage. Levees crumbled as the onrushing water sped along its path and all was panic. Crawling up from the waters to the levee tops came thousands of wild animals and snakes and reptiles, seeking safety and all unmindful of man's presence.

There was devastation and destruction everywhere, Mr. Chairman; there was human suffering and anguish, but there was also heroism and fortitude and courage. Throughout the long vigil men stood guard days and nights upon the levees, working desperately, ceaselessly, and tirelessly, hoping to maintain these bulwarks against the flood waters.

I wish to pay a tribute to the indomitable courage of the people of that stricken area, who amid the wreckage and ruin of their homes and property have never lost heart, and are still hoping to rehabilitate themselves and start life anew.

The sympathy of the American people was aroused, Mr. Chairman. From the President of the United States came the call for aid. The Secretary of Commerce and the Red Cross entered upon the work of rescue and relief. Officers of the Army and the Navy, of the Public Health Service, and the Coast Guard joined the forces of the Veterans' Bureau and the State and local agencies to try to stay the ravages of the great river.

At more than 70 points refugee camps were established by the Red Cross to house a vast army of more than half a million people. To protect against epidemic came the best that science could provide of medicine, drugs, and vaccines, which were administered by doctors and nurses heroically serving without pay.

The sympathetic interest of the American people in the suffering and distress of their fellow citizens in the Mississippi Valley was aroused as never before, and they insist that action be taken that will forever prevent the recurrence of a similar catastrophe.

The 1927 flood could not be passed over as lightly as the former ones. It touched the heart and affected the daily life of nearly every individual in the country. The cry of the valley for help did not fall upon deaf ears, and every person, from the lowliest to the highest, was glad to contribute out of his own pocket for the relief of those unfortunate and destitute people. The Nation during the past year manifested its deep concern in the misery of the people of the valley and is watching with determination to see that its representatives in Congress solve this problem and solve it right.

The problem of flood control has been with this country and before Congress for more than 40 years.

The floods of former years have stricken the people of the South many times, often with as tremendous a force as that of the recent flood, and which were followed by the same untold misery, but never before had their helplessness and their suffering attracted the attention of the entire Nation.

The Flood Control Committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has gone deep into the subject of flood control, and I wish to express my appreciation of the cooperation of the members of the committee, who during three whole months of the hearings, at the practical sacrifice of all other affairs, were constantly in attendance.

The bill now before us is a bill which received a unanimous vote in another body, and has been favorably reported to the House by the Flood Control Committee with only one dissenting vote. It is not a perfect bill by any means, and does not represent the legislation which many members of the committee would prefer to see enacted. But in the interest of the people who are living in constant jeopardy of their lives from the menace of another destructive flood, and after many conferences and compromises, the bill now presented is offered as the best that is attainable at this time.

It provides for the construction of flood-control works in the lower Mississippi Valley only. No flood-control construction is authorized upon any of the tributaries of the Mississippi, but an immedate survey is directed to be made of them, as is a study of the possibilities of controlling the floods on the lower Mississippi River by reservoirs.

There is in the bill no provision for local contribution. There can be none if Congress intends to protect the lives and property of its citizens from these destructive floods. The elemental weakness of the present system, as disclosed by the investigations and reports made by the Government agencies, as well as the extended hearings before the Flood Control Committee, is that the dependence upon local participation has resulted in a weak and unfinished system of levees, and therefore provided no adequate flood protection.

The protection of life and property and the safe conduct of interstate commerce, as well as the protection of the mails, is the solemn obligation and duty of the Government of the United States, and that was the underlying thought which secured the approval of the committee for this bill.

The committee's study and investigation of this question has convinced it that what the people of the Mississippi Valley need is protection of their lives and property while they are following their ordinary pursuits of life. One thing they do not need is to reclaim land from the swamp or overflow areas for agricultural purposes, as many farms adequately protected by levees and free from overflow have been abandoned on account of the general slump in the prices of farm products in this section, the same as in other parts of the United States.

No levee system can be effective unless it is unified, coordinated, and complete, and the failure to pay by local levee districts made the whole plan fail. Nearly every levee district along the Mississippi River is now or will soon be bankrupt. There is no posisble way for them to get money, as they are unable to sell new bonds because of the default on the bonds already issued.

Taking into consideration the fact that many of the landowners are poor and have large families to clothe and feed, that the land is taxed to the limit for drainage and general taxes in addition to the levee taxes, and is heavily mortgaged, and that there are no money crops being raised, it is easy to see that the local interests can not be depended upon to provide any money for flood-control works, and any plan depending upon local contribution is doomed before it starts.

The South is not the only section now aroused to a realization that adequate flood protection must be provided—the East, the North, and the West have come to appreciate the fact that they, too, suffer in full proportion, economically, with the people of the South; moreover, the people of the entire Nation now realize the extent of the loss of life, and what the individual suffering and the loss of homes and property of hundreds of thousands of their fellow citizens has meant. The Nation is at last thoroughly aroused, and to permit this session to pass without enacting measures to prevent the recurrence of another disaster like that of 1927 would bring merited condemnation upon this Congress.

The people of the United States are willing to supply all the money necessary to prevent a recurrence of a flood like that of last year, but are not willing to spend large sums of money for reclamation or navigation at this time.

President Coolidge, in his address at the Budget meeting on June 10, 1927, said of the Mississippi River flood of 1927:

> The vast, fertile, and productive reaches bordering the Mississippi and its tributaries have been subjected to great disaster. The loss of life and property is appalling. * * * Control measures that were considered by all as ample to full protection have proven inadequate. Such a disaster must never happen again.

And in addressing the Union League Club of Philadelphia on November 17, 1927, President Coolidge said:

> Flood control must be completed.

Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis, in an address before the Chicago flood-control conference in June, 1927, said:

> The Mississippi River question is one that can and must be controlled. The Nation whose engineers defied seemingly insurmountable obstacles in building the Panama Canal can and will solve this great and complex problem.

Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, in an address at Little Rock, Ark., June 25, 1927, said:

> The Mississippi flood of 1927 has been a disaster unprecedented in the peace-time history of our Nation.

Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, in an address at the Chicago Flood-Control Conference on June 3, 1927, said:

> The flood of the Mississippi Valley is, in many ways, the most serious catastrophe of its kind in the history of our country. It is less serious only than war itself.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Speaker of the House, in an address before the Chicago Flood-Control Conference in June, 1927, said:

> I believe there is not a man in either the House or the Senate that does not believe and realize that the time has come when the Government of the United States itself must take an active interest and participation not only in the relief of the sufferers but in the prevention of such future catastrophes.

Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, in an address at the Chicago Flood-Control Conference in June, 1927, said:

> We are not penurious. We have been generous with the world. Whenever they have been confronted with a crisis, whenever Congress found itself in session on an occasion where any foreign nation or any foreign people were in trouble like we have been we responded generously to the call, both individually and officially. And we are going to respond to the call of the American people in the Mississippi flood.

But, Mr. Chairman, the memory of man is short, and to-day many people have almost forgotten that catastrophe of only one short year ago, which resulted in the loss of more than 246 lives, drowned out hundreds of cities, towns, and villages, drove 700,000 people from their homes, rendered them objects of charity dependent upon the Red Cross and other agencies, inundated 18,000 square miles, destroyed 1,500,000 farm animals, caused losses amounting to many hundreds of millions of dollars, suspended interstate freight and passenger traffic, prevented telegraph and telephone communication, delayed the United States mails, and paralyzed industry and commerce. In order to bring to our minds again the picture of the problem we have to deal with, I have asked the three members of the Flood Control Committee from the three lower States of the Mississippi Valley which suffered most, to describe the conditions which they saw in their own States. I shall therefore, Mr. Chairman, at this time yield 15 minutes each to Mr. WILSON of Louisiana, Mr. DRIVER of Arkansas, and Mr. WHITTINGTON of Mississippi.

Later I will discuss fully the other phases of this problem. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I realize how difficult it would be within a limited time to enter upon any comprehensive discussion in relation to this, the greatest internal project in America. The picture of the flood losses has been given you by the able chairman of this committee. I wish now for the members of the committee and for the people of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River to extend to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REID] our thanks for his untiring work and for his wonderful ability in developing a record that sustained every contention made by the people of that valley, that the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley is a national problem that should be undertaken by the National Government. [Applause.]

I wish also to extend thanks to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and to others who visited the lower valley and the State of Louisiana during the flood, Members of the House, and Members of the Senate; also to the majority leader of the House [Mr. TILSON], who came to that stricken territory. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has said that he found the people there fair-minded people who would not come to the National Government asking anything that is unfair or asking that the problem be undertaken as a national problem unless the underlying merits justified that course. I believe that this Congress when it has the facts will want to deal with the question in the same way.

In any discussion of the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley as a national problem it would be difficult to offer any statement either new or original. As a result of the disastrous flood of 1927 we are simply at a point where all the arguments made and reasons heretofore given in support thereof are more impressive. In fact, actual results have brought us to the point where the reasons given for dealing with this problem in a national way are unanswerable.

I could quote the declarations of statesmen of the national political parties for time without limit. It might be well to refer here to the declarations of some of those who have dealt with this question in the past. Henry Clay, in a speech in the United States Senate, said:

> With regard to the appropriations made for that portion of the country from which I come, the great valley of the Mississippi, I will say that we are a persevering people, a feeling people, and a contrasting people; and how long will it be before the people of this vast valley will rise en masse and tumble down your little hair-splitting distinctions about what is national and demand what is just and fair on the part of this Government in relation to their great interests?

Abraham Lincoln said:

> The driving of a pirate from the track of commerce in the broad ocean and the removing of a snag from its more narrow path in the Mississippi can not, I think, be distinguished in principle. Each is done to save life and property and to use the waterways for the purpose of promoting commerce. The most general object I can think of would be the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Lincoln had in mind the preservation and promotion of interstate commerce and the saving of life and property, and that it did not appear to him to be a reclamation project.

President Roosevelt said:

> We, the Nation, must build the levees, and build them better and more scientifically than ever before.

It is important now to recall that President Roosevelt said "We, the Nation," must do it, and that the solution of the problem should not be put upon the local interests.

President Taft, in discussing an appropriation, a portion of which was to be dedicated to the control of floods of the Mississippi, said:

> I am strongly in favor of expending the whole $50,000,000 to save that part of the country from floods in a reasonable time and provide a proper levee system.

The platforms of the major political parties for the last 20 years have directly declared that the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau to the Gulf for the purposes of navigation as well as to prevent destructive floods was a national problem.

Even though former Presidents of the United States, statesmen, and leaders in our national life have been outspoken in support of the National Government taking charge of this, the greatest internal project in America, in a more comprehensive way, yet the Congress has been slow to assume the responsibility and place the Government in charge.

It was only after long years of discussion and earnest effort that the Congress recognized flood control as one of the duties of the National Government. Even after the creation of the Mississippi River Commission in 1879 and down to 1917 the appropriations made to assist in flood-control works were based upon the theory of being for the improvement of navigation. It is interesting to review the efforts made by those who might be termed the pioneers in securing Federal jurisdiction for flood control on the Mississippi River. Notable among these were General Catchings, of Mississippi, and Governor Blanchard, of Louisiana. Governor Blanchard, then a Member of Congress, went to section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, which makes it the duty of Congress "to * * * repel invasions," and said:

> An enemy invades us. Our people fly to arms. Points of defense are strengthened. The eye of strategy selects other points to be fortified and defended. Congress votes the money, and immediately long lines of breastworks guard our frontier where attack is apprehended.
> But here is an enemy who comes in the form of raging waters, sweeping down in resistless might from the north upon the sunny valleys of the West and South, bringing devastation, destruction, death. He raids through the country, rioting in ruin; and millions, panic-stricken, flee at his approach, leaving their all to be swallowed up in the wild vortex of destruction. The wasting presence lasts but a couple of months, but in that time there has been a destruction of property, present and prospective, equal in value to many millions of dollars.

The aptness of this vivid comparison made by this great Louisianian can be best appreciated by those who witnessed the flood of 1927.

During the Sixty-fifth Congress the Committee on Flood Control was created and in 1917 the first flood control act was passed. In this act flood control was recognized as a function of the National Government and an appropriation of $45,000,000 was authorized. The work was placed under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission and the project then adopted was from Cairo to the Head of Passes on the main river. Later, in the act of 1923, this jurisdiction was extended to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River, in so far as they are affected by its flood waters—the only outlet existing being the Atchafalaya River in Louisiana. I may suggest here that the flood of 1927 has extended, by the effect of the Mississippi flood waters, the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission. This involves a wide extension of what is termed the approved project and is usually referred to as the project now under the jurisdiction of the commission. In the two flood control acts mentioned, and in appropriations prior to the creation of the Committee on Flood Control, the local interests were required to contribute. Under the act of 1917, as amended by the act of 1923, this contribution by the States and the local interests was fixed at the supplying of all rights of way, paying one-third of the cost of levee construction, and paying the entire cost of levee maintenance.

Unfortunately this maintenance has been given a general construction so as to mean replacements as well as repairs.

Now, in this long struggle, the fact that the States and local interests involved were required to contribute, and did contribute, was not any recognition or admission by them of the principle involved, nor does this constitute any argument that the work of protection against destructive floods in the alluvial Valley of the Mississippi River is a reclamation project. These conditions were simply met in self-defense because Congress adopted that method and did not assume full charge of the problem as a national one.

The reasons for a national undertaking all existed at that time. The people of the lower Mississippi Valley have for more than 100 years struggled against destructive flood waters created by the drainage of 31 States, constituting in area 42 per cent of the Union. The waters from 1,240,000 square miles of territory are concentrated upon 30,000 square miles between Cape Girardeau and the Passes. The people living within this small area accepted the concessions made by Congress because for the greater portion of the time they had been fighting alone. They accepted the conditions, taxed themselves to the limit, floated bond issues, and met to the utmost of their ability every demand of the Mississippi River Commission, the agency of the Federal Government in charge, in order to complete the works proposed by the commission as necessary for the control of the floods.

The work was done upon the plans and specifications of the commission, and it is an interesting fact that every organization all the way from Cape Girardeau to the Gulf, consisting of some 30 levee boards, cooperated with the commission without a dissenting voice. These States and local interests acted in self-preservation and spent some three hundred millions of dollars on this work. They contributed to this work not only in defense of their lives and property, but also to assist in works which benefited the entire Nation through improvement of navigation. It is indeed driving a hard bargain on a cold and calculating basis to come at this time and say that these facts should be used as an argument to establish the principle of local contribution to such an extent that it must be recognized in this legislation.

It would be more correct to say that, having thus expended this amount, burdened themselves with indebtedness to the utmost limit in a heroic effort against an uncontrollable force for which they were not responsible, that they should now be relieved of any obligation or fear of obligation in the execution of this project.

NATIONAL ASPECTS OF FLOOD CONTROL

The work of flood control on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, for the protection of the alluvial valley, can only be made in reality and in fact the work of the National Government by action of Congress. In order to bring definitely to the Congress, the House and the Senate, the information and data to establish the proper basis of action, the Flood Control Committee of the House of Representatives was called in session November 7, 1927, with Congressman FRANK R. REID, of Illinois, presiding. This was one month before the session of Congress started and before the committee was actually authorized to sit, but the sessions were given legal status by the agreement before the session began of the Speaker, Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH; the majority leader, Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON; and the minority leader, Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT. It might be well to say that the country at large indorsed this action, which afterwards had the approval of Congress. The committee was in session for practically 70 days. More than 300 witnesses appeared before the committee and organizations representing every phase of American life presented views and urged action. Among these organizations and individuals might be named the following: United States Chamber of Commerce; American Legion; American Federation of Labor; American Farm Bureau Federation; three former presidents of the American Society of Engineers; 40 Senators and Representatives; governors of States; State officials; mayors of large cities; State engineers; levee district engineers; American Bankers' Association; Chicago Flood Conference; three advisory engineering committees, one from the American Society of Engineers, one from the University of Engineers, and one from the railroad engineers of the Mississippi Valley; and the Mississippi River Commission.

These organizations were unanimous in voicing the sentiment that the flood-control problem now under consideration was one which should be undertaken immediately and effectively by the Federal Government at Federal expense.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, whose membership comprises local chambers of commerce throughout the United States, submitted a referendum to its membership and secured almost a unanimous vote approving the following proposition:

The Federal Government should hereafter pay the entire cost of constructing and maintaining works necessary to control the floods of the lower Mississippi River. The Federal Government should assume the sole responsibility for locating, constructing, and maintaining such works.

This same principle has been advocated by the other organizations named and by the major portion of the press of the United States. All these facts were established by the hearings before the Flood Control Committee and also by the hearings before the Commerce Committee of the Senate. If the Congress is responsive to public opinion and the will of a majority of the people of the United States, we should, without hesitation and quibbling, carry out their expressed wishes, which are now well known.

A simple statement of facts regarding the situation of Louisiana demonstrates more clearly than any argument I could make the national character of the flood problem.

The area of the alluvial valley embraced within the present flood-control project, subject to overflow, is 30,000 square miles. The total area of the State of Louisiana is 45,309 square miles, of which 14,690 square miles are within this alluvial area and subject to overflow; so that only slightly less than half of the area sought to be protected is within the State of Louisiana.

From Cairo to the Gulf the length of the Mississippi River is 1,064 miles, and of that 550 miles are within the borders of Louisiana. On this stretch of the river there are about 1,780 miles of levees; 757 miles thereof are in Louisiana.

The lower Mississippi River, from Cairo to the Gulf, must carry the drainage from 42 per cent of the area of the United States. This entire volume of water must pass through Louisiana.

The property values in Louisiana subject to inundation amount to $1,261,997,760; the population in this area is 1,377,137 persons.

The people affected have struggled for more than 100 years in a heroic effort to protect themselves against the invading waters originating outside the borders of that State. The fertile lands embraced within this vast area have been, from the earliest days, developed, cultivated, and used. There is no question of reclamation involved; it is simply the protection of life and property against a force originating outside of Louisiana, and against the destructive invasion of which the local interests in Louisiana are powerless to wage a successful contest at the present time.

In this effort to protect themselves there has been spent on the Mississippi River, its tributaries, and the Atchafalaya outlet in Louisiana, the sum of $143,647,243; of this the Federal Government has paid $35,053,396.27, and the State and local interests therein have paid $108,593,846.73. Of course, this latter figure takes no account of private expenditures and millions spent in struggles against high water, of which no record has been kept. Notwithstanding this expenditure, due to the rapid development and drainage along the upper stretches of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, all necessary for economic development there, and against which no complaint is made, the flood heights on the lower river, and especially in Louisiana, have progressively increased to such an extent that the degree of safety and protection has rapidly diminished, and the danger to life and property is greater to-day than ever before.

The State and the local interests in the area subject to floods have exhausted their ability to provide the funds necessary to continue the work of protection and are laboring under a bonded indebtedness which, without better protection, it will be most difficult to discharge. Added to this has been the continually increasing flood losses. The actual, direct loss caused in Louisiana by the 1927 flood is conservatively estimated at $67,214,000. The indirect and incidental losses are several times that amount. During this flood more than 300,000 people were driven from their homes in Louisiana and some 208,000 were under the care of the American Red Cross. No words of praise would be too great for this organization which did such wonderful work in relieving the flood sufferers, but this merely emphasizes the necessity for comprehensive legislation to avert such a disaster in the future.

THE BILL UNDER CONSIDERATION

All legislation to a certain extent is a matter of compromise, but the bill we now have before us—Senate bill 3740—as amended by the House Committee on Flood Control, meets in every major feature or provision the demands of the public and the necessities of this vital, national undertaking. It covers it in a way just as definite as is practicable or feasible with the information before us.

After the disastrous flood of 1927 investigations were made by the Corps of Engineers of the Army and by the Mississippi River Commission, using and embodying the work of the spillway board which made a survey on the lower sections of the river.

THE BOARD

The board set up in the act to formulate the plans and specifications for the execution of the project consists of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civilian engineers chosen from civil life. The agency for the execution of the work after the plans are agreed upon is the Mississippi River Commission, under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

The board is to take the plan submitted by the Chief of Engineers and the plan submitted by the Mississippi River Commission, which latter includes the report of the Spillway Board and, after reviewing these, may adopt either, or reconcile their differences, and formulate plans which shall constitute a recognized project to be executed by the Mississippi River Commission. For this purpose the sum of $325,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated.

The approved and authorized project embraces what might be termed the emergency work extending from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to the Head of Passes, and deals with the flood waters of the Mississippi River between those points in so far as they affect the main river; and the tributaries and outlets thereof, in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River. It includes on the main river the work of improvement of navigation, revetting the banks and maintaining the channel for navigation purposes.

For controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi River it also includes the construction and completion of whatever spillways, diversion channels, or flood ways as may be found necessary and feasible in connection therewith.

This project as thus described is to be carried on to completion without local contributions. The States and local interests agreeing to supervise and maintain the levees after completion; such maintenance to be limited to caring for the levees, cutting grass, and so forth, but does not include replacements on account of caving or crevasses. This will keep the States, levee boards, and other local interests in immediate touch with the entire system of works and will place no heavy burden on them.

The question of local contribution has, in a general way, been the subject of chief contention and dispute, but when it was shown that the local interests had, in the effort to protect themselves against the drainage of 42 per cent of the Union and during a contest of more than 100 years, spent $292,000,000 and are now unable to contribute in any way to make an effective flood-control program possible, it was readily conceded in the Senate that no further local contributions should be demanded on this project.

The bill also provides that just compensation shall be paid by the United States for the property taken, used, damaged, or destroyed in carrying out the works authorized, including property located within the areas of the spillways, flood ways, or diversion channels or the uses thereof or flowage rights thereon.

This is certainly a fair provision and simply in accordance with the constitutional provision to the effect that private property can not be taken for public use without just compensation.

The bill further provides that it is the sense and intention of Congress that the work shall be carried on and completed in a manner that will give the same degree of protection to the lands adjacent to the flood ways as to the lands adjacent to the levees on the main river, and that the rights, uses, and property necessary for the flood ways shall be acquired and the protective works therein completed before any diversions are made through the flood way and that, pending all investigations and surveys therefor as well as the performance of the work, the same degree of protection shall be given to all sections of the valley.

SURVEYS

The bill provides that there shall be a further survey and investigation, with data for the recommendations of the board, between Cape Girardeau, Mo., and Baton Rouge, La., before work other than levees and bank revetment is undertaken on that section of the river. This survey is made necessary and essential on account of the facts developed by the hearings both before the House and Senate committees, and also on account of the differences in the reports submitted to Congress by the Chief of Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission. It was evident that sufficient time had not been given for complete surveys and the necessity for these is acknowledged both by the Commerce Committee of the Senate, the Senate itself, and the Flood Control Committee of the House.

The bill also provides that the titles to the lands acquired by the Government under this act shall, when the works are completed, be conveyed to the States and local interests in order to relieve the Government of jurisdiction and transfer it to the States and local interests.

The act authorizes an appropriation of $5,000,000 to be used by the Secretary of War in emergency work during floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries and for the immediate repair of any flood-control works that may be destroyed.

TRIBUTARIES

This bill for the first time authorizes a complete survey and investigation of the principal tributaries of the Mississippi River that affect floods in the alluvial valley for the purpose of flood control thereon. It authorizes the use of $5,000,000 of the funds authorized in this act, to be used with appropriations already made, amounting to about $1,500,000 for that purpose. It provides when this investigation is made and completed that the data and results shall be placed before the board herein created, which shall consider the same and make recommendations to Congress for a flood-control project on the tributaries. That is an important provision, because the work of complete flood control on the Mississippi necessarily involves the extension of the works to the tributaries.

THE COST

Considerable propaganda has been put forth against the Jones-Reid bill now before us to the effect that the cost will be prohibitive and far beyond anything that has been contemplated. There is no reason or basis for this contention. Reliable estimates all along have been to the effect that the execution of comprehensive flood-control works, in a manner and to the extent required for the national welfare, would be in the neighborhood of five or six hundred million dollars to be expended over a period of from 10 to 20 years. I am sure it will be readily admitted that this is not an unreasonable expenditure in view of the vast interests involved.

The bill under consideration authorizes an appropriation of $325,000,000. The recommendations in the report of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War were for $296,000,000. The report and estimates of the Mississippi River Commission, involving practically the same project, with like character of work, but slightly more complete, were for $407,000,000. This latter contemplated remuneration for the lands and property taken for the flood ways, but the report of the Chief of Engineers did not. Of the amounts recommended and estimates made by the Chief of Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission $110,000,000 is for the improvement of the Mississippi River for navigation. Of course, it should be stated that the amount spent for bank revetment is protective of flood-control works, but in so far as an approved project is concerned and appropriations authorized the bill, if enacted into law, will not go beyond the project included in those estimates and which all admit should be taken up at once as emergency work.

Now, the fact that this bill authorizes an immediate, comprehensive, and complete study of the tributaries that affect the floods in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River can not be consistently urged as a program for unreasonable or inordinate costs to the Government.

The funds for the surveys are already provided in the rivers and harbors act of 1927 and in the measure now under consideration. Surveys and investigations, with cost estimates, are to be made. The reports of these go first to the board, consisting of the Secretary of War, Chief of Engineers, president of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civilian engineers, and after being considered and passed upon by the board are referred to Congress. The Congress then in existence will have full control of the approval of the projects, the apportioning of the costs, and the appropriation of the money.

If, after these investigations are made, it should be found that complete and effective flood control may be had for the Mississippi River and its tributaries, along with their improvement for navigation, at a cost of $1,000,000,000, to be spent within the next 10 to 20 years, favorable action thereon would be justified, and would be a profitable investment rather than a burden on the National Government. Such a program would have the approval of the States and their joint effort for whatever reasonable demands might be made in connection with the execution of the project.

ADDITIONAL SURVEYS

Some complaint has been made because the bill as it passed the Senate and is now before the House authorizes and directs additional surveys and investigations. There is no increased cost added for that purpose, but these additional investigations are made necessary by reason of the facts developed in the hearings before the Flood Control Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate. In entering upon the execution of a project of this importance, involving rich and fertile areas, thickly populated, I am sure all will admit that each and every step taken should be safeguarded by complete and definite information. Take, for instance, the proposed flood way through the Tensas Basin. The Mississippi River Commission has been dealing with the flood-control works on that section of the river for 50 years. The commission outlined a plan following the flood of 1927. This plan was for a controlled and regulated flood way from Cypress Creek to the head of the Atchafalaya Basin at Old River. It proposed the diversion of approximately 600,000 cubic second-feet during any flood exceeding that of 1922. The application of this in the past would have only involved its use in the 1927 flood.

The Chief of Engineers, with very little experience and no former direct connection with that section of the river, submitted a plan for diversion through a fuse-plug levee, about 30 miles in length, at Cypress Creek, of 900,000 cubic second-feet in any flood exceeding that of 1922. This would have been used in the past only in the flood of 1927. The estimate under the commission plan is $107,000,000, and that of the Chief of Engineers is $7,700,000.

The latter plan makes no provision for payment for the property taken or used for the flood way, although the water diverted through that territory would be twice as much as passed through that section on account of three breaks in the levees in 1927. This would raise flood heights in the flood way for a distance of practically 140 miles 7 to 8 feet above the 1927 flood. Only those who are conversant with the effects of crevasses in levees during extreme floods could estimate or appreciate the effect of the use of a fuse-plug levee. No better description could be given, in my opinion, than the following statement by Hon. Oscar Johnson, a lifetime resident of the Yazoo Basin:

> Not being a civil engineer, I shall not presume to criticize the engineering plans submitted by the general other than in a single particular; namely, the matter of "fuse-plug levees."
> The plan provides for a fuse-plug levee at Cypress Creek. The idea of the plan is that at a given height in the water this "fuse plug" will blow out, break, or be overflowed, permitting the escape of a given quantity of water; the maximum of this quantity is stated in the plan at 900,000 cubic feet per second. The greatest crevasse, I believe, that has ever occurred in the Mississippi levee was the break at Mounds Landing, when the water stood approximately 19 feet above the ground. The break was a half mile in width. The water swept through with an unprecedented velocity, and yet it is estimated that the flow through this crevasse was approximately only 500,000 cubic feet per second. This crevasse washed out a lake or "blue hole" more than 100 feet deep, and cut a channel more than a mile back into the interior, destroying 5,000 acres of land by depositing sand of such character as to prevent successful cultivation of the soil in the future. If such a result happens at one of the fuse plugs it would be almost an impossible task to restore the levee without looping or building back for some distance. A few successive breaks of this sort at the same point would shortly result in a channel being cut from the head to the mouth of the spillway.
> Those of us who have lived behind levees the greater part of our lives are decidedly of the opinion that levees have a perverse way of not breaking at points where they are expected to break. Frequently water is impounded and raised temporarily as the result of a windstorm; frequently windstorms bring about waves that wash into and cut through a strong levee standing several feet above the crest of the water; frequently levees are undermined by water seeping through below the base.
> We believe from practical experience, as opposed to engineering theory, that such spillways as are constructed should be of the type commonly known as "controlled," or should be left open at the head and leveed along the sides so that the flow of water through the spillways may be controlled and regulated.

Other important facts showing the necessity for further surveys were developed in the hearings before the Committee on Flood Control. There was a report filed by the reservoir board which indicated that reservoirs on the White and Arkansas Rivers could be constructed at no exorbitant cost that would retain during a flood period such as we had in the 1927 flood 500,000 cubic second-feet of water. This might render the Boeuf flood way unnecessary, or greatly diminish the requirements for diversion and, therefore, diminish the costs and heavy losses that might occur. The president and members of the Mississippi River Commission were very positive in their testimony that this entire subject should have further consideration before a final conclusion was reached. In that connection I quote from Colonel Potter, president of the commission, and Captain West, a civil engineer who has long been a member of the commission:

> Colonel POTTER. * * * I want some time to study it and see if certain other features can not be brought in to reduce the cost or make the plan more feasible.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. What else have you got in mind?
>
> Colonel POTTER. That is principally the thing. * * *
>
> I believe there is a possibility of control on the Arkansas and White so as to avoid these spillways and flood ways.
>
> I would not put anything of that kind on these people until I had made a thorough study. * * * But I can tell you now that I would rather live behind that levee with a 4-foot raise and a 12-foot crown and a 6-to-1 slope on the back side and a 4-to-1 on the front side, and the right to fight for my life and property, than to have that thing put down on me.
>
> Mr. WILSON. Then, if you had this reservoir storage of 600,000 feet up the Arkansas and White they would relieve the amount of water collected from Old River to go down the Mississippi and the Atchafalaya to that extent, wouldn't it?
>
> Colonel POTTER. Just as much as at Cypress Creek.
>
> Mr. WILSON. The Cypress Creek will be the same as the source of the Atchafalaya, which will be divided between the Atchafalaya and the main river to carry it down.
>
> Colonel POTTER. That is the reason I would study the Arkansas before I would put in the Tensas Basin flood way or the Atchafalaya flood way.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Now, Colonel Potter's testimony developed the fact that he was not entirely in sympathy with the idea of the proposed flood way through the Tensas Basin, as a means of reducing flood heights at Arkansas City. His statements are to the effect that he was almost disposed to sign a minority report on this particular item. Now, has your study, has your investigation of this particular point, been sufficiently extensive to justify your recording your opinion one way or the other as to the practicability of making use of reservoirs in the Arkansas and White Valleys in preference to the recommended flood way?
> Mr. WEST. If reservoirs could be found that would reduce the discharge in the main river at the mouth of the Arkansas River as much as the diversion would reduce it, and even though the reservoirs would cost more than the diversion, it would be infinitely better for the whole problem. It would save the million or two or more acres that the flood way would destroy. It would be better for the river itself, because diversions are not good, except as a last resort to save leveeing further. They are not good for the development of the stream itself, and unless they are absolutely controlled at the head, the entrance, and throughout, they can be more harmful, perhaps, in the long run than they will be beneficial.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, the question was——
> Mr. WEST. So I only look upon diversion as a matter of last resort.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. All right. Now, the question was this: Has your study and investigation on this particular thing been sufficient to justify you in stating your opinion that it is necessary to proceed with the flood ways at this time——
> Mr. WEST. No.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Or do you incline to agree with Colonel Potter? What is your answer?
> Mr. WEST. We suggested in our report that we needed more time to study this particular question, to balance reservoirs against flood ways. I do not think that there would be any time lost in the construction of the whole structure by giving time for that study. It would only delay the time of beginning the flood ways, so that the flood ways could be completed even though you delayed a year or two; they could be completed before you could complete the necessary work along the main river. Then why hurry and make a possible mistake? Why not make a more exhaustive investigation and study of the possibilities of reservoirs?
>
> The CHAIRMAN. All right. Then you are inclined to agree with Colonel Potter in that, are you?
> Mr. WEST. I fully agree with Colonel Potter in that; yes, sir.

I have no desire to criticize or to differ with the engineers in charge or those who may be placed in charge, but in view of these facts is it not fair and just, in the interest of the people immediately involved as well as the Nation itself, that a more complete survey and investigation be authorized and directed? That is what this bill provides.

ATCHAFALAYA BASIN

Now, the same is true of the proposed flood way through the Atchafalaya Basin. Whatever volume of water is diverted through the Boeuf River and Tensas Basins must, in the vicinity of Old River, which is the source of the Atchafalaya River, meet and converge with the volume of water carried down the main Mississippi River and that which comes down the Red River. In respect to this flood way a like diversity of opinion exists among the engineering forces.

The spillway board, carrying out a survey authorized by Congress in 1926, spent about one year in investigation before the flood of 1927 came, and continued their investigations during that flood. Their investigations and report were adopted by the Mississippi River Commission.

It was proposed in that report to divert through the Atchafalaya Basin 900,000 cubic second-feet, with works constructed so as to carry that volume safely to the Gulf, a distance of about 146 miles. The report of the Chief of Engineers proposed to divert through the Atchafalaya Basin 1,500,000 cubic second-feet, with works of quite a different character and largely without protection to rich and valuable territory and with ring levees around a number of important towns. These recommendations were universally disapproved by all the people living in the territory affected. Is it not fair and right that further investigations should be made to be considered by the board created by this act? For this flood way the Mississippi River Commission plan called for an expenditure of $52,500,000, which included compensation for property taken and the uses thereof necessary; that of the Chief of Engineers for an expenditure of $29,900,000. A like situation exists in relation to the proposed diversion at Birds Point.

OCCASIONS NO DELAY

The bill which passed the Senate unanimously is not materially changed by the amendments adopted by the Committee on Flood Control of the House of Representatives. Nothing is added to the approved project and no additional authorization for expenditures. It contains no provision that should in any way delay the execution of the approved project.

All will agree that immediate procedure should be undertaken. First, of raising, strengthening, and relocating the levees on the main river and on the tributaries and outlets in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River, and revetting the banks of the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau to the Head of the Passes. That covers the work now under jurisdiction of the commission and which is adopted in this project. The engineering features in this portion of the work are agreed upon. Second, the immediate construction of the Bonnet Carre spillway above New Orleans, as there is entire agreement in relation to this item of the project.

During the time this work is proceeding the further surveys and examinations required under the provisions of this act can be made and definite plans outlined with cost estimates so the work may proceed in a businesslike way.

So when you examine the provisions of this bill and come to an understanding of the project it adopts and the work it authorizes and directs there is nothing to justify the fear of delay and uncertainty.

In fact, more complete surveys and investigations will no doubt adjust the differences of opinion and plans in such a way as to reduce costs and save in the national expense. [Applause.]

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER].

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Chairman, owing to the fact that at a later hour in the course of the discussions of the bill I shall have the opportunity of discussing the features of the plan and offer to the committee some suggestions with respect to that plan, I shall elect now to devote the 15 minutes which are given to me to the effort of presenting to this body a picture of the conditions in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River which must be known in order that you may be prepared to deal intelligently with what the chairman of your Rules Committee has mentioned as being the biggest interior improvement project ever suggested to the Congress of the United States. It is a distinct pleasure to me, gentlemen, to have the assurances of your interest, which have been manifested so often during the period when the flood was in the valley, after its recession, and during the period since this session of the Congress has convened. I believe, gentlemen, that is only a fair reflection of the sentiments so generously offered by this country and which aroused in the country a spirit of service making possible the salvation of life and the laying of the predicate upon which we are attempting to prosecute the necessary work for the rehabilitation of the Mississippi Valley.

My colleague from Louisiana has mentioned to you the great work that was done by the agencies of this Government, and I would feel that I would be remiss to my duty without saying to you that that work, made possible by the generous donations of the people of this country, which saved so many lives and cared for so many people in the Mississippi Valley, has written one of the brightest pages in our history, and such administrative agencies which so promptly and efficiently came to the aid of that stricken section are entitled to every possible credit that may be offered to them. [Applause.]

They established and maintained lines of communication through which food and medical supplies and the postal service were furnished to and provided for those people; they furnished the necessary instrumentalities through which the marooned people were brought from their tottering homes into places of safety, and they provided shelter for them there.

No man removed from that locality can appreciate the actual conditions under which the people who reside there have existed, nor the great difficulties in their way of accomplishing the purpose of developing that very fertile part of your Nation. The people there, gentlemen, alone waged a war against their common enemy for 200 years in an effort to provide works of defense against the ever increasing flood heights in the Mississippi River.

They believed that while they had no control over the forces which were operating against them, that by using the very utmost of their finances, they would be able to so strengthen their works that they could defend against the mounting crest of that river.

So they expended their accumulations from flood to flood, calling on no agency for aid but depending solely on their ability to earn money with which to carry on these works. They only realized the utter futility of this ambition when the flood of 1927 tore through their works and swept their possessions into the Gulf of Mexico.

Now, let us see the condition that brought about this flood and produced this great damage and exacted the great toll of life.

I am sorry we have not a map before this body in order that I could point out to you the great territory of this Nation which drains into the Mississippi alluvial valley. Suffice it, gentlemen, for me to say to you that it embraces 800,000,000 acres of the very heart of your Nation, a territory 1,240,000 square miles in area. It embraces five large watersheds, the upper Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, the Arkansas, and the Red. It covers a part of two Provinces of Canada and includes 31 States of your Union.

To give you a grasp of the enormous volume of water that is possible to be precipitated upon the people there, I will give you the discharge from the major tributary streams into the Mississippi River.

In 1927 the discharge from the Missouri and the upper Mississippi measured at St. Louis was 800,000 cubic feet; the discharge at the Ohio was 814,000 cubic feet measured at Cairo; the White River, measured at Clarendon, contributed 440,000 cubic feet; the Arkansas River at Little Rock, 813,000 feet; the Red River at Old River contributed 200,000 feet; the Yazoo at Vicksburg, 40,000; and the St. Francis at Parkin, 30,000.

According to the estimate made by those who are in an attitude to speak with knowledge of the situation——

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman, certainly.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. With respect to those discharges, was that the amount per minute?

Mr. DRIVER. No; cubic feet per second.

It is estimated that a flood 25 per cent in excess of the combination of the waters I have mentioned to you is within the range of possibility at Cairo.

Gentlemen, the people in the valley have always attempted to defend against the volume of water that was precipitated into that stream. Realize this in order that you may appreciate the attitude. They had no control over the causes of this trouble.

Every inch of pavement in your towns and in your cities within this watershed, every rod of road you construct in these basins, every improvement that you make in the way of tiling your land or making your run-off conform to the demands of modern development contributes just that much more to the volume of water that the people of the Mississippi Valley must care for and defend against.

Many allusions have been made with respect to the attitude of these people, and it has been said that the rivers throughout all of the time have coursed through the basin of the Mississippi Valley and, therefore, that country has been impressed with the right of user.

Let me tell you that the oldest settlement in the United States you will find down in the valley of the Mississippi River. The Acadians, whose story has brought tears to the eyes of so many people of our Nation, when they were forced out of their homes settled in the Bayou Teche region in the State of Louisiana. The people have continued the development, beginning on the high banks, for it is a well-known topographical fact that in the valley the higher land we have there is immediately along the banks of the river, and the people settled there hundreds and more years ago and developed their property interests there. There were no flood heights to interfere with the operations of these people at that time. Your country north and up the tributaries was an undeveloped country where the buffalo and the Indian were accustomed to indulge in their marathons, but these people down there were carving homes out of this alluvial territory and they were seeking to build up and protect those homes, and the only means of protection available to them at that early day was the construction of a levee to defend against the water. They had no agency. There was no jurisdiction of this Government that had ever made an investigation to ascertain a better means to be employed to afford them the protection that was necessary for their property interests and for the lives of their families there. So they were forced from the exigencies of the occasion to resort to levees and base their sole dependence for their future development on the ability of the levee system to furnish them the proper measure of security. They piled their moneys into the levees year after year as the developments continued on the upper reaches of the river, and increased the flood heights in the river; but when the floods of 1882 and 1883, two major floods in succession, were precipitated upon the people in this valley section, they realized at last that their levees were not sufficient to afford them the security; but even then they did not lose confidence in the levee system, but they believed they were unable financially to continue the individual construction of levees which had obtained up to that time. So they organized themselves into districts under authority of their State laws, and they issued bonds and placed a lien on their lands.

They continued to believe in that method until finally, realizing the utter hopelessness of the task, they were forced to join hands with the War Department, in charge of improving and maintaining navigation on the river, to secure the necessary aid to enable them to continue the fight. I do not want you to misunderstand the situation, because it is very important that you do appreciate the nature of it in order to properly deal with the great problem that we have before us. We did not induce the Government to resort to the levees, nor did they induce the people of the valley in their desperate effort to protect themselves to build levees. It is a mutual proposition. It had been the theory of your Government engineers from time immemorial, beginning with the first investigation made on the Mississippi River in 1820, that in order to provide a permanent channel and permit the operation of commerce on the Mississippi River they must confine the flood waters within that channel, in order that their motion would be accelerated, and thereby the water, heavily charged with sedimentary matter, would carry it through the channel and deposit it in the Gulf of Mexico. [Applause.]

In the alluvial valley there are 19,065,600 acres of land, with about 25 per cent improved and in cultivation. Fifteen million acres of the valley were inundated by the flood waters in 1927. Of this amount, there are more than 5,000,000 acres of improved lands, and in the cities, towns, and villages built thereon about 2,500,000 people reside, 440,000 of them being within the city of New Orleans. Not exceeding 500,000 acres of the tillable land escaped the overflow, and not exceeding 250,000 of the residents of the valley outside of New Orleans remained in their homes. Therefore, 1,750,000 of the inhabitants of the valley were forced to evacuate their homes, and 700,000 of the number were rescued with such possessions as could be hurriedly snatched from the toppling homes and herded into camps of refuge to become objects of charity and cared for by the Red Cross. They were all independent, American people, who had by energetic means developed their lands, built their homes, and acquired the necessary personal property interests to enable them to conveniently and profitably operate such property interests, and who had contributed to the fullest extent of their means in the effort to provide protection for themselves and for their property holdings. There were swept from the overflowed area all improvements, leaving a country on whose barren acres there exists a debt of $417,829,276, the payment of which depends upon the results of the farming operations conducted by the people of that region. Seventy-five per cent of all such inundated area remained idle during the year 1927, largely because of the want of the necessary houses, livestock, tools, and feed with which to live and maintain themselves; a country from which every financial interest had withdrawn and have not returned; a country in which the bankers, merchants, and farmers are in bankruptcy; and a country from which much of the labor was forced to resort to the industrial centers for means of livelihood.

The State of Arkansas suffered possibly more than any other section of the valley.

Four million two hundred and twenty-four thousand acres of its lands were flooded, of which 1,000,000 acres were highly developed. One hundred and three towns and villages were overflowed, causing a property loss of $46,173,650. There were swept from the lands 21,650 houses, 9,755 barns, 6,377 head of horses and mules, 98,392 hogs, 263,426 poultry, and household effects valued at $2,981,744. One thousand and forty-seven miles of highways and 244 bridges were covered and put out of commission.

In the alluvial valley of the State there are 10 levee district organizations, embracing an acreage of 3,022,956, of which about 1,000,000 acres is cleared land. These districts maintain 504.22 miles of levee. They have outstanding levee bonds of $12,500,000, and in the area drainage bonds have been issued amounting to $15,000,000. These bonded debts, together with the real-estate mortgage liens, aggregate $89,512,145.

The anomalous situation is presented that the property of the districts bears an assessment of $82,500,000. It is estimated that the actual value of property did not, prior to the flood, exceed double the assessed value, but, since the losses due to floods were sustained, the property loss and the reduction in value, in consequence of the floods, suffered a diminution of at least 50 per cent, thus leaving the actual value less than the liens against the property. A very forcible illustration of the conditions which have brought about the bankruptcy of the country is found in the statement of the losses suffered in the valley prior to the flood of 1927. This is stated as an aggregate loss of $207,762,000 and 150 lives from 1902 to 1926. Of this amount the State of Arkansas sustained a property loss of $80,000,000, with 62 human beings swept to death, which, added to the 70 drowned during the flood of 1927, means a loss of human lives amounting to 132 in Arkansas alone and a property loss of $126,173,650.

The situation with respect to the financial conditions prevailing is offered, with the statement returned by three of the levee districts in the State, as follows:

WHITE RIVER LEVEE DISTRICT

Twenty-nine miles of levee, with 110,000 acres, of which 60,000 acres are in cultivation. Assessed value of all property, $2,500,000; outstanding bonds, $1,300,000; real-estate mortgages, $3,000,000; 1927 flood losses, $2,130,535. District flooded four times since 1916. No lands cultivated past year.

SOUTHEAST ARKANSAS LEVEE DISTRICT

One hundred and forty-seven miles of levee—62 on Arkansas and 85 on Mississippi. District contains 727,264 acres, of which 290,905 acres are in cultivation. Assessed valuation of all property, $12,500,000; outstanding bonds, $8,571,541; real-estate mortgages, $5,000,000; 1927 flood losses, $7,211,905. District overflowed in every year from 1882, including 1927. No lands cultivated in 1927.

LACONIA LEVEE DISTRICT

Twenty miles of levee. Contains 50,000 acres, with 16,000 in cultivation. Assessed valuation of all property, $320,000; outstanding bonds, $365,000; real-estate mortgages, $200,000; 1927 flood losses, $200,000. District overflowed in every flood since 1893. First crevasse on main levee occurred in this district in 1927, due to inability to secure the money with which to meet Federal-aid requirement, leaving the levees below the grade and section generally maintained along the river. No crop in 1927.

Of course, in the face of the stupendous loss of property and the most unfortunate and distressed financial conditions, any plan based upon continued contributions is doomed to failure at its inception. It becomes a matter of impossibility to further finance either the districts or the individuals. Even though it may be possible for some particular section of the valley to find a market for its securities and thus provide the necessary proportionate part of the cost, yet it would avail the district no measure of security, for without the dependable works in the district or districts above it the flood waters could pour in and cover the area and inflict the destruction possible under present conditions. It is peculiarly a case of national responsibility, and the works must be provided at national expense or the unthinkable situation will be presented of forcing the evacuation of the valley and driving the people from their homes because they were so unfortunate as to risk their lives and fortunes in the paths of progress.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

CURBING THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER—THE FOREMOST DUTY OF THE NATION

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is almost a year since the flood of the Mississippi River, described by Herbert Hoover as the greatest peace-time disaster of the Nation, wrought frightful destruction in the lower Mississippi Valley. The heart of the Nation was touched and the conscience of the country was aroused. The horrors and the sufferings of the disastrous flood are still fresh in the minds of the American people.

The harnessing of the flood waters of the Mississippi is conceded to be our greatest domestic problem. Many insisted that a special session of Congress should be called to deal with the question. Others believed that careful studies and thorough investigations should be made so that Congress could legislate adequately for the solution of the momentous problem. But a year has passed, and no constructive action has yet been taken by Congress.

The world stood aghast at the desolation in the devastated areas in Belgium and France over which the contending armies had marched and countermarched in the many bloody encounters of the World War. Houses had been destroyed and lands torn by shot and shell. There was desolation on every side. With the signing of the armistice the eyes of the world were turned toward the restoration and rehabilitation of the fertile valleys of France and Belgium. The security of these regions was uppermost in the minds of the statesmen as they assembled in the peace conference at Versailles. Recounting the sacrifices of four years France and Belgium demanded security against future attacks. They pleaded the sacrifices of four years in asking for future guaranties of security.

To-day the devastated areas of France and Belgium have been restored. The scars of the war have been healed. France and Belgium feel secure. Their pastures are green and their lands are productive.

While the people of the Mississippi Valley have no indemnities with which to rebuild their homes and restore their farms, they have boldly and courageously gone about the task of reconstruction. They do not ask to be reimbursed for the losses of the greatest of all floods. They know that while armies and navies may prevent another invasion of a foreign foe, they can not check the mad rushes of another flood. In the task of rebuilding the people know that the flood of 1927 may be repeated any year. They are uneasy. The seeming lethargy and inactivity of the National Congress is depressing the brave and struggling people of the valley. They need the tonic and the stimulant of adequate congressional action. The country is of one accord; there has never been such unanimity of sentiment about any matter of national import. From shore to shore, from Lakes to Gulf, the country is of one mind. The intelligent public opinion is demanding national action. The statesmen and the press, the scholars and the business men, the public official and the private citizen are thoroughly agreed; American public opinion is unanimous. Harnessing and curbing the Mississippi River is the responsibility of the Nation.

THE PROBLEM

The Mississippi River and its tributaries drain an area of 1,240,000 square miles, extending from the Alleghenies to the Rockies, from western New York to western and northern Montana, embracing 41 per cent of the area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, and including all or portions of 31 States of the Union, and about 20,000 square miles in Canada, comprising parts of two Provinces. It provides more drainage and contributes more to navigation than any other river in the country. It is one of our most valuable assets. It is the longest navigable river in the world. The United States has complete jurisdiction and control of the Mississippi River. Its control to the Gulf was one of the main considerations that influenced Thomas Jefferson in negotiating the Louisiana Purchase. The control of its floods and its improvement for navigation are not new ideas. The have been regarded as national by the foremost statesmen of the country. Henry Clay more than 75 years ago in a speech in the Senate said:

> The Mississippi with all its tributaries constitutes a part of a great system, and if the system be not national, I should like to know one that is national.

In 1878 James A. Garfield declared that—

> The statesmanship of America must grapple with the problem of this mighty stream; it is too vast for any State to handle; too much for any authority other than that of the Nation itself to manage.

The valley of the Mississippi River is the second largest in the world, only the valley of the Amazon being larger. It is larger than the whole of Europe, exclusive of Russia, Norway, and Sweden. It constitutes the most productive area in the known world. It is the chief wealth-producing section of the United States. It raises more than two-thirds of the agricultural products; it manufactures one-half of the aggregate products; it feeds and clothes more than 60,000,000 men, women, and children. It embraces 54 per cent of the Nation's population and 64 per cent of the rural population. Eighty-four per cent of the corn of the United States is grown in this area; 80 per cent of the wheat is produced here. The lower valley constitutes the great sugar, rice, and long-staple cotton area of the United States.

In flood time the potential power in the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf is estimated at 60,000,000 horsepower, and this enormous power is consumed in eroding banks and in carrying the great volume of its waters to the Gulf. The waters from the Rockies and the Alleghenies, as well as from the Great Lakes in the north, meet at Cairo and from Cairo to the Gulf the Mississippi River traverses an alluvial basin, the product of its own torrential floods in ages past, and the valley of its own making, comprising 30,000 square miles, or about 19,000,000 acres of the most fertile land in the United States. Six million acres of this land are incapable of being cultivated, and constitute the great preserve for wild game in America. Thirteen million acres are susceptible to cultivation. The region from Cairo to the Gulf is known as the lower Mississippi Valley. This is the territory that is subject to almost annual overflows. These overflows can be prevented.

Flood-control works are like any chain—they are no stronger than their weakest link. The Mississippi River can and must be controlled. We are at the crossroads in the solution of the problem. We have made mistakes in dealing with the greatest of all our rivers. Our mistakes have been costly in lives and property; they have been exceedingly expensive. We recall them only to determine to enact and carry through an adequate program of flood control. The lower Mississippi is different from all other rivers. It neither requires nor makes a precedent in the solution of the problem. It is the great drainage basin of the Nation. No other river renders the service or is subjected to the burdens of the lower Mississippi River. Its burdens have been increased by the progress and advancement of the upper Mississippi Basin. The improvement in the upper reaches of any stream adds to the burden of the lower part of the stream. It is always true that the process by which the country above is relieved is the same process by which the country below is damaged. The pressing and surpassing public duty is to control the floods of the lower Mississippi for the general welfare of the entire Nation. It is the foremost problem of the country. [Applause.]

COMMERCE

The Mississippi is the greatest navigable river not only in the United States but in the world. For practically the first 40 years of its existence the energies of the Mississippi River Commission were devoted, as directed by Congress, to the improvement of the Mississippi River for navigation. The census of 1889 gives us the first accurate statistics as to navigation on the Mississippi and its tributaries. The river traffic during that period was enormous. Freight and passenger boats were at the height of their prosperity. The census gives us the total commerce of the Mississippi River and its tributaries in 1889 as 28,000,000 tons. Railway construction had been begun in the late seventies and early eighties in the lower Mississippi Valley, and as a result of unfair competition between railroads and steamboats for a time the boats very largely disappeared from the river.

But there has been improvement in river traffic as there has been in railways. The old steamboats have been superseded by crafts with modern Diesel engines and with lighter drafts. Commerce is now returning to the Mississippi River. The total commerce in 1926 was 57,000,000 tons, or more than twice what it was in 1889. The operations of the Inland Waterways Corporation have emphasized the importance of the Mississippi River as a navigable stream. It is estimated that this corporation transported 5,000,000 tons on the Mississippi River in 1920, and its tonnage had increased on June 21, 1927, to 17,500,000 tons annually. Provision is now made for maintaining a channel 250 feet wide with an average depth of 9 feet between St. Louis and Baton Rouge, and a navigable channel of 35 feet from the Gulf of Mexico to Baton Rouge, a distance of about 225 miles. Baton Rouge is one of the most important ports in the country, while New Orleans is the second largest port in the United States. More and more will the Mississippi River be utilized for heavy traffic. It must be improved for navigation. It is fortunate that works for flood control are essential in all plans for river navigation. Levees and revetment, according to the best-informed engineers, both civil and military, are the backbone of all plans for the improvement of the navigation and for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River.

The great harbors along the Atlantic seacoast are maintained at Federal expense. Commerce is promoted thereby, and as a result the Nation profits. The harbors of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia are maintained by Federal appropriations. The Mississippi River must be controlled in aid of navigation to provide for the increasing demands of transportation.

OVERFLOWS

There is a tradition that the highest flood on the Mississippi River in the region between St. Louis and Cairo occurred in 1785. A notable flood occurred in 1828. The next great flood occurred in 1844. According to Arthur E. Morgan, eminent civil engineer, this flood was 2 feet higher north of the mouth of the Ohio than the flood of 1927. There were great floods in 1849, 1850, 1858, 1862, 1865, and 1874. The flood of 1882 was the greatest south of Cairo. In 1882, 1883, 1884 the lower Mississippi Valley was visited for the first time in history with three great excessive and successive floods. There were great floods in 1897, 1912, 1913, 1922. The flood of 1912 was the greatest flood in the lower Mississippi Valley prior to the 1927 flood. Enormous damages have resulted and many lives have been lost in all the floods.

After every great flood commissions have been appointed by Congress to make studies and submit reports. Many commissions have examined and investigated from time to time the various methods of control proposed, including reservoirs, cut-offs, and diversions. The appropriations made by Congress for the Mississippi River prior to 1917 were largely in aid of navigation. Until the passage of the first flood control act on March 1, 1917, Congress had never formulated a definite policy for flood control. The flood control act of 1917 was followed by the second flood control act of 1923. The plan was to provide for the highest flood that had ever occurred. It was estimated that the flood control act of 1923 would provide levees built to the 1914 grade, that would safely carry the greatest flood that had ever occurred, which was that of 1912, in confinement between the levees to the Gulf.

In other words, Congress by passing the second flood control act had provided a program to protect the lower valley against any flood that had ever occurred. It was estimated that the program under that act would have been completed by 1930. The levees along the main river would have been constructed to the 1914 grade and section of the Mississippi River Commission. It is well to remember that in 1927 the levees had not been completed up to grade in some sections. It would have taken three years longer to have brought the levees up to the 1914 grade. This grade would have given protection against the highest flood on the Mississippi River prior to 1927.

But the Army engineers and the Mississippi River Commission have never asserted that the provisional grade line of 1914 would secure the valley against the greatest of floods. It has been considered good engineering to provide against the highest flood that had ever occurred. The levees have not failed but are insufficient. A mistake was made. A factor of safety should have been provided. The plan should have made provision for enlargement and expansion.

THE GREAT FLOOD OF 1927

The year 1927 will never be forgotten in the region from Cairo to the Gulf. It will hereafter be known as the year of the great flood. It was by far the greatest that had ever occurred in the lower Mississippi Valley. The Department of Agriculture estimates that about 11,000,000 acres, of which 4,400,000 acres were crop lands, were inundated in the lower valley in the flood of 1927. There were 17 breaks in the main levee and 209 crevasses on the tributaries of the Mississippi River in 1927.

The losses from the flood of 1927 exceed the aggregate losses of all previous floods. The flood of 1912, which was the greatest of record prior to the 1927 flood, resulted in losses that aggregated $78,188,000. This was twice the damage of any other preceding flood. Reliable statistics compiled by the Mississippi River Flood Control Association, and used by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, show that the direct damage from the flood of 1927 amounts to $236,334,414.06. It is estimated that the indirect damage will aggregate an additional $200,000,000. Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover estimates the direct losses at $200,000,000, and the indirect losses at $200,000,000 more. One hundred and twenty-nine counties and parishes in seven States were inundated. The Red Cross reports that there were definite records of 245 deaths. I believe from my own personal observation that many more than 245 perished. In my judgment 150 lives were lost in the Yazoo Basin alone. The damages in Washington County, Miss., in which the city of Greenville is located, aggregate $22,907,250. Approximately 735,000 acres of land in the Yazoo Basin that were cultivated in 1926 were overflowed. As a result of a second rise the overflow continued for three months and practically no money crops were produced on the overflow lands in the Yazoo Basin in 1927.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if the gentleman from Wisconsin could give me a little more time.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The Red Cross reports that 607,000 people were fed and cared for by this great organization. It is estimated that at least 700,000 people were driven from their homes. They were very largely supported by public relief. The American people contributed generously. The Red Cross expended more than $17,000,000 in cash, and the Army furnished supplies valued at $7,000,000. Many of those driven from their homes never returned.

One of the chief losses was the labor supply. Many tenants refused to return to their homes when the water receded, and it will be many years before their places are taken. The loss of labor is sometimes overlooked in estimating losses from the flood, but it very materially reduces the value of land in the flooded area. A plantation or farm without labor is a liability. The largest county in the flooded area in the Yazoo Basin probably lost one-third of its population. In addition to the crop lands that were overflowed it is estimated that about 1,000,000 acres of cut-over and timberlands were inundated in the Yazoo Basin.

Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, has said that only war itself is more serious than a Mississippi flood; but I doubt if war would leave more ruin in its wake. I can not draw an adequate picture of the desolation that awaited the return of those who had been driven from their homes by the floods in their mad rush to the Gulf. Houses were washed away, school buildings were filled with slime and muck, courthouses and churches were ruined, railways and drainage canals were damaged and in many cases utterly ruined. Livestock, implements, and improvements were completely destroyed. Provisions were lost; poultry and hogs were drowned; cities and towns were inundated for three months. In many States lands that had been planted to cotton, and in Louisiana thousands of acres where the sugar cane was waist high, were covered with water. There was economic waste and desolation on every side. It is impossible to describe the suffering and losses of the people in the lower Mississippi Valley.

It is now time for clear thinking. A program should be adopted that is economically just, safe from an engineering and scientific standpoint, and financially sound. The flood of 1927 was the most disastrous and calamitous in the history of the American people. It is the greatest catastrophe that ever befell the United States. It is comparable only to war and in many cases it is more destructive than war. We know of Sherman's march to the sea. It extended through the very heart of Mississippi from east to west. The scenes of desolation, of burning homes and smoking factories, of wrecked buildings and ruined railways, as portrayed in my childhood time after time by my grandfather as I sat on his knee, will never be forgotten. But I have witnessed the death and destruction of a Mississippi flood. I know that the onrushing waters wrought infinitely more destruction in the Mississippi Valley than Sherman's march to the sea. The issue has been made. We know now that the flood of 1927 could have been prevented. The challenge is to Congress. It must be met squarely. It can not be evaded. This challenge is a test of the ability of Congress to solve the foremost problem that ever confronted the American people. [Applause.]

EXAMINATIONS

It is sometimes said that more comprehensive investigations and more thorough surveys will have to be made before Congress can adequately solve the problem. It is doubtful if any river in the world has ever been subjected to as careful examination and as thorough study as the Mississippi River. It has been an object of national concern from the very beginning. Congress has undertaken to promote its improvement for more than 100 years. In 1820 Congress appropriated $5,000 for making surveys of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, and a report was made by Army engineers known as Young's reconnaissance. In 1822 Bernard and Totten, Army engineers, submitted a report after considerable study. An act of Congress approved September 30, 1850, appropriated $50,000 for surveys to provide for the channel improvement and for the prevention of inundations. Capt. A. A. Humphreys and Lieut. Henry L. Abbott, Army engineers, made extensive studies and careful surveys, and an elaborate report was submitted by them in 1861. This is the great authority on the Mississippi River. By an act of Congress approved June 23, 1874, additional surveys of the Mississippi River from Cairo to New Orleans were made under the direction of Maj. Charles R. Suter, Corps of Engineers, and this report was known as Suter's reconnaissance.

Under an act of Congress approved June 22, 1874, a board of engineers consisting of Army engineers and civilian engineers was appointed to make a full report as to the best method of protecting the alluvial valley from overflow. This board submitted a report that is known as the Warren report, and it considers very carefully the matter of cut-offs, diversions, reservoirs, and outlets. The ablest engineers of the country have been considering reservoirs in connection with flood control for more than 50 years. Congress has appointed commissions to consider the economic features and the engineering plans necessary to solve the problem of flood control. The Burrowes committee was appointed in 1883 and the Nelson committee submitted a report in 1898. After the flood of 1912 and following the flood of 1913, President Wilson ordered a full investigation for more efficient methods for flood control. The Mississippi River Commission had been organized in 1879, and it has been functioning since that time. It was thought that the problem had been solved. All studies, investigations, commissions, and committees prior to 1927 agreed that levees reinforced by revetment would solve the problem of flood control. As stated, the Mississippi River Commission had provided for the highest flood prior to 1927. Levees with a 3-foot freeboard and up to what is known as the 1914 grade and section were adopted. No engineer has disputed that the policy adopted by the commission was sound. It provided for the highest previous flood. But the flood of 1927 broke all records. We know now that levees alone will not solve the problem.

TWO PLANS

When the flood of 1927 was at its height the President of the United States requested the Chief of Engineers, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to direct the Mississippi River Commission to revise its plan to provide a reasonable factor of safety for any probable flood. In other words, the commission was requested to report a plan that would provide for the maximum probable flood. It has been agreed among engineers that a plan to provide for a flood 25 per cent in excess of the flood of 1927 would be adequate.

Accordingly, on November 28, 1927, the Mississippi River Commission submitted a report, published as Flood Control Committee Document No. 1, Seventieth Congress, first session, and I refer to this report as the commission plan. Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, also submitted a report which was transmitted to Congress on December 8, 1927, and published as House Document No. 90, Seventieth Congress, first session, and I refer to his report as the Jadwin plan. The main engineering features of the two plans are substantially the same. Both plans provide for raising, strengthening, and enlarging the levees from Cape Girardeau to Head of the Passes. Both plans provide for a diversion through the Tensas and Atchafalaya Basins and for a spillway above the city of New Orleans. Both plans provide for further protection in the vicinity of Cairo. The commission plan is to raise the levees in this territory. The Jadwin plan is to construct a diversion by moving the levees back for 5 miles between Cairo and New Madrid. The fundamental difference between the engineering features of the two plans is that the commission plan recommends regulated and controlled diversions through the Tensas Basin and the Atchafalaya Basin. It is fair to say that under the existing flood control acts the Chief of Engineers and the commission were expected to report on the economic features and to make reports covering the local and Federal interests involved. The great difference between the two plans is in the economic features. The Jadwin plan recommends local contributions of 20 per cent, and also recommends that the local interests furnish the rights of way and flowage rights. The Jadwin plan really recommends solving the problem on a 50-50 basis. Under the commission plan local contributions would only be required to the extent and amount of the 1914 grade and section. The fatal objection to the Jadwin plan is that it recommends that the States and districts agree to hold and save the United States free from all damages resulting from the construction of the project, and particularly in the building of the diversions. This is an impossibility. Moreover, the States as such have never constructed levees. The districts along the river have built the dikes. The Yazoo Basin is but one-ninth the area of Mississippi. Levees have been built on the theory that the public interest required that they be constructed without any damage or liability except for rights of way actually taken. The continuance of this principle is essential to flood control.

It is conservatively estimated that the ultimate cost of either plan will be about $500,000,000.

LEVEES AND REVETMENT MUST BE SUPPLEMENTED BY DIVERSIONS AND SPILLWAYS

Numerous alternatives have been suggested for flood control. Repeated investigations have been made covering the various methods proposed. They have been studied in the light of each flood. Every worth while suggestion as an alternative for levees has been thoroughly considered. The engineers of the Government know more about the problems of the Mississippi River than any other engineers in the country. Reforestation, dredging, straightening the channel, clearing between the levees, side channels, levee setbacks, contour plowing, and reservoirs have all been considered. The problem is to protect the lower valley against floods. Reservoirs, for instance, are of particular value on the tributaries. They may be used to solve the problem in the lower valley if the matter of costs is eliminated. They have been discarded largely because their cost is prohibitive. To solve the problem by reservoirs can not be justified from an economic standpoint.

But we know that the flood of 1927 would have overtopped the levees by many feet if they had been completed to the 1914 grade. The flood of 1927 would have overtopped the levee at Greenville 7 feet and at Arkansas City 8½ feet. At both these places the levees were up to 1914 grade. It is apparent that the levees are high enough in many places. It is also apparent that they should be made wider and stronger in other places. Since levees only can not be relied upon to solve the problem of flood control, other methods must be adopted. Spillways and outlets have heretofore been opposed because of their effect upon the discharge capacity of the river. We remember that before the levees were built the water spilled gradually over the banks in every flood. The water was diverted through natural outlets at Cape Girardeau and Cypress Creek. The Chief of Engineers and the commission agree that the levees must be supplemented by spillways and diversions. The combination of the two will solve the problem.

It must ever be kept in mind that revetment is an essential part of all plans. All engineers agree that no system of flood control or navigation improvement works can be effective or secure without stabilization of river banks. Caving occurs in the bends or concave banks and is generally confined to the region between Cairo and the Red River. The Chief of Engineers and the commission, and with practical unanimity all engineers, agree that levees and revetment are essential for both navigation and flood control. All banks do not cave. It is estimated that only about one-third of the banks between Cairo and New Orleans are subject to caving. It is said that 500 miles of additional bank revetment are needed between Cairo and the Gulf. The engineers of the Government estimate that all the material in all the levees now constructed amounts to less in yardage than is annually eroded by caving banks. Revetment is essential to prevent caving banks. Bank stabilization is fundamental. It is important, therefore, that flood-control legislation should make provision for bank revetment as well as for levees, spillways, and diversions. Congress should adopt as the basis of the flood-control project a combination of the Jadwin and commission plans, embodying the best features of both plans.

SECURITY AND PROTECTION, NOT RECLAMATION

It has been suggested that the works for the flood control of the Mississippi would reclaim the lands in the alluvial valley. There is no similarity between flood control and reclamation. The very opposite obtains. The dissimilarity suggests a contrast rather than a comparison. The lands in the lower Mississippi Valley are not wild. They are improved. The area is highly developed. It is said that no lands have been cleared in the Atchafalaya Basin for 100 years. This is no reclamation scheme. Reclamation is already an accomplished fact in the Mississippi Valley. Practically all of the lands have been cleared and can be cultivated with profit. I represent the Yazoo Basin in Mississippi. The development in this area is reflected in the bonded and mortgaged indebtedness of $100,000,000.

The assessed valuation of lands and personalty is approximately $170,000,000. Cities have been founded; highways have been constructed; the lands have been cleared; telephone, telegraph, and power lines have been installed. The people long ago reclaimed the country at their own expense and they are still paying the costs. They also built their levees without aid and without contribution. They have substantially built the levees to their present height; they have gone as far as they can. We have never asked nor do we now ask reimbursement for present or previous losses. In the Yazoo Basin we have expended for levee construction since 1882 some $46,000,000.

Prior to 1917 the local interests practically paid for levee construction. Since 1917 they have issued bonds and have taxed themselves to the limit to contribute the rights of way and one-third the cost of levee construction. They staked their all in one supreme effort to bring the levees to the grade where the engineers of the Government said their homes would be safe and their lands secure. But human nature is frail in the sight of the Almighty. They lost all in the flood of 1927. It will be many years before they can come back. The local interests will do well to liquidate the outstanding indebtedness that they have incurred to bring the levees to the 1914 commission grade and section.

CONTRIBUTION

The flood of 1927 emphasized the fact that the local interests are unable to handle the problem. Raising the levees in one section increases the flood heights in another section. The States and local districts are no longer able to protect themselves against the floods from 31 States of the Union. As long as the country was sparsely settled the local interests neither asked nor expected aid, but now the country has grown and developed. The great Middle West has been settled. The problem has outgrown the local interests. The engineering is simple but the financial task is gigantic. It requires the strong arm and the big purse of the National Government. Heretofore we have raised the levees to protect against the previous highest flood stages. Now we must aim higher. There must be adequate and complete flood control for the greatest probable flood.

The magnitude of the problem and the vast areas involved are such that the treatment of the lower Mississippi can not be used as a precedent for future action. Moreover, the local interests have borne their part. As shown by the report of the Chief of Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission, the local interests have contributed to the construction of levees since 1882 $167,000,000 while the Federal Government has only contributed approximately $71,000,000. In addition the local interests expended prior to 1882 $125,000,000. In other words, while the Federal Government has an investment of only $71,000,000 in levees along the lower Mississippi River, the local interests have already invested $292,000,000. These figures are authentic. They are furnished by the Chief of Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission.

The great lesson from the flood of 1927 is that the dual responsibility resulting from the local contributions will not solve the problem. All concede that the Government should pay at least 80 per cent of flood-control works. The same argument against the Government assuming the entire cost is applicable to the Government assuming four-fifths of the cost. Delay might mean disaster. We can not afford to quibble about percentages in the face of a great national disaster.

But it is said that improvement will benefit the landowners. Every public improvement results in local benefits. No public improvement is ever made without some section or locality being eventually benefited. Navy yards are for the benefit of the country, but they are of especial advantage to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Charleston. The improvement of harbors is for the public welfare, and yet it results in special advantage to the cities located near the harbors. Highway construction and railway construction increase the value of adjacent lands, but who would stay the hand of progress because of the incidental benefits? The Government should be encouraged and not restrained in carrying out a great national project, even though local benefits are conferred upon some people.

Again, if local contributions obtain, the local voice must be considered. If the Government is to play the part of Shylock in demanding a pound of flesh for an ounce of gold, the people of the lower valley, now downcast and discouraged, would be entitled to a voice in the location of the levees. The system would be more efficient if the Government had the final word. Divided responsibility results in inefficiency. In the long run Federal control and Federal construction would be more economical.

Many districts are confessedly unable to pay for further works. The advocates of local contribution recognize this. All admit that any plan must provide for building levees where local interests are unable to contribute. It is conceded that the inability of some to contribute may result in the levee line being broken, so that those who have contributed will suffer because of the failure of others to make their contribution.

If local contributions obtain, there is the matter of interdependence. This interdependence may be fatal to the effectiveness of the entire system. The entire project can not be allowed to lag because of the inability of some districts to contribute. The break at Knowlton and at Laconia Circle resulted from the inability of local districts to pay, and as a result the States of Louisiana and Arkansas were flooded. If the districts were unable to contribute to bringing the levee line up to the 1914 grade, it is inevitable that they are and will be unable to contribute to the completion of the proposed adequate system.

The lower valley must be protected or the Nation will be the loser. The commerce of the Nation is involved. It is unjustifiable to try to protect the heart of the Nation by requiring local contribution. It is just as suicidal as it would be to place the protection of our national boundary upon the people of the coast or boundary States, and it is just as fallacious as it would be to ask the seacoast States to stand for the expense of improving the harbors of their ports. It is just as fallacious as it would be to ask the local districts to pay for the locks and dams on the rivers of the country.

Again, the States can not solve the problem. The districts can not solve it. Only the Federal Government has the power and the money to solve this greatest of all domestic problems. Work is essential in one State for the protection of the people of another State. The flood control of the Mississippi River is a part of the great internal improvement policy for which the Government of the United States was primarily established. The Federal Government was ordained to do what the States themselves are unable to do. If the problem is national, it can not be local. If the problem is national, it must be solved at national expense. The burden of taxation for the further construction of levees should be shifted to the shoulders of the Nation. The benefits to the landowners are incidental compared to the benefits to the Nation at large.

ECONOMIC SURVEY

Extensive hearings have been conducted by the Flood Control Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate. It has been demonstrated beyond question that the local interests are unable to pay 20 per cent of the costs under either plan. It is also shown that the alleged 20 per cent in reality means 50 per cent. The hearings disclosed accurately the land values, the production, and the ability of local interests to pay.

The committees of Congress have visited the devastated areas. Studies and surveys have been made on the lower Mississippi since the beginning of the commission in 1879. The commission has been in close contact with the people. It is the representative of the Government. It is familiar with the ability of the local interests to make further contributions. The universal verdict is that the local interests have borne their part.

In addition to the studies and surveys made by the Mississippi River Commission over a period of 50 years, which studies and surveys under the direction of Congress have been both economic and scientific, Congress has the facilities of the Government at its command to ascertain the ability of the lower valley to pay. Data as to the wealth and population have been accumulated by the census. We have adequate studies and we have sufficient economic surveys. We have complete engineering plans. It only remains for Congress to act. Evidently the advocates of local contributions recognize that their position is untenable. They now suggest an economic survey. This proposal begs the question.

The responsibility is on Congress. Congress has been studying the problem for almost a year. It is the duty of the committees of Congress to obtain full information. These committees have heard the evidence. They have made more comprehensive studies than the commission appointed to negotiate the settlement of the foreign debts of the Allies to the United States resulting from the World War. Congress determined the ability and capacity of the debtor nations to pay from the information furnished to the Debt Funding Commission. This commission did not go to Europe to make an economic survey to determine the ability of the Allies to pay. Why should a different method be used to determine the capacity of the people of our own country to pay? No commission can obtain more reliable or adequate facts than the committees of Congress have acquired. A commission means further delay. Delay means danger. It may mean another flood. It may mean vastly more tragedy and destruction.

NATIONAL QUESTION

The question is not sectional; it is national. We are citizens of a common country. We are all Americans. The expense will be large, but the cost will be small when compared to the benefits to be derived. It is said that a large Navy is essential to protect the commerce of the United States, and yet the foreign commerce of the Nation is nothing like the commerce of the Mississippi Valley. Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, who represented the President of the United States during the 1927 flood in the overflow area, has correctly observed:

> It is not incompatible with national economy to prevent $10 of economic loss by the expenditure of $1 of Federal money.

We have neglected our waterways. To-day the improvement of our rivers and other inland waterways is challenging the attention of the country. Flood control is fundamental on the Mississippi River. There can be no navigation without it. The same agency can most economically handle the problem of flood control and navigation. The national wealth will be increased and the commerce of the Nation will be promoted.

SACRIFICES FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Great sacrifices are frequently necessary in the lives and progress of individuals, and also in the progress of nations. The sacrifices of the colonists made possible the settlement of America. The sacrifices of the Revolution were imperative to obtain the liberty of a free people. It took war between the States to abolish slavery. The sacrifices of the World War were made to promote world peace. It may be that the flood of 1927 with all of its horrors, with all of its sufferings, with all of its sacrifices, was necessary to arouse the conscience of the Nation and to obtain protection and security for the Mississippi Valley. Benjamin Franklin, in his autobiography, says:

The best public measures are seldom adopted from previous wisdom, but are forced by the occasion.

But these sacrifices have been going on for centuries. Hernando de Soto discovered the Mississippi River in 1543, and after crossing it in the vicinity of Memphis traveled through Arkansas and Louisiana. When he returned to the great river from the West he found it in flood. The historian of De Soto's expedition gives us an accurate record of the flood of 1543. He paints a graphic picture of the Father of Waters before the country was inhabited by the white man with his boasted progress and civilization. The survivors of this ill-fated expedition undertook to reach Mexico. The trip down the Mississippi to reach Mexico was hindered by a mighty flood, which about the 8th or 10th of March began to come down the river with an enormous increase of water. The flood was 40 days in reaching its greatest height, which was about the 21st of April. It is tragic to think that almost 400 years afterwards, at about 7.30 o'clock in the morning of April 21, 1927, the crevasse occurred in the levee at Mounds Landing, 18 miles north of Greenville. This was the greatest break that ever occurred in the history of the Mississippi River.

Getting back to De Soto's trip, we find that the historian says that the flood waters began to subside about the middle of May and by the end of May the river had returned within its banks. An old Indian woman said to the members of De Soto's expedition that the flood occurred every 14 years, and that these periodical floods covered the entire Mississippi Valley. How very similar was the flood of 1927, some 400 years afterwards.

John James Audubon tells of seeing a cow swim through the second-story window of a house, 7 feet from the ground and 62 feet above the normal level of the Ohio River, in the great flood of 1828. He saw a flood in the more primitive days of the lower Mississippi as he wrote:

All is silent and melancholy, unless when the mournful bleating of a hemmed-in deer reaches your ear or the dismal scream of an eagle or raven is heard, as the foul bird rises, disturbed by your approach, from the carcass on which it was allaying its craving appetite. Bears, cougars, lynxes, and all other quadrupeds that can ascend the trees are observed crouched among their top branches. Hungry in the midst of abundance, although they see floating about them the animals on which they usually prey, they dare not venture to swim to them.

Mark Twain went up the river on a relief boat during the great flood of 1882. The river between Natchez and Baton Rouge flowed 60 miles wide. Its channel could only be guessed by the lines of tree tops barely rising out of the water. People were living on rafts tied to the tree tops or were gathered on Indian mounds that are the haven of refuge in the floods along the river even to-day. He saw many who had moored their cattle on huge rafts traveling about in canoes stripping the leaves from trees to feed their stock.

During the flood of 1927 reporters frequently noted in the daily press items like this: "Some one's house passed through Memphis to-day, bound for the Gulf of Mexico." Mark Twain observed barns and fences floating down the river. He records seeing the lithograph of a soldier on horseback in the flood of 1882 as a mute witness of some hearth invaded and despoiled.

When the flood of 1927 was at its height I came across a picture in an old Harper's Weekly. It was dated March 1, 1884, and the Mississippi River was then in flood. It was a cartoon by Nast, the great cartoonist, and was entitled "An Old Danger and a Slow Government." It represented a mother with outstretched arms and her children floating on a log in the Mississippi flood, and the mother was calling "Help! Help!". At intervals ever since 1884 the same cry has gone out, for the floods come with tragic regularity. Thousands have been crying for help, while hundreds of thousands of homes have been destroyed. The levees have been made a little higher and a little stronger. The Government has merely patched the levees. Congress has thus far never undertaken the real task of flood prevention with a reasonable factor of safety.

I saw in a recent issue of the New York Times a picture of Uncle Sam as he looked at the Mississippi River during the flood of 1927. He was represented as saying to 120,000,000 American people, constituting the greatest nation in this or any other age, "Well, what are you going to do about it?" The people of the lower valley will not have suffered in vain if the Government will solve the problem. The catastrophe of 1927 must not happen again.

I shall never forget the tragic days of April, 1927. Just a few days before the flood the homes in the Mississippi Valley were happy. The fields had been plowed and the crops were beginning to grow. The earth was beginning to yield her increase. Then the floods came and houses and lands were covered with water. Hundreds of thousands of American citizens were made helpless and homeless. I recall one of the most pitiable letters ever written. It was from one of the most cultured women in the Mississippi Valley. She wrote from a refugee camp. The letter told in calm yet burning phrases what had happened in the most fertile valley in the United States. The woman and her husband and children lived in the country. He had accumulated some money and had spent it all in beautifying their home and improving the farm. Twenty-five thousand dollars had been invested in orchards, barns, implements, cows, poultry, and mules. The fruit trees were beginning to bear on that morning in April, 1927.

The father, mother, and children were happy in their attractive home. The shrubs and plants in the yard were beautiful. Then the awful flood came, and it came at night, as floods always do. The home was wrecked and buried in mud. The fruit trees were destroyed, the tenant houses were ruined, the barn washed away and other buildings flooded. As she wrote, this cultured woman and her accomplished husband with their three children had nothing but the clothes on their back and the title to their plantation, that had cost them $100,000, then 15 feet under water. But she was brave and courageous. Hers is but a typical case. The people of the lower valley acquitted themselves like heroes in the awful flood of 1927. I could relate many acts of bravery and recount numerous deeds of heroism. This cultured woman had no complaint to make. She was glad to be alive with her husband and children in a refugee camp. They thanked God they had been rescued. She called attention to her plight and to her sacrifice to point out to the Nation that such a flood must not happen again. Tens of thousands of similar sacrifices have been made. If the Government of the United States will solve adequately the problem of flood control such sacrifices will not have been made in vain. The American people contributed generously for the relief of the flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley. The people of the lower valley are grateful for all the assistance that has been rendered and for all the improvements that have been made. A program and a plan for flood control have been presented to Congress by the engineers of the Government. They have asked for money to solve the problem. The conscience of the Nation is awake to the duty of the hour. The mighty floods must not again be permitted to destroy a domain more fertile than the valley of the Nile. The greatest valley on earth must be protected. Legislation must pass at this session of Congress. Delay is hazardous. There must be no turning back. We have put our hands to the plow in solving this great problem for the benefit of our common country. The hour has struck. The way has been shown by the losses and sacrifices of hundreds of thousands of American people. Yes, the people of the lower Mississippi Valley have done their part. Too long have they paid for the privilege of being overflowed annually and being subjected to bankruptcy periodically. The burden can not and should not be borne longer. It should be shouldered by the Nation. The floods of the Father of Waters, the greatest and mightiest of rivers, must be held in check so they will not again wreck the Mississippi Valley. The deaths, the devastation, the ruins and the wrecks of 1927 must not be repeated. The national wealth is over $400,000,000,000, and is increasing at the rate of $15,000,000,000 annually. The flood control of the Mississippi River is the greatest problem of the United States. It is our foremost national question. It is the responsibility of all the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 40 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am glad, indeed, that these statements have been made by my colleagues on the committee. You ought to know the situation down there during the Mississippi flood. We are all familiar with it. We all have sympathy for those who were in the flood. Those who are opposing the present bill in its present particulars are opposing it because of certain features of the bill, but we have not delayed action on this bill one hour since it was originally brought before the committee.

It is a national problem. If it were not you could not get Government aid and you would not be entitled to it. That is the reason we all concede for it and we are all glad to give it. I have respect for every one of my colleagues who may disagree with me, and there has been no disposition on the part of any Member, so far as I know, to feel differently with reference to myself. I trust not personally, because I am about to consider the legislative aspect of the bill and discuss one provision particularly.

I am only going to take up one phase of this proposition. Later I expect I will be called upon to answer some of those who feel they should criticize or comment upon anything I may say. I trust I will have the opportunity at that time to reply to any questions and I want to do so, because whatever may be the intent, we all agree with the necessity of flood control, but do not agree to the commission or to that part which refuses local contribution. If I do not make out a case requiring local contribution you ought not to support it. That is for you to say. If I make any misstatements they ought to be pointed out, and later on, if they can not be answered, then, of course, you will have a right to your own judgment.

At the outset let me say no man would hire two extra-official, irresponsible carpenters to help build a valuable cabinet. The Government has the highest skilled engineers in the country familiar with the flood task, so to require the President to name a new commission is only to provide more jobs and delay the work. That is all I can here say about a proposed political flood-control commission.

I say political simply because it will degenerate into that kind of a commission in a few short years; that is the result of our experience.

The lower Mississippi River flood control bill now before the House covers a known cost of approximately $1,000,000,000, although both the Senate and House bills afford evidence of easy legislative virtue by carrying on their face only $325,000,000.

That fact will be considered later on, and I shall be glad to support the facts as given to me by the best authority I can find and the best authority to which we have access.

This last amount is less than one-third of the estimated cost. The facts made known to me after the bill had been reported to the House are set forth in RECORD of April 4 with the names of 1,000 owners of property, including large corporate interests whose land, under the bill, the Government must acquire by condemnation or purchase.

After Senate bill S. 3740 was reported by the committee an estimate on the bill was requested from the Army engineers under whom President Coolidge had asked for flood-control plans to place before Congress at the beginning of the session.

Their statement, as set forth in my remarks of April 4, is as follows:

THE VARIOUS ESTIMATES ARE PRESENTED

Costs that may develop from the Jones bill

	Land in large flood ways at $75 per acre	Land in large flood ways at $50 per acre	Land in large flood ways at $25 per acre

Total	913,800,000	820,900,000	728,100,000
From the surveys of tributaries authorized there may develop tributary and upper river work far exceeding $86,000,000 (estimate for parts affected by backwater). The total will be dependent upon local contributions and rights of way payments adopted	86,000,000	86,000,000	86,000,000
Grand total	999,800,000	906,900,000	814,100,000

From the survey authorized from Baton Rouge to Cape Girardeau there may develop a reservoir project which would substitute $1,500,000,000 for the above.

The foregoing is plan recommended by Mississippi River Commission. They outlined but did not recommend a plan to cost $775,000,000, which added to the above: Spillway at Carnarvon; additional levee raising and 5 feet freeboard above maximum flood; additional revetments; and additional tributary work.

There are only three projects seriously considered by either committee, and the above estimates are all from the Army engineers' office.

The item for the Boeuf and Atchafalaya flood ways covers nearly 4,000,000 acres within the proposed flood way that under the Jones bill must be acquired by condemnation or purchase by the Federal Government.

Let me say it is over 37,000,000. I am just giving you general figures so you can use those in comparison. And that figure covers only two flood ways. In all, it is about 4,000,000 acres to be acquired by the Federal Government.

Over 15,000,000 acres outside the flood way are to be protected by flood-control works—all without local contribution.

Different estimates above noted relate to varying cost of lands in the flood ways to be paid for by the Federal Government—without local contribution. Witnesses before the committee claimed their nonproductive cut-over lands subject to floods were worth $75 an acre. If such values are to be fixed by juries or other condemnation agencies where local interests control sentiment and evidence, then damages for improved and timbered lands may average far higher. Nor did the engineers make any estimate for incidental damages that will be presented under this bill by thousands of litigants and other claimants in addition to railways above mentioned. Acreage estimates for the New Madrid flood way are around $150 per acre, and the Mississippi River Commission estimate for floodway rights reach about $100,000,000.

The bill before us is the Senate or Jones bill with slight amendment as reported by the House committee for your consideration. Privilege was reserved to offer any amendments. According to the Army engineers, the project may cost $1,000,000,000, depending on the plan to be adopted by the proposed commission. Both the Senate bill and the previously reported House bill reject any local contributions, placing the entire cost on the Federal Government.

LOCAL CONTRIBUTION

The original Army engineers Mississippi flood-control project recommended to the Seventieth Congress by the President presented a simple business proposal of local contribution from beneficiaries. That has been rejected in bill S. 3740 now before you for consideration.

Contribution is a cardinal principle in Federal, State, and municipal aid.

This case presents no exception. I believe I can establish that fact, because in practically all of these flood cases there is serious destitution and serious destruction of property, sometimes of lives. The same distress occurs in every case. Contribution should be had because thousands of corporations and individual owners under this bill will enjoy enormous financial benefits through flood protection. They should contribute toward the expense of protection. Those temporarily unable to contribute can do so through a proposed amendment which will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to loan funds to such parties at low rates of interest. If destitute or bankrupt and flood-control work is necessary to complete any part of the adopted plan, then a further amendment to be offered will authorize the Secretary of War to proceed in that case without contribution. No more equitable proposal can be offered toward a project that differs little if any in conditions from that presented by past Mississippi and Sacramento flood work or from a hundred other projects later to be presented.

It is inconceivable that the Federal Government should pay $1,000,000 per mile for occasional overflows on a thousand-mile stretch of the Mississippi without receiving any contribution from hundreds of great land and lumber companies that will reap inordinate profits through their ownership of a large part of the 20,000,000 acres to be protected. The taxpayers of every State, including those in the flood districts, will vigorously protest such indefensible tax payments when the real facts are learned.

The Senate Jones bill, S. 3740, in its rejection of local contribution, goes the limit in some respects in its repeal of existing law, but for real overturning of the Federal Constitution by its defenders another Senate bill, S. 819, is a hard rival. The latter appropriates $1,000,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, to be expended at the rate of $100,000,000 annually during a period of 10 years. Not for floods alone, but—to reimburse any State, county, levee district, or other local agency for any moneys advanced or funds expended in the construction of levee works, and to assume the outstanding indebtedness.

That is the bill which was introduced in the Senate, and the distinguished Senator who introduced it appeared before our committee to tell us there should be no contribution locally. Not in this or any other case. That is a common opinion I apprehend with many others.

All that would be needed is then to capture the political commission. This latter bill would immediately cause many millions of dollars of levee securities now held by St. Louis banks to jump over 100 per cent compared with values of a few months ago.

The $71,000,000 railway reimbursement and general damage section written into the Jones bill is a close second to this proposed hold-up of the Federal Treasury by the banks. All that seems to stand in the way of such legislation appears to be a presidential veto.

THE BILL PREVENTS ANY CONTRIBUTION FROM BENEFICIARIES

In all other Government-aid legislation the Government is protected from inordinate demands and gross favoritism by requiring local contribution where private interests are primarily benefited. Benefits in this flood-control measure often not "special" in character reach presumably into billions of dollars in the aggregate.

From section 1 of the bill—S. 3740—I quote:

That it is hereby declared to be the sense of Congress that the principle of local contribution toward cost of flood-control work which has been incorporated in all previous national legislation on the subject (and is now the law) is sound as recognizing the special interest of the local population in its own protection and as a means of preventing inordinate requests for unjustified items of work having no material national interest * * * and in view of the gigantic scale of the project involving flood waters of a volume and flowing from a drainage area largely outside the States most affected and far exceeding those of any other river in the United States no local contributions to the project herein adopted is required.

Senate bill 3740 as passed by the Senate and as reported with amendments by the House requires the Federal Government to acquire for flood ways 3,713,696 acres, or probably an additional 10 per cent for levees, spillways, and other purposes, making a total of about 4,000,000 acres of land belonging to 7,500 separate owners. This land must be acquired by separate suits for condemnation unless purchased by Government agencies for prices the agency deems "reasonable," and the land acquired by the original owners in many cases for a few cents an acre is to be procured by the Government at a minimum estimate of $100,000,000, and a probable expense of nearer $300,000,000 after costs and all expenses are considered.

OVER 7,000 SUITS INVITED BY THE BILL

All are familiar with lands not worth $10 an acre that have brought ten times that amount when needed by a railroad that submitted values to a jury of good men and true. Over 7,000 such cases are invited by the terms of the bill unless bought at private sale.

Every Member who is an attorney has presumably had the same experience I have had, that when a suit is brought against a railroad company land condemned has brought several times more than local agencies could get it for, and more than the Government can buy it for in this case.

This is only one element in the lower Mississippi flood-control project that is reasonably certain to cost the Federal Government $1,000,000,000. Counting $100,000,000 estimated for bank, flood-control protection, $71,000,000 to $100,000,000 for changing railway tracks and relocations—and just compensation paid by the United States for all property taken, damaged, or destroyed * * * including all expenditures by persons, corporations, and public service corporations, made necessary to adjust or conform their property because of the spillways, flood ways, or diversion channels herein provided. (Sec. 4 of S. 3740.)

All these may make a draft on the Federal Treasury of more than $1,000,000,000. Engineers can not submit any close guess. Laymen, including Congress, must go it blind.

FLOOD WAYS SHOULD BE FURNISHED BY LOCAL INTERESTS

Original estimates by the War Department of $296,000,000 for control of the lower Mississippi were based on contribution by States and local interests that were to furnish flood ways. Other estimates to afford complete protection through local contribution relate to methods of handling the problem at less than one-third of the estimates on the Jones bill here before us.

A vast cost of one thousand million dollars in S. 3740 occurs through a proposed change in existing law which now requires local contribution. Every grasping agency and every interest naturally looks for personal pecuniary advantage. Without contribution, under this bill they will march on to the Public Treasury with all the vigor and speed of a disciplined army.

I do not in this suggestion refer to the people who are in distress down there in the valley. They are not the ones who will get these great profits. Often they do not own any land or only small parcels. The large owners will get the great profits.

Human experience has ever been to that effect. If we adopt the plan of giving away the taxpayers' money without limit to rehabilitate or benefit great interests that can bring political pressure to bear on Congress, then a hundred other flood-control projects now or soon to be knocking at committee doors, from the States of Washington and North Dakota to Vermont and from California and Texas to the Carolinas, will all rightfully demand the same treatment without contribution. When joined in an omnibus bill encompassing all sections of the country an irresistible measure will roll through Congress and the Treasury with greater speed and thoroughness than any pork barrel of old.

As set forth in the minority report to the reported but abandoned Reid bill, such expenditures are certain to outdistance all past measures, because while Army engineers have control of river and harbor projects and have rejected 80 per cent of those surveyed, there will be few if any rejections when an omnibus flood bill is once put on the skidways. Nothing in or out of Congress will be able to stop its passage.

LOCAL CONTRIBUTION IS NOW THE LAW

A dozen years ago, when Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, joined me in opposition to similar bills we both voted for the law granting Government aid for Mississippi River flood control, with a proviso that local contribution should be furnished to the amount of one-third the total cost. That principle was adopted because local benefits to property and increased local values warranted contribution and also because any other policy would throw to the winds every safeguard now had by the Federal Treasury. That principle of contribution adopted by Congress 10 years ago and embodied into law is as just and necessary to-day as ever before.

Recent statements by Mr. MADDEN that the adoption of the Jones bill before the House will open many avenues of waste and invite financial disaster with eventual expenditures by the Government ostensibly for flood purposes of $5,000,000,000 is as true now as it was then. Those who argue loudest and longest against Federal interference with the rights of States are often the same ones who demand for their States extravagant appropriations from the Federal Government to be obtained without contribution. Candidates for office from President down to Senators and Congressmen are confronted with this problem when corralling States or communities directly or indirectly affected by flood-control measures.

Every legislative project from farm relief to Boulder Dam, flood control, and lesser measures involving countless millions have been joined into an omnibus movement to rush through Congress these great measures by widespread legislative trades, while telegrams and letters from political supporters back home deluge the average Member who seeks to do his duty to the Government and to measure up to his legislative responsibility.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield now. I will be very glad to yield later when I get through with my statement.

Those familiar with river and harbor projects which are supposed to be confined to navigable waters believe the doors of the Treasury and Budget estimates will afford little obstruction if local contributions are not furnished. The flood-control field threatens all Government Treasury control when omnibus bills then become the fashion.

RECOMMENDATION OF PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

First. In recommending the Mississippi flood-control work President Coolidge in his message to Congress said:

Under the present law the land adjacent to the dikes has paid one-third of the cost of their construction. This has been a most extraordinary concession from the plan adopted in relation to irrigation, where the general rule has been that the land benefited should bear the entire expense. It is true, of course, that the troublesome waters do not originate on the land to be reclaimed, but it is also true that such waters have a right of way through that section of the country and the land there is charged with that easement. It is the land of this region that is to be benefited. To say that it is unable to bear any expense of reclamation is the same thing as saying that it is not worth reclaiming.

Second. The War Department, familiar with the "improvement" by Congress of a large number of uncommercial waters through river and harbor omnibus bills, has this to say:

It is axiomatic that States and other local authorities should supply all lands and assume all pecuniary responsibility for damages that may result from the execution of the project. It would be revolutionary for the Federal Government to establish the precedent of buying part of the land upon which to build protective works to increase the value of the remainder. Similarly it would be very unwise for the United States in generously helping a section of the country to render itself liable for consequential damages. * * *

CONTRIBUTIONS FAVORED TO PREVENT WASTE

The Government may even bear 80 per cent of such costs, but substantial local cooperation is essential to avoid waste. * * *

It would seem that the States should share with the Federal Government the burden of assisting the levee districts and individual property owners, especially in view of the fact that the States benefit directly by the increased taxes from land made more valuable by reason of its protection.

Those recommendations are based on business and legislative experience. They are summarily rejected in S. 3740.

Here is a bill proposing a project to cost the Federal Government over a billion dollars. A year or more will be required to organize the commission so as to determine a plan and its scope. Ten years or more, it is estimated, will be required to complete the work with an average governmental expenditure of $100,000,000 yearly for this single flood-control project.

Under the bill the Federal Government instead of local interests will furnish 4,000,000 acres of flood ways that were originally given by the Government to the States as swamp lands. These lands are now to be bought back or condemned at an estimated average cost to the Government of possibly $75 an acre. As stated in the minority report to the Reid bill signed by six members of the committee:

FLOOD-WAY SERVITUDE

For untold centuries the lower Mississippi has carried off the waters of many States. During a full century the people living in the great Mississippi River Valley settled on these alluvial lands subject to overflow and floods. They drained the swamps and built levees entirely at their own expense, without Government help. Under the swamp land act they were enabled to buy these lands at nominal cost. In 1917 Congress by law agreed to contribute two-thirds of all moneys expended for levee construction.

The flood servitude has ever existed and the flood ways recommended by Army engineers are through these ancient natural diversion channels. The Federal Government has thus far expended about $190,000,000 for navigation and flood control on the lower Mississippi River and a further sum of $100,000,000 for river-bank revertment is to be expended under the direction of Army engineers irrespective of any separate bill for flood control, although it will be part of the flood-control system.

AN UNPRECEDENTED PARADOX

It must be remembered that a large part of the land in the Mississippi Valley, now asked to be protected by the Federal Government entirely at Federal Government expense, once belonged to the Federal Government. Thereafter a strange cycle of exploitation followed. In order to drain swamp areas the Federal Government gave swamp lands to the several States. Such lands were frequently highly valuable because of heavy natural timber growth, and curiously some of that land lies in districts where diversion channels are now planned through old natural flood ways to aid in the control of present-day occasional floods. Under the provisions of the committee bill the lands so given away by the Federal Government and so sold by the States at $1.25 an acre, now that the valuable timber has been removed, are to be sold back to the Federal Government at a cost of $75 an acre for cut-over lands—without contribution.

The following lands were given to States named under the swamp land act:

	Acres
Arkansas	7,686,455
Louisiana	9,405,929
Mississippi	3,288,418
Missouri	3,346,933

These lands when drained have become the most fertile in the whole country, but when they were drained and reclaimed it vastly reduced the natural flood basins of the Mississippi Valley.

The Government is now directed to buy back these flood ways so given to the States.

THE GOVERNMENT TO REIMBURSE ALL THE RAILWAYS

By the terms of the Senate bill to secure complete flood protection for certain railways the Government must pay these railways over $71,000,000 to persuade them to receive the safety they so forcibly and naturally demand after their 1927 flood losses of $6,318,000. Damages galore from other interests similarly situated await the bill's passage; and when this $1,000,000,000 project is written into law a cloud of other flood-control projects will press for similar recognition and be passed under a generous omnibus bill.

From the list of 7,500 owners of the 4,000,000 acres in the flood way inserted in the RECORD of April 4, two score or more are mentioned from among the larger holdings, to call attention to those vitally interested in having the Federal Government construct this flood control without local contribution. Instead of having the localities furnish the flood ways as proposed by the War Department and submitted to Congress by President Coolidge, this bill provides that the Federal Government must buy or condemn by court procedure all the flood-way lands held by the 7,500 owners for their benefit and the benefit of the owners of the remaining 15,000,000 acres to be protected.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will be pleased to yield later. I am going to make a fairly complete statement of the case, and then, if there is any time left, I will yield, and I will go beyond the time I have already allotted myself. One can only take up one subject at a time, and we must remember that this is a large proposition; and this is the first time in history anyone has ever tried to put through Congress a project of this kind without local contributions.

The Tensas Land Co. has flood-way holdings, according to the RECORD of April 4, reaching 226,000 acres originally bought at a figure, I am informed, around a dollar an acre and has an office in the city of Chicago. I am also informed the total holdings of the company in and out of the flood way are far greater, and that company agents have made estimates of their value at $50 per acre when protected from floods.

I am also informed the International Harvester Co. is interested in 40,000 acres of cut-over land, though not in the flood way.

If this information is reasonably accurate, it discloses that companies which paid a nominal price and may have removed valuable timber from the proposed flood way, now expect to sell land in the flood way to the Government or force condemnation for over $10,000,000 in a single case, or possibly fifty times the cost price. Necessarily the information furnished may not be accurate in all particulars, but it is sufficient to place Congress on guard when hundreds of other large property owners are also interested in the Jones bill's passage.

INTERESTS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE

Ex-Senator William Lorimer, of Chicago, was in almost daily attendance on the House Flood Control Committee for five months. He stated to the committee he had small holdings that would be increased in value by the flood-control project and naturally he spoke against local contribution.

I am informed Mr. Lorimer has his office in the same building in Chicago in which the Tensas Land Co., owning 226,000 acres, maintains its office—both owning lands affected by this bill. I do not charge any connection or employment with this or with other large Illinois lumber interests in the flood district, but if the information is true and if such interests are combined it indicates influences exist that could well afford to finance many trains, full-page advertisements and various other propaganda in an effort to pass a measure that relieves those having flood lands to sell. A glance will disclose many companies that have their headquarters also in other States and that are to reap big profits from their southern flood lands without local contribution.

Why exempt these companies from local contribution?

The foregoing list of corporations owning over 10,000 acres each in the proposed flood ways is from the report of 460 corporation owners named by me in the RECORD of April 4, but it does not attempt to name all such owners within the 10,000 acres list or over. Double that number of owners of 5,000 acres or over are included in the same list and many large landowners outside of corporations are listed, like G. G. Snowden, with 19,986 acres, Frank G. Nelson, 38,961 acres, R. L. Black, 17,533 acres, A. L. Hardin, 13,198 acres, J. J. Bowden, H. W. Sherbourne, E. B. Schwing, J. N. Parr, William Cypress, and others, each with over 10,000 acres. Why should they not contribute to this flood-control project?

Hundreds, possibly thousands, of owners of small parcels in the proposed flood ways are owners of a portion of the 15,000,000 acres outside the flood ways to be protected by the flood-control project, and holdings of outside properties so protected will presumably average larger than the above list in the proportion that 4,000,000 acres of flood way stands to 15,000,000 acres outside, but completely rejected.

TAXES FOR FLOODS AND FOR HIGHWAYS

No argument is offered that these corporations or individual large owners are more responsible financially than thousands of smaller owners of the 19,000,000 acres in and out of the flood ways now subject to floods, but from that showing no one can consistently say the farmers in my State and in every other State of the Union, often practically bankrupt, should be called upon to pay any part of highway building now undertaken by cooperation with the State and Federal Government. This difference in fact may be noted that while highway construction rarely raises the value of abutting property 10 cents an acre because of that so-called improvement, complete protection to corporations and owners of over 19,000,00 acres will furnish a fairy god father profit system for those owning land in the flood way at outside figures never before known, if a $75 estimate for cut-over lands is any index.

A PROPER FLOOD RELIEF BILL SHOULD BE PASSED

As repeatedly stated, a Mississippi River flood-control measure should be passed by Congress to give early relief to the lower Mississippi districts, and I favor waiving contributions where responsible Government agencies determine what localities, if any, can not pay either by early contributions or through Government loans; but if this bill passes the House without any effort to compel contribution from the owners, a thousand of whom alone were specifically named in my remarks of April 4, then the bill, if it passes Congress, should get what it richly deserves—a veto.

If the facts can be placed before the country there can be no question that public sentiment will heartily approve such veto. If sustained in either House, I am sure those representing the flooded districts will gladly accept aid heretofore proposed in the President's message, generously offered by the Government, and will cheerfully contribute toward their own permanent protection.

Increased values of lands, bonds, mortgages, and of business generally will immediately be reflected upon the passage of a law that gives complete protection. This is evidenced by advertisements in New Orleans papers predicting 100 per cent increase in river-land values within 90 days.

For over five months the House committee has been engaged intermittently in the consideration of this Mississippi River flood-control project. Beginning hearings November 7 of last year, about 300 witnesses were heard, including numerous Senators and Representatives in Congress who quite generally depicted flood conditions in the Mississippi Valley, and concluded with the statement that this is a national project to be built entirely at national expense.

Practically all of these witnesses were from the valley States or had flood-control projects of their own for later consideration, which may have unconsciously influenced their opposition to any contribution for the Mississippi River project, and later for their own.

Accompanying this formidable array of witnesses full-page advertisements in many northern papers, paid for by destitute flood districts, challenged the sympathy of the country. Opening hearings with special train services from different sections and an advertised attendance of a thousand visitors, it is certain that no member of the committee had doubts of influences behind the Mississippi River flood situation. The disaster was known before the hearings and sympathy insured early passage of a relief bill if not delayed by its supporters.

NO MEMBER OF CONGRESS IS OPPOSED TO FLOOD RELIEF

No member of the committee and no Member of Congress, so far as I am informed, has ever opposed a relief bill for the lower river floods. The only real question for determination related to plans to be adopted, machinery of administration, and policy and extent of Federal Government contribution. All favored generous aid by the Government. However, an absolute gift of a billion dollars or more by the Federal Government was never suggested in the hearings or committee meetings. A demand that the taxpayers of the country assume all control work, damages alleged to effect 7,500 flood-way owners and countless thousands of railway, lumber, real estate, and other interests in or out of the immediate flood ways or spillways, never was presented nor received any consideration by any committee of either House.

The Mississippi flood situation has been caused in large part by land reclamation and drainage projects that have closed up or restricted the river's natural outlets and flood ways. Nature's work of countless centuries was changed by men in recent years for their own use and profit.

Only one consequence could result. About a dozen years ago, as stated, Congress was asked to aid in the lower Mississippi River's control, not alone for navigation on which over a hundred million dollars had been spent, but also aid for flood control. I took part in the discussion and determination when that measure was then before the House, and although responsibility of the Federal Government in no way was directly involved by flood conditions, Congress then agreed by law to contribute two-thirds of the expense for flood-control works in addition to all expenditures on the river for navigation purposes.

THE MISSISSIPPI AND SACRAMENTO FLOOD-RELIEF PROJECTS IN THIS SAME BILL

The law of contribution has been in effect for over 10 years and, according to reports by the Mississippi River Commission, it has been found workable and effective in practically all situations. Disastrous floods in the Sacramento Valley are also recommended by our committee to be of national importance, but only one-third of the cost of a new project of $51,000,000 is to be borne by the Federal Government. The remaining two-thirds is to be paid by the State of California and local interests protected. With the exception of loss of lives on the lower Mississippi, both flood districts report the same distress and to the same degree.

California, after its people have spent $100,000,000 on its floods in the Sacramento Valley, now offers to contribute two-thirds of the cost of the $51,000,000 additional improvement, of which the State government is to contribute $17,000,000, the valley residents an equal amount, and the Federal Government the remaining $17,000,000. California now has a State and local debt—Statistical Abstract, 1926, page 220—reaching $16,582,000, based on last reports available, and the per capita indebtedness of $142.81 is more than double that of any of the States affected by floods in the lower Mississippi Valley. I am not offering any argument as to the injustice exercised toward California and its people beyond a brief statement of the facts existing in a country when every State must contribute its part of the tax for all public improvements and for any work that increases the holdings of the Mississippi Valley corporations and landowners hereinbefore named.

A loss of 200 lives in the Mississippi flood or of more than that number in a recent California reservoir catastrophe can not be minimized, but it should not determine action by Congress where a change of policy that discriminates between sections is certain to prevent any attempt at equal justice. A policy of no contribution for the lower Mississippi will involve the Federal Government in a campaign of prodigal waste measured only by the cupidity and greed of individuals and communities throughout the country that are invited to join in unlimited raids on the Federal Treasury without local contribution. It is suggested that to differentiate between California and the lower Mississippi projects may indicate a purpose by Congress to discriminate. This is unlikely to occur, because in the next omnibus bill all projects from California to Vermont will ask for the same consideration that we now give the Mississippi River, and why not? Why does not California receive the same as the Mississippi River project now?

President Coolidge, in accordance with existing law and established policy, recommended congressional action on the Mississippi flood problem to be accompanied by local contribution. The Secretary of War and Army engineers made the same recommendations to the Nation's Executive and the Mississippi River Commission, based on past experience, declared that policy was necessary to withstand inordinate demands.

THE MINORITY REPORT ON THE REID BILL

When the so-called Reid bill was reported to the House in February, six committee members signed a minority report disclosing that instead of $325,000,000, according to experts, the cost would reach $1,400,000,000; that the bill contained no plan or definite purpose; invited needless delay for a new survey of reservoir sites; and three-fourths of the minority report was devoted to the unwise, unjust, and dangerous precedent proposed by that bill in its demand for no local contribution.

No further action occurred with the House committee for several weeks, nor were any committee meetings held until after the Jones bill passed the Senate. I am stating a fact without ascribing reasons. A feverish effort then occurred for two or three days on the part of one or two members of the House committee to whip into shape a substitute for the Jones bill. The character of the proceeding, the objectionable House bill features to be reoffered, the danger of delay, and differences to be settled in conference all appealed to the House committee, so that on a motion to report the Jones bill to the House, and there offer amendments, the vote to substitute was 14 to 6, including every member of the committee representing Mississippi flood districts from Cairo to the Gulf.

At this point I pause to say Chairman REID before the Rules Committee called the 14 members of the Flood Control Committee a Coxey's army because after nearly five months of uncertainty and delay they voted to report the Senate bill. Among the ablest and strongest men in the House on that committee so voted because they loved Rome more than any leader. They need no defense individually or collectively and are amply able to speak for themselves.

I have no purpose to waste time in personalities or with Chairman REID's characterization of the 14 members of the Flood Control Committee or his references to Representative KOPP or myself. All have extended to him every courtesy during the past five months. I believe the fact that 14 members of the committee acted on their own judgment speaks for itself and they were within their rights in differing from the chairman even as a minority did when calling attention to the Reid bill, which carried a cost of $1,400,000,000 instead of $325,000,000 as reported.

The reference as to "political outcasts" I leave my colleagues to answer. After many years' service in Congress I never felt more comfortable among my colleagues than now. [Applause.] I do not have to consult any leader nor have I ever recanted or flopped in legislative efforts to find the loaded wagon. I would not change such independence for the chairmanship of the Flood Control Committee or for any other committee of the House, nor do I criticize others for so doing. Each must decide for himself. Washington press statements say "'on the highest' authority at the White House the President's opposition to the House Reid flood control bill is based on the same objections stated by Representative FREAR." If true, it fortifies my own judgment in opposition to this bill as reported. [Applause.]

Personally, I respect the chairman of this committee. I have worked with him for years. I admire him because he is a brilliant man, but I have the right to differ from him, and I am differing from him now because I can not take any other position under my own honest convictions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will be pleased to yield later on.

CONSISTENT FOR OVER 10 YEARS ON FLOOD CONTROL

I am at least consistent with my position of more than 10 years ago and if I am fortunately in the distinguished company of the President, Chairman MARTIN MADDEN, Leader TILSON, and others of my party on this bill, it demonstrates that sometimes I am "regular" even if my critic is not so now. During past years I have occasionally believed it my duty to differ from the advisers of Presidents and without presumption have helped to bring success to the abolishment of the old public-building pork barrel and defeat of the Mellon tax bill, the sales tax, the dye embargo, and also helped on my committee to pass the soldiers' bonus bill. I followed my honest judgment then as now.

Others did their duty according to their judgment and I have not criticized them nor offered any apologies for the past record. The duty of every Member in the House is as certain as that of the President. He is the Executive charged under his oath of office with protection of the Federal Government's best interests. That also is our own responsibility.

I am not disposed to answer critics even when the door is left wide open for recrimination. Nor will I be swerved from proper criticism of this bill. The estimated cost of the Jones bill of $1,000,000,000 indicates the importance of local contribution. The Jones bill will give 460 corporations and a like number of large owners in the flood ways an outside price to be paid by the Government on all their 3,000,000-acre holdings out of the 4,000,000 acres, the flood ways to be acquired by the Government.

The Jones bill will give to several railways, according to their own estimate, $71,835,000 from the Federal Treasury to relocate their tracks, although the 1927 flood alone caused these same roads a loss of $6,318,000. Against this they ask future complete flood protection without any local contribution from themselves for permanent insurance.

The Jones bill will give damages and compensation to other interests that believe themselves temporarily injured, and all these multitudinous separate interests, whether in or out of the flood ways, will have the right to resort to local courts and local juries or local commissions partial to local interests for their damages and compensation sure to be collected from a wealthy Government.

The Jones bill will add incalculable wealth to the bondholders and landholders when one thousand million dollars is advanced by the Government.

The Jones bill will benefit thousands of other property owners outside the flood way without one dollar of local contribution. Can any man in his wildest fancy predict what this Jones bill, passed by the Senate in a little over one hour's debate, is to cover? What is the end with omnibus bills other than the bottom of the Treasury vaults? One presidential candidate proposes a bond issue. His party associates demand in the same breath a $300,000,000 annual tax cut. To adopt the slogan of a former Member, "Vote against any tax bill and for every appropriation."

WHAT IS THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT?

We speak of the Federal Government legislatively as a thing separate and apart from our own people, and so we lightly waive local contribution to a thousand million dollar project that possibly will cost the taxpayers of New York two or three hundred million dollars, Illinois one hundred million, and a comparatively small State like Wisconsin will proportionately contribute in taxes over $20,000,000 toward this one project. No exact basis is afforded because of varying conditions, but every expenditure by the Federal Government is paid into the Federal Treasury proportionately by the several States.

Great calamities must be relieved by those who can contribute, but any stock-jobbing proposal that increases $40 drainage or levee bonds to $100 because of complete flood control or that enhances the value of land often bought at nominal value to several times that value should be rejected. The Federal Government, which means all the States, has right to demand through its Senators and Representatives in Congress square dealing for the Government. That means local contribution from those to be benefited.

Every Member sympathizes with unfortunate flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley and with the equally distressed sufferers in the Sacramento Valley which I have visited, but when Congress in the bill before us compels California to pay two-thirds of the total cost of flood protection while we throw wide open the door for stock jobbing and land exploitation in the Mississippi Valley, we abandon all attempt at square dealing with the Federal Government or California.

The Federal Government is your State and my State. They pay all National expenditures in addition to all local State and municipal costs. If the flood legislation reaches the proportions prophesied by Chairman MADDEN, of $5,000,000,000, then Wisconsin will eventually pay $100,000,000 toward this new legislative flood industry—without any return. Responsibility for such payments by States rests with our action on this "no-contribution" precedent.

THE JADWIN PLAN AND THE JONES BILL

General Jadwin's plan of flood control was introduced by Senator JONES in the Senate. That bill provided all flood ways should be furnished by local interests and that other contributions should be made according to law and past practice. That original bill is not like the JONES bill which passed the Senate and is reported here.

Protest must arise when taxpayers of the country learn that instead of providing $296,000,000 from the Treasury under the Jadwin plan with local contributions, Congress precipitately has placed on these taxpayers a one billion dollar burden that will serve as a tempting morsel for other billions to cover other flood-control projects in future omnibus bills without contribution.

I have furnished data in the RECORD of April 4 that will not be here repeated. It gives conclusive reasons for requiring local contributions where Government aid is given.

When the bill is read amendments will be offered to carry out the original purposes of the act. I am desirous of affording my colleagues full opportunity to be heard on the bill and so have confined my remarks largely to the matter of local contribution.

In a bill that involved such a vast problem to be worked out legislatively, deliberation instead of speed is the surest way to expedite the project. I trust amendments may be accepted that will strengthen the bill and protect the Federal Government, for after all we are as much the servants of the general Government as of the districts that we represent. What we do here is to be the law for all time, and on a contract involving possibly a billion dollars we should give the close scrutiny and deliberate judgment it deserves. I am hopeful we may bring out something we can all vote for and relieve the lower Mississippi Valley without delay, but responsibility for any failure or delay must be borne by those who refuse to concede the justice of accompanying Government aid with contribution based on benefits received.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes more.

I would like to say a word with respect to the map I have here, but the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], whom I admire very much, has asked me several times to yield.

Mr. COX. Somebody had to go first, either the gentleman or myself. Does the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; only for a question, because I have so much ground I want to cover.

Mr. COX. I would like for the gentleman to be good enough to yield for several questions.

Mr. FREAR. Then I must decline to yield now. I will later answer any question that any Member on the floor wants to ask, but I can not at this time. I am too familiar with the way of the gentleman from Georgia. He is a good cross-examiner, and I fear would take too much of my time. There are Members here that I know are anxious to hear my statement, and I can not afford to yield too much of my time now.

On this map [indicating] out to this point is included approximately 20,000,000 acres of land that is to be controlled by these two flood ways, known as the Boeuf and Atchafalaya, and the other flood ways taking them altogether. This is only illustrative of the protection to be afforded here, and taking them altogether they amount to 20,000,000 acres. It does not attempt to fix the actual limits protected. If there are any questions later, I will be glad to answer them.

This is the protected area of 19,000,000 or 20,000,000 acres outside the flood way, which takes 4,000,000 acres. The red color is the amount of land owned by corporations and large landholders; it is 77 per cent, and the poor, unfortunate little fellows, some 6,500 of them, own only 23 per cent. These are figures furnished me by the Army engineers. They made the map for me. Are you going to give three-quarters of the land in this flood way without local contribution, with a protection of 15,000,000 additional acres without local contribution? If you do so, I will have to go to my people in Wisconsin to pay the taxes and you to the people of Georgia to pay the taxes that protects these great interests without contribution.

Here is a plan furnished by the Army engineers as to the cost of this original bill [indicating]. Here are the various items. This is an enlarged diagram of the estimate, which I will print in my speech.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman justify the application of the principle of local contribution upon the idea of special benefit?

Mr. FREAR. I do, the same as I would with highways, irrigation, or anything else wherein the Government contributes Federal aid.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman concede that no personal liability attaches to the owner of land for the special assessment made?

Mr. FREAR. Under this bill?

Mr. COX. By the law of the several States.

Mr. FREAR. I am taking it as you have it in this bill. Unless special benefits are shown to affect railways, I am not going to discuss a legal question with the gentleman from Georgia. Time is too limited.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman explain again his map wherein he says that the large corporations and landowners are going to profit especially by this legislation?

Mr. FREAR. These are the lands in the flood ways owned by the corporations and people which have to be purchased or condemned, about 4,000,000 acres in these flood ways.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Their profit will consist of selling the land to the Government?

Mr. FREAR. Perhaps by condemnation proceedings and whatever process they get the land under, but at excess prices where the Government has to buy.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The 77 per cent has nothing to do with the flood area?

Mr. FREAR. No. This is the land here, and this is in the flood area. The 77 per cent relates to that part owned by the corporations and large landowners.

Mr. BROWNE. How many condemnation proceedings will there probably be?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, we can not tell; there are 7,500 owners in this tract, and of that number 1,000 are named who own over one section.

Mr. BROWNE. There will be several thousand?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. I will say to my colleague, if we can not get it by purchase we must get it by condemnation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman says the testimony before the committee showed that the value of the land to be $60 or $75 an acre. Is that value based on the land subject to flood danger or land after it has been protected as it would be by the bill?

Mr. FREAR. The land subject to flood danger.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The uncolored portion of the map between the pink area and that of the dark color is the area that will derive benefits from the protection?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; that is it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. These large corporations would benefit anyway, even if they had to make a contribution? Yes; many times. I do not see the force of the gentleman's argument against the elimination of the 20 per cent assessment.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, the gentleman misses the point entirely, I am afraid. The Army engineer bill proposes these flood ways shall be furnished free to the Government. We have to buy them under the bill. It is not the 20 per cent I am now discussing. That is a small item. That only amounts to around $30,000,000. This other item relates to flood ways that the Government must purchase under the terms of this bill, as opposed to the Jadwin plan. That is in the neighborhood of $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 expense to the Government to purchase these rights.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the States did furnish the necessary land to provide the flood ways, would that meet the gentleman's objection to the bill?

Mr. FREAR. That would practically meet it, although I think local contributions should be had to some extent to avoid a dangerous precedent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman please tell me what the blue line on the map means?

Mr. FREAR. That color represents the land owned by the small owners. About 23 per cent compared with 77 per cent owned by the corporations and large owners.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where is the river?

Mr. FREAR. It is away over here to the right. This is going down the flood ways used to care for surplus waters under the plan.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Where did the gentleman get his information as to the value of $75 an acre placed on land in Louisiana?

Mr. FREAR. I did not get it at $75 an acre from the people of Louisiana any more than I did from the people of Arkansas as to the value of their land, but the amount was estimated around $150 at New Madrid. A witness from Arkansas who testified before our committee said it was worth $75 an acre for his cut-over lands, and some figures were larger than that amount. I do not attempt to say what the Government must pay, but that will be eliminated if local interests and States furnish under the Jadwin plan.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. And the statement relative to Missouri is what the gentleman bases his statement on in respect to the value of lands in Louisiana?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; not entirely. Will the gentleman give the value that it can be obtained for?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. We had an estimate made for the flood ways in Louisiana at an average price of $23 an acre for the Boeuf Basin, and $15 an acre for the Atchafalaya Basin.

Mr. FREAR. Just try to get those lands for the Government and the gentleman will find it is a hard proposition at such prices, I fear. A man is going to get all that he can for his land when he finds a buyer who has to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. We had many people from the Tensas and the Boeuf Basin, and did they not state that their people are always against the establishment of any flood way there at all?

Mr. FREAR. Surely. I do not question that. That is the heart of the proposition. There was not a proposition which came up to us in committee that some one did not oppose because they were going to be flooded or the waters were to be diverted from ways they felt would injure them.

That is my answer to Brother WILSON, of the committee. Everyone knows that we were constantly confronted with that difficulty, and the Army engineers finally said that their plan, known as the Jadwin plan, is the plan that they could give us. No civil or other engineer has offered anything that is superior to that. If so, I would like to have it presented to the House. Of course, the Jadwin plan is only the result of investigations and conferences with possibly a hundred Army engineers, and then a determination in the one submitted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas and Mr. CROSSER rose.

Mr. FREAR. I can not yield now. I wish I could do so, but I am going to speak again, because I presume this suggestion of local contribution is going to be hit and hammered by my colleagues. If I have made any misstatement, I want them to correct it and I shall be glad to be set right, but I have submitted what I believe to be a fair statement of the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FREAR. Under leave to extend I append hereto the following:

COOLIDGE DECLARES FLOOD RELIEF BILLS DANGER TO COUNTRY—WOULD COST $1,500,000,000 FOR CHANNELS AND RIGHTS OF WAY, EXPERTS TELL HIM—BENEFIT TO EVERYBODY BUT REAL SUFFERERS—BELIEVES COMMISSION PLAN IS USELESS; BODY PROBABLY IRRESPONSIBLE

Flood control bills now pending before Congress appear to President Coolidge ideally suited to benefit everybody except the actual flood sufferers whom they were originally intended to protect. Railroad companies, lumber interests, individuals holding shares in these concerns, and especially contractors interested in the constructions involved, seem to the President destined to derive majority benefits from the contemplated measures. All in all, he thinks the situation now in Congress is impossible.

Large sums, which some of the experts whom President Coolidge has consulted have estimated as high as $1,500,000,000, will be expended under the bill to buy rights of way, channels for the flood way and contingent expenses, including major maintenance costs.

The letting of contracts for the actual construction would be taken out of the hands of Army engineers, where it has heretofore always rested, to become the jurisdiction of the special commission formed under the provisions of the bill.

DOUBTS COMMISSION'S VALUE

This commission, President Coolidge feels, would be irresponsive, even were it not irresponsible, to the demands and needs of the ordinary flood sufferer.

The principle of no local contribution for works of this kind, in flat contradiction to the stated policy of the administration, appears to President Coolidge to provide an extremely dangerous precedent in matters of this kind.

He regards such a policy as equivalent to bestowing very definite favors upon certain communities at the expense of the remainder of the country.

The immediate reaction, Mr. Coolidge fears, will be that other communities when similarly situated will also call for help from the National Treasury to which they themselves will not expect to contribute. President Coolidge, therefore, regards as beyond computation the obligations for which the central Government might therefore become responsible.

RESERVOIRS HELD FUTILE

He foresees an additional danger in the new policy which Congress is considering, that by which the Government, by shouldering completely all flood-relief work, might become responsible for all future flood damages, both on the Mississippi and on any other rivers whose improvement the United States might be obligated to undertake in the future.

The President has discussed with Representative STRONG, of Kansas, and Representative GARBER, of Oklahoma, a proposal to form a large number of reservoirs on the upper reaches of the tributaries of the Mississippi as a measure of flood control, but from an analysis of the proposal by General Jadwin, who was present at the conference, it appeared to President Coolidge that this plan would not give adequate control.

[From Report of the Mississippi River Commission on Contribution]

(P. 81, Committee Doc. No. 1, 70th Cong.)

The commission is firmly of the opinion that some degree of local financial cooperation is essential to a successful accomplishment of a flood-control project. This opinion is based not on a belief that local interests should share in the cost by reason of their being beneficiaries, but on the belief that without a local sharing in the cost the commission, as an agent of the Federal Government disbursing Federal funds, will be confronted by inordinate demands for flood-control works of large cost which will, if granted free of cost, be demanded for the protection of areas insignificant in size and value, merely because the owner would need to underwrite no part of the cost. Even with a local contribution of one-third, as is now required, the commission has been importuned to levee areas unworthy of the cost of such protection. The commission has been able in the past to apply Federal funds according to its best judgment by its adoption of and adherence to a policy requiring that applicants for Federal aid prove the worthiness of their levee projects. This has been possible because the only cases presented would, if approved, entail liability on the applicants for the costs of rights of way and one-third the costs of construction. With no restriction on demands the commission foresees a multitude of projects of little or no merit which it should deny in the interest of the public whose funds it will handle, but which, lacking authority to call for an outlay of funds by the applicants, it would find difficult or impossible to deny.

The commission would view with deep concern the adoption of a Federal flood-control project that would absolve local interests from participation in costs in levee maintenance. It believes that part of the cost thereof should be borne by the local beneficiaries. On the other hand, it believes that the Federal Government should pay part of the maintenance costs and should reserve full control of such work. The Federal Government alone is equipped with vessels and plant to meet emergencies and should stand ready to perform that function.

The commission believes that protection of lands of small value, except for timber and basins of small area, will be discouraged by a requirement for local participation in cost, as outlined in paragraph 356.

The commission is aware that its operations in the past have been at times hampered through the failure of some levee districts to furnish assurance of their share of the funds needed for levee work, thus adversely affecting the prosecution of the work, but believes that the advantages derived from local participation in costs would more than compensate for such disadvantages.

I submitted to the Army engineers an inquiry as to what course would be pursued providing interested parties in the valley refused or delayed making payments to the Government for their proper portion of the flood-control project.

The following letter gives an outline of what may be done in such event. However, with the adoption of amendments authorizing Government loans to needy interests and the further power of waiving contributions in case of necessity, under an amendment to be offered, it seems every precaution has been taken to avoid delay or the omission of any necessary part of the plan. Letter from General Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 12, 1928.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FREAR: In compliance with your request I have to submit the following:

If the flood control bill should be enacted requiring local contributions from the lands to be greatly benefited, there is no doubt in my mind that contributions would be forthcoming, since anyone can afford to put up 20 cents for a dollar's worth of protection. Contrary to statements that have been made, even if some locality should refuse to contribute, the whole plan would not be held up; neither would a delinquency of one section necessarily leave unprotected another section that had met its just obligations. The plan, with minor modifications, can be made to afford protection to each locality cooperating and to leave without the additional benefits sections not contributing.

If there should be delay in effecting the necessary adjustments for the proposed Birds Point-New Madrid flood way, minor modifications can be made as indicated below so that only that section of Missouri immediately behind that flood way will be left unprotected against the superflood. The riverside levee from Birds Point to New Madrid is now lower in elevation than the levee around the city of Cairo. Excess water will go over that levee and relieve the situation at Cairo as it did in the 1927 flood at the Dorena crevasse. The levee grade now is above the flow line of a flood equal to that of 1927, and even the lands back of the levee are protected except for a superflood exceeding that of 1927. A break in this section overflows a relatively small section of the St. Francis Basin east of the Sykeston Ridge. A small amount of levee work on the Sykeston Ridge will protect the lower St. Francis Basin from any accident due to the delay in constructing the flood way. Above Birds Point the levee can be raised up to Cape Girardeau and thus protect the northern part of the St. Francis Basin against a superflood. This area did not get wet in 1927. As a matter of fact, this entire section is not hard up on account of the 1927 flood, since there was no failure in southeast Missouri except that at Dorena. The water from this crevasse did get over the Sykeston Ridge in limited amounts. However, that contingency can be corrected as indicated at small cost.

The backwater or natural river-bed country on the Tennessee side has always been subject to the vicissitudes of the Mississippi River, and always will be, unless the channel is narrowed beyond safety, and narrow strips of land are reclaimed at unreasonable and uneconomic costs. The Reelfoot territory, the only land now protected on the east side of the river in this general latitude, is to be given additional protection under the project proposed because it is already behind a levee. This additional protection is to cost the United States about $25 per acre protected. You can see that, if merely enlarging existing levees will cost this much, building new levees would cost a great deal more.

As for the Boeuf flood way, as matters now stand, the entire territory on the west side of the river is subject to overflow from a superflood. The plan proposes to limit this overflow to the most undeveloped section in this latitude. The sections thus to be protected will most certainly put up 20 per cent of the cost of their protection. If southern Arkansas should not see fit to contribute, a levee could be put across the upper end of the Lake Providence section from Macon Ridge to the Mississippi River levee and thus protect that section in Louisiana. A more extensive, but not excessive modification of the plan could empty the upper Bartholomew into the Boeuf in Louisiana and thus protect parts of Louisiana outside the flood way, or an additional flood way could be carried down the Bartholomew. Thus Louisiana could participate in the flood control for its own protection and attain full protection, even if Arkansas did not join in. Similarly, if Arkansas alone accepted its share and contributed, the flood way could be stopped at the Louisiana line, and Arkansas would get full protection whether Louisiana joined in or not.

As for the Atchafalaya, it is all in Louisiana, which State is already organized for flood control by State. It has State laws for acquiring lands for levee work, and a State levee organization. Louisiana will desire the benefits of this flood way, and New Orleans must have it. The State now spends some $10,000,000 a year for road work. It can easily put up $3,000,000 a year for 10 years as its flood-control contribution.

On the east side of the river is wealthy New Orleans, which will certainly contribute the amount required for the Bonnet Carre spillway. For several years New Orleans people have been advocating such a spillway and it has appeared that they have wanted it badly enough to make them willing to pay 100 per cent of the cost. In fact, before 1927, they requested permission to remove a levee at Point La Hache below New Orleans and construct, at their own expense, an experimental spillway at a cost of $1,000,000. The lands in Louisiana east of the river are protected by the works there and the water can not come into them from any other State.

The Yazoo Basin is entirely in Mississippi and its protection is only a matter in one State. Of course, Mississippi or the two levee districts therein will contribute 20 cents on the dollar.

From the above you see that the question of one State being put in jeopardy from the delinquency of another State is mostly imaginary. It so happens that there are only two places at which a problem might arise. First, opposite Cairo, any failure of or delay in the plan will affect adversely only the territory refusing to cooperate since effects of overflow are localized by the Sykeston Ridge. Second, the failure of southern Arkansas to cooperate in the upper Boeuf flood ways construction can be made to affect Arkansas only by modifying the plan at the Louisiana line. It is hardly probable that this latter contingency will arise.

There will be plenty of time during the life of the project to iron out difficulties. There is plenty of work to be prosecuted at once before problems are encountered.

The plan is based on local cooperation, and the supplying of land by local interests who are the ones primarily benefited. Without local cooperation the cost can be anything. And the cost of the United States buying land can be any amount. Already expensive and uneconomic masonry spillways are advocated. Excessive freeboard is asked for. Hard-surfaced roads along the top of the entire levee line are demanded. With the United States paying all and accepting a responsibility not legal nor proper now, the sky is the limit.

Yours sincerely,

EDGAR JADWIN,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

From the Engineering News Record of April 5, 1928, I quote editorial comment that is significant as to the economic situation presented by the Jones bill:

FLOOD-CONTROL LEGISLATION

Precipitate legislation on a momentous question, as represented in the Senate's passage of the Jones flood control bill, can not invite either public or engineering approval. Its political background is obvious. * * *

If the Senate's action gives warning that Congress is simply playing politics in the flood issue and is evading a direct answer to the problem of Mississippi flood control, constructive thinking on the subject becomes the personal obligation of the citizen. Let us therefore inquire what line of action gives real promise. * * *

Consider the economic question of whether certain areas should or should not be protected. Little information exists in usable form of the present actual use of the land and its value. Certain statistics have been compiled as to valuations and acreages of cleared land, but how much of it is in cultivation and where it is located is not known. In 31 levee districts that comprise practically the whole area needing protection, having a total acreage of 17,000,000 acres of which 7,000,000 is cleared the assessed valuation is $504,000,000. Against this there is a total indebtedness of $413,000,000, but only $36,000,000 of the total, or $2.13 per acre, is for levee bonds. Losses from the 1927 flood in these districts were $111,000,000 or $6.60 per acre. Whether, then, it is good economics to spend from one-third billion to a billion dollars to save property valued at half a billion is a pertinent question. Certainly some further economic balancing is needed against what this property will be worth with protection in 10 to 20 years. When some estimate of future values is made, some reasonable figure as to apportionment of cost can be arrived at. Since the country as a whole must pay the bulk of the new costs, some appraisal is needed as to what the country as a whole is going to get and what its own relation is as to the added acres, surpluses, and consequent competition with lowered prices. * * *

With more of these economic questions answered, the individual Congressman would be in a much better position to vote on valley appropriations and know whether he was serving the best interests of the country.

The above editorial does not mention outstanding drainage bonds totaling many millions of dollars. Holders of such bonds and levee bond holders, like owners of land to be sold or benefited, have an abiding interest in the passage of the Jones bill irrespective of its economic value.

WHO ARE THE REAL BENEFICIARIES?—A BRIEF STATEMENT AS TO THE 27 LEVEE DISTRICTS

It is not sound for the United States to assume all responsibility for flood control in the Mississippi Delta merely because there are some 27 levee districts, small and large, which are difficult to coordinate.

There are States which gain taxation by flood control, and these are the units that should deal with the Federal Government in cooperation. To say that the United States should pay all because the States would have some difficulty in organizing themselves is not reasonable. Of course, they will not organize for flood control if the United States will assume all responsibility and all costs.

I understand Louisiana is now spending about $10,000,000 a year for road work. It can spend its contributive quota of the flood-control project which totals less than $3,000,000 a year.

It has been published that Arkansas is launching a road project of over $50,000,000. It can spend its contributive quota of flood control which totals less than $2,000,000 a year.

Other States have lesser amounts to pay for flood control.

The above figures include all costs to States including land and legitimate damages.

Innumerable flood-control plans have been proposed by parties interested in special localities. However, it is unnecessary to let these confuse the issue.

A sound, economical plan has been presented by impartial experts which aims at adequate protection without additional reclamation and without profligate payment of unwarranted claims. Any plan proposing that the United States spend more than $300,000,000 for protection of the Delta Valley looks padded, either with uneconomic new reclamation or with wasteful, unnecessary construction and payment of unjustified claims.

The hearings before the committees of Congress have demonstrated that there is no possibility of having economy in a flood-control project unless local interests benefited pay some percentage of cost of the construction works as well as all land and damage claims. Hundreds of witnesses, technical or otherwise, have advocated various things involving unexcusable and extravagant waste only because they assumed that the United States should pay all. That is the scope of the Jones bill.

One of many letters received from those familiar with conditions in the lower Mississippi Valley:

ALGOMA, WIS., April 7, 1928.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FREAR: I have just read your stand on the flood control bill and I think you are absolutely right as to compensation in part by owners of timberlands adjacent to the Mississippi and other rivers. It was my business a few years ago to appraise a 10,000-acre tract of hardwoods a few miles south of Memphis, located in Arkansas. It being in the dry season and the only time the land is accessible.

Evidence of the backwaters were on every side, showing where the water left its marks 6 feet and more on all the trees. The tract was sold then for $150,000, since then it has been sold for a good-size profit. To whom I do not know, but I do know that many of the lumbermen at St. Louis and other large cities along the rivers own large and valuable tracts, all of which are inaccessible on account of overflow. It surely must be apparent to anyone who will give the subject the right thought that to restrain these high waters will make it possible for all of this valuable timber to be marketed during the absence of hot weather, with all its pestiferous insects and reptiles.

Just why these owners should not shoulder part of the cost for control of the waters is not apparent to those of us who think that our President is right in his stand. I concede there are many who will be benefited by this improvement who have lost their all, practically, and ought not to be made to pay, but the lumber barons and others inordinately benefited should be compelled to pay according to their benefits, presumably to be arrived at by appraisal as to the value of holdings.

I trust that the opinions of the President and legislators will prevail to the larger extent than seems possible at the present time and justice may be done to all.

Yours truly,

GEORGE D. FELLOWS.

Amendment proposed for Union Calendar No. 238, S. 3740, to cover loans from the Government, April 2, 1928:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to lend to States or local interests on proper security, under liberal and favorable terms as to interest and maturity, sufficient funds to permit said States or local interests to finance their share of the flood-control costs, when it is demonstrated to his satisfaction that local interests need loans in order to enable them to carry out their share of the project."

EXISTING FLOOD CONTROL LAW

An act (H. R. 14777) to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That for controlling the floods of the Mississippi River and continuing its improvement from the Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River the Secretary of War is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed to carry on continuously, by hired labor or otherwise, the plans of the Mississippi River Commission heretofore or hereafter adopted, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $45,000,000: Provided, That not more than $10,000,000 shall be expended therefor during any one fiscal year.

(a) All money appropriated under authority of this section shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for controlling the floods and for the general improvement of the Mississippi River, and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of Passes to the headwaters of the river, and a survey of the Atchafalaya outlet so far as may be necessary to determine the cost of protecting its basin from the flood waters of the Mississippi River either by its divorcement from the Mississippi River or by other means, and for salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission.

(b) That no money appropriated under authority of this section shall be expended in the construction or repair of any levee unless and until assurances have been given satisfactory to the commission that local interests protected thereby will contribute for such construction and repair a sum which the commission shall determine to be just and equitable but which shall not be less than one-half of such sum as may have been allotted by the commission for such work: Provided, That such contributions shall be expended under the direction of the commission, or in such manner as it may require or approve, but no contribution made by any State or levee district shall be expended in any other State or levee district except with the approval of the authorities of the State or district so contributing.

(c) Any funds which may hereafter be appropriated under authority of this act for improving the Mississippi River between the Head of Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees, may be expended upon any part of said river between the Head of Passes and Rock Island, Ill.

(d) No money appropriated under authority of this act shall be expended in payment for any right of way for any levee which may be constructed in cooperation with any State or levee district under authority of this act, but all such rights of way shall be provided free of cost to the United States: Provided, That no money paid or expense incurred by any State or levee district in securing such rights of way, or in any temporary works of emergency during an impending flood, or for the maintenance of any levee line, shall be computed as a part of the contribution of such State or levee district toward the construction or repair of any levee within the meaning of paragraph (b) of this section.

That the watercourses connected with the Mississippi River to such extent as may be necessary to exclude the flood waters from the upper limits of any delta basin, together with the Ohio River from its mouth to the mouth of the Cache River, may, in the discretion of said commission, receive allotments for improvements now under way or hereafter to be undertaken.

Upon the completion of any levee constructed for flood control under authority of this act, said levee shall be turned over to the levee district protected thereby for maintenance thereafter; but for all other purposes the United States shall retain such control over the same as it may have the right to exercise upon such completion.

SACRAMENTO RIVER, CALIF.

SEC. 2. That for controlling the floods, removing the débris, and continuing the improvement of the Sacramento River, Calif., in accordance with the plans of the California Débris Commission, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to carry on continuously, by hired labor or otherwise, the plan of said commission contained in its report submitted August 10, 1910, and printed in House Document No. 81, Sixty-second Congress, first session, as modified by the report of said commission submitted February 8, 1913, approved by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 5, Sixty-third Congress, first session, in so far as said plan provides for the rectification and enlargement of river channels and the construction of weirs, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $5,600,000: Provided, That not more than $1,000,000 shall be expended therefor during any one fiscal year.

(a) All money appropriated under authority of this section shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the California Débris Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the control of floods, removal of débris, and the general improvement of the Sacramento River: Provided, That no money shall be expended under authority of this section until assurances have been given satisfactory to the Secretary of War (a) that the State of California will contribute annually for such work a sum equal to such sum as may be expended annually therefor by the United States under authority of this section; (b) that such equal contributions by the State of California will continue annually until the full equal share of the cost of such work shall have been contributed by said State; and (c) that the river levees contemplated in the report of the California Débris Commission, dated August 10, 1910, will be constructed to such grade and section and within such time as may be required by said commission: Provided further, That said State shall not be required to expend for such work, for any one year, a sum larger than that expended thereon by the United States during the same year: And provided further, That the total contributions so required of the State of California shall not exceed in the aggregate, $5,600,000.

(b) All money contributed by the State of California, as herein provided, shall be expended under the direction of the California Débris Commission and in such manner as it may require or approve, and no money appropriated under the authority of this section shall be expended in the purchase of or payment for any right of way, easement, or land acquired for the purposes of this improvement, but all such rights of way, easements, and lands shall be provided free of cost to the United States: Provided, That no money paid or expense incurred therefor shall be computed as a part of the contribution of the State of California toward the work of improvement herein provided for within the meaning of paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) Upon the completion of all works for flood control herein authorized the said works shall be turned over to the State of California for maintenance thereafter; but for all other purposes the United States shall retain such control over the same as it may have the right to exercise upon such completion.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 3. That all the provisions of existing law relating to examinations and surveys and to works of improvement of rivers and harbors shall apply, so far as applicable, to examinations and surveys and to works of improvement relating to flood control. And all expenditures of funds hereafter appropriated for works and projects relating to flood control shall be made in accordance with and subject to the law governing the disbursement and expenditure of funds appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

All examinations and surveys of projects relating to flood control shall include a comprehensive study of the watershed or watersheds, and the report thereon in addition to any other matter upon which a report is required shall give such data as it may be practicable to secure in regard to (a) the extent and character of the area to be affected by the proposed improvement; (b) the probable effect upon any navigable water or waterway; (c) the possible economical development and utilization of water power; and (d) such other uses as may be properly related to or coordinated with the project. And the heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, and shall upon the request of the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the engineers of the Army in the study and examination of such watersheds, to the end that duplication of work may be avoided and the various services of the Government economically coordinated therein: Provided, That all reports on preliminary examinations hereafter authorized, together with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors thereon and the separate report of the representative of any other department, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War by the Chief of Engineers, with his recommendations, and shall be transmitted by the Secretary of War to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made.

In the consideration of all works and projects relating to flood control which may be submitted to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for consideration and recommendation, said board shall, in addition to any other matters upon which it may be required to report, state its opinion as to (a) what Federal interest, if any, is involved in the proposed improvement; (b) what share of the expense, if any, should be borne by the United States; and (c) the advisability of adopting the project.

All examinations and reports which may now be made by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors upon request of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors relating to works or projects of navigation shall in like manner be made upon request of the Committee on Flood Control on all works and projects relating to flood control.

SEC. 4. That the salary of the civilian members of the Mississippi River Commission shall hereafter be $5,000 per annum.

Approved March 1, 1917.

[S. 3740, 7th Cong., 1st sess.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

March 30, 1928.

Referred to the Committee on Flood Control, April 2, 1928. Reported with amendments, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for the flood control of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley and for its improvement from the Head of Passes to Cape Girardeau, Mo., in accordance with the engineering plan set forth and recommended in the report submitted by the Chief of Engineers to the Secretary of War dated December 1, 1927, and printed in House Document No. 90, Seventieth Congress, first session, is hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers: Provided, That a board to consist of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civil engineers chosen from civil life, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose compensation shall be fixed by the President and be paid out of the appropriations made to carry on this project, is hereby created; and such board is authorized and directed to consider the engineering differences between the adopted project and that recommended by the Mississippi River Commission in its special report dated November 28, 1927, and after such study and such further surveys as may be necessary, to determine the action to be taken upon the same, and its decision upon all matters considered by it shall be followed in carrying out the project herein adopted: Provided further, That if after considering any controverted problem between the Mississippi River Commission project and the project herein adopted the board shall be of the opinion that a new method should be followed, it shall submit its recommendation thereon to Congress: Provided further, That such surveys shall be made between Baton Rouge, La., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., as the board may deem necessary to enable it to ascertain and determine the best method of securing flood relief, in addition to levees, before any flood-control works other than levees and revetments are undertaken on that portion of the river: Provided further, That all diversion works and outlets constructed under the provisions of this act shall be built in a manner and of a character which will as fully and amply protect the adjacent lands as those protected by levees constructed on the main river: Provided further, That pending completion of any flood way, spillway, or diversion channel, the areas within the same shall be given the same degree of protection as is afforded by levees on the west side of the river contiguous to the levee at the head of said flood way. The sum of $325,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby declared to be the sense of Congress that the principle of local contribution toward the cost of flood-control work, which has been incorporated in all previous national legislation on the subject, is sound, as recognizing the special interest of the local population in its own protection, and as a means of preventing inordinate requests for unjustified items of work having no material national interest. As a full compliance with this principle in view of the great expenditure, estimated at approximately $292,000,000, heretofore made by the local interests in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River for protection against the floods of that river; in view of the extent of national concern in the control of these floods in the interests of national prosperity, the flow of interstate commerce, and the movement of the United States mails; and, in view of the gigantic scale of the project, involving flood waters of a volume and flowing from a drainage area largely outside the States most affected, and far exceeding those of any other river in the United States, no local contribution to the project herein adopted is required.

SEC. 3. Except when authorized by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, no money appropriated under authority of this act shall be expended on the construction of any item of the project until local interests have given assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they will (a) maintain all flood-control works after their completion, except controlling and regulating spillway structures, including special relief levees; maintenance includes normally such matters as cutting grass, removal of weeds, local drainage, and minor repairs of main river levees; (b) agree to accept the title to land turned over to them under the provisions of section 4.

SEC. 4. Just compensation shall be paid by the United States for all property used, taken, damaged, or destroyed in carrying out the flood-control plan provided for herein, including all property located within the area of the spillways, flood ways, or diversion channels herein provided, and the rights of way thereover, and the flowage rights thereon, and also including all expenditures by persons, corporations, and public-service corporations made necessary to adjust or conform their property, or to relocate same because of the spillways, flood ways, or diversion channels herein provided: Provided, That in all cases where the execution of the flood-control plan results in special benefits to any person, or persons, or corporations, municipal or private, or public-service corporations, such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid.

The Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted for the acquirement by condemnation of any lands, easements, or rights of way which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, are needed in carrying out this project, the said proceedings to be instituted in the United States district court for the district in which the land, easement, or right of way is located. In all such proceedings the court, for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the property and assessing the compensation to be paid, shall appoint three commissioners, whose award, when confirmed by the court, shall be final. When the owner of any land, easement, or right of way shall fix a price for the same which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War is reasonable, he may purchase the same at such price; and the Secretary of War is also authorized to accept donations of lands, easements, and rights of way required for this project. The provisions of sections 5 and 6 of the river and harbor act of July 18, 1918, are hereby made applicable to the acquisition of lands, easements, or rights of way needed for works of flood control: Provided, That the title to any land acquired under the provisions of this section, and used in connection with the works authorized by this act, shall be turned over without cost to the States or local interests, which shall retain the same for the purposes specified in this act.

SEC. 5. Subject to the approval of the heads of the several executive departments concerned, the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, may engage the services and assistance of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Geological Survey, or other mapping agencies of the Government, in the preparation of maps required in furtherance of this project, and funds to pay for such services may be allotted from appropriations made under authority of this act.

SEC. 6. In an emergency, funds appropriated under authority of this act may be expended for the prosecution of such works for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River as have heretofore been authorized and are not included in the present project; or for the maintenance of any levee when it is demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that the levee can not be adequately maintained by local interests.

SEC. 7. That the sum of $5,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated as an emergency fund to be allotted by the Secretary of War on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, in rescue work or in the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work on any tributaries of the Mississippi River, threatened or destroyed by flood.

SEC. 8. The project herein authorized shall be prosecuted by the Mississippi River Commission under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers and subject to the provisions of this act. It shall perform such functions and through such agencies as they shall designate after consultation and discussion with the president of the commission. For all other purposes the existing laws governing the constitution and activities of the commission shall remain unchanged. The commission shall make inspection trips of such frequency and duration as will enable it to acquire first-hand information as to conditions and problems germane to the matter of flood control within the area of its jurisdiction; and on such trips of inspection ample opportunity for hearings and suggestions shall be afforded persons affected by or interested in such problems. The president of the commission shall be the executive officer thereof and shall have the qualifications now prescribed by law for the Assistant Chief of Engineers, shall have the title brigadier general, Corps of Engineers, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general while actually assigned to such duty: Provided, That the present incumbent of the office may be appointed a brigadier general of the Army, retired, and shall be eligible for the position of president of the commission if recalled to active service by the President under the provisions of existing law.

The salary of the president of the Mississippi River Commission shall hereafter be $10,000 per annum, and the salary of the other members of the commission shall hereafter be $7,500 per annum. The official salary of any officer appointed or employed under this act shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by, or which shall be fixed under, the terms of this act.

SEC. 9. The provisions of section 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, are hereby made applicable to this act.

SEC. 10. That it is the sense of Congress that the surveys of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, authorized pursuant to the act of January 21, 1927 (H. Doc. No. 308, 69th Cong., 1st sess.), be prosecuted as speedily as practicable, and the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is directed to prepare and submit to Congress at the earliest practicable date projects for flood control on all tributary streams of the Mississippi River system subject to destructive floods, which projects shall include: The Red River and tributaries, the Yazoo River and tributaries, the White River and tributaries, the St. Francis River and tributaries, the Arkansas River and tributaries, the Ohio River and tributaries, the Missouri River and tributaries, and the Illinois River and tributaries: Provided, That before transmitting such reports to Congress the same shall be presented to the board created in section 1 of this act, and its conclusions and recommendations thereon shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War with his report.

The sum of $5,000,000 is hereby authorized to be used out of the appropriation herein authorized, in addition to amounts authorized in the river and harbor act of January 21, 1927, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for the preparation of the flood-control projects authorized in this section.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of War shall cause the Mississippi River Commission to make an examination and survey of the Mississippi River below Cape Girardeau, Mo. (a) at places where levees have heretofore been constructed on one side of the river and the lands on the opposite side have been thereby subjected to greater overflow, and where, without unreasonably restricting the flood channel, levees can be constructed to reduce the extent of this overflow, and where the construction of such levees is economically justified, and report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable with such recommendations as the commission may deem advisable; (b) with a view to determining the estimated effects, if any, upon lands lying between the river and adjacent hills by reason of overflow of such lands caused by the construction of levees at other points along the Mississippi River, and determining the equities of the owners of such lands and the value of the same, and the commission shall report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable with such recommendation as it may deem advisable: Provided, That inasmuch as the Mississippi River Commission made a report on the 26th day of October, 1912, recommending a levee to be built from Tiptonville, Tenn., to the Obion River in Tennessee, the said Mississippi River Commission is authorized to make a resurvey of said proposed levee and a relocation of the same if necessary, and if such levee is found feasible, and is approved by the board created in section 1 of this act, the commission is authorized to build same out of appropriations hereafter to be made.

SEC. 12. The President shall at once proceed to ascertain, through the Secretary of War, or other agency, the extent to which floods in the lower Mississippi Valley may be controlled by a reservoir system. All such agencies in their investigations shall, so far as they reasonably can, invite the helpful aid of State engineers, university and technical men, and State officials. The studies shall include such questions as: The effect on the subject of flood control in the lower Mississippi River to be attained through the control of flood waters in the drainage basins of its tributaries by the establishment of a reservoir system; the benefits that will accrue to navigation, agriculture, and power from the prevention of erosion and siltage entering the streams; a determination of the capacities of the soils of the district to receive and hold waters from such reservoirs; and such kindred questions. The agencies shall also further inquire as to what additional benefits may accrue from such reservoir system, the prospective income from the disposal of such waters including both agriculture and power; they shall inquire as to the return-flow value of waters placed in the soils from reservoirs, as to their stabilizing effect on stream flow as a means of preventing erosion and silting and improving navigation conditions, and shall determine to what extent reservoired waters may be available for municipal and domestic uses and to what extent reimbursive; they shall report as to the approximate cost of each proposed reservoir and its capacity and shall give specific reasons for acceptance or rejection of any proposed reservoir site.

As soon as the studies of reservoirs, singly or in groups, provided for in the foregoing paragraph, shall have been completed and approved by the Secretary of War or other agency, with definite estimates of cost and working data, they shall be reported by said Secretary or other agency to the President of the United States, together with all related findings and conclusions, and on his order to such effect, said Secretary or other agency shall proceed with the construction thereof as soon as money shall be available for such purposes, either by the letting of contracts or by Government construction: Provided, The conclusion reached by the President shall be that such construction will have a substantial and beneficial influence in the control of floods on the navigable waters of the lower Mississippi Valley and is, in his opinion, economically justifiable.

On completion of any reservoir or reservoirs so constructed, the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to dispose of any impounded waters, under rules made by him and approved by the President, and may further enter into negotiations for the purpose of disposal of reservoirs themselves, always retaining, however, at all times, authority to direct the impounding and the emptying of the waters in such reservoirs. Tentative agreements for the sale of any reservoir shall be submitted to Congress and be approved by law before final sale thereof is made.

SEC. 13. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the above are hereby repealed.

SEC. 14. That the project for the control of floods in the Sacramento River, Calif., adopted by section 2 of the act approved March 1, 1917, entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," is hereby modified in accordance with the report of the California Débris Commission submitted in Senate Document No. 23, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session: Provided, That the total amounts contributed by the Federal Government, including the amounts heretofore contributed by it, shall in no event exceed in the aggregate $17,600,000.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I want to take 10 minutes at this time. The discussion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] constitutes a terrible indictment of the Jadwin plan, and it is also a merciless indictment lodged against the people of the valley. He has discussed at great length, emphasizing his opposition to this bill, the fact that under the Jadwin plan something in excess of 4,000,000 acres of high-priced land as he claims will be dedicated to waste. In his indictment against the people of the valley he has told this House that if this bill passes in its present form the people affected by the execution of the project will march en masse upon the Treasury of the United States and claim in satisfaction of their spurious demands a sum representing ten times the actual value of their holdings destroyed by the Government. The gentleman has said that if this bill is passed, a great number of people in the valley will be profited as a result of their holdings being acquired by the Government for the purpose of the execution of the public work. I wonder if the gentleman has in mind that the legislation that this Congress enacts, in order to receive his indorsement, shall result in extending no benefit to anybody whatsoever. Of course, the execution of the project will benefit the people of the valley. It likewise will be a great benefit to the people of the Nation at large, and the moving cause of the enactment of the legislation is that the country shall be benefited as a result of the action that the Congress takes.

The gentleman says that great corporations and other large landholders in the valley will be unconscionably benefited as a result of this bill, if it passes, and, therefore, that the Congress should be careful in proceeding on the measure. That represents the politics of his argument and of his discussion. That is not a reason that should appeal to the consciences of the men and women of this House. That argument is made for the purpose of prejudicing some one. The gentleman went so far as to mention the fact that a witness who appeared before this committee and gave it valuable assistance, in that he brought facts as to the conditions of the valley, has an office in the same building in Chicago in which are the offices of a large landholding concern. He declares that no wrongful inference is intended, but if he did not intend that an inference detrimental to the character of the witness should be drawn, then why did he go out of his way to make this unwarranted and unjustifiable assault upon a man who has done this cause no harm.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I had no purpose of assaulting his character. He has the right to employment the same as any other man.

Mr. COX. The gentleman says he had no purpose of assaulting his character, but why did he make the argument? What purpose did he hope it would serve except that it would find lodgment in the mind of some Member and perhaps influence his action upon this bill?

I hold for the gentleman an affectionate regard; but, speaking for myself, Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to pay the price for legislation in this Chamber that exaggeration and unmerited argument would impose. The gentleman says if you pass this legislation the bonds held by the people of St. Louis will go back to par. Why make that argument to a House composed of free and independent men? Should the bondholders' interests be destroyed by this Government, which is strong enough and just enough to be fair to all alike? If the legislation passes, the country at large will be benefited, and the very circumstance that somebody in St. Louis or in Chicago is benefited is an evidence that the country at large will be benefited as the result of full and complete treatment in this case.

The only justification that the gentleman has for the application of the doctrine of local contribution is that some one will benefit as the result of the public right. All are agreed that the only justification for requiring contribution from the people in the valley is that they are especially benefited as the result of improvement. But when the gentleman confesses that no personal liability attaches as the result of benefit assessment, then he destroys his argument that the bill should not pass because people of Chicago or St. Louis or in other parts of the country will benefit.

The gentleman has said that under the bill the railroads will receive something. Now, I want to say to the House that while I hold no brief for railroads and none for anyone interested in railroads, I am willing that the railroads shall be treated on the same basis as other property holders in the valley.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes more.

They are not lawful prey for the public. Some one owns them. They have rights; they are to be respected. I do favor an amendment of section 4 of the bill, the railroad section, to the extent that the question of determining the necessity of a relocation or readjustment of lines shall be under the control of the representatives of the Government.

The gentleman talks about a "pork barrel." Where is the barrel, and where is the pork in this case? The Government does not turn loose on the question of condemning the property until the finding is made and until there is a decree of the court. Where the Government has been unable to obtain the property under satisfactory terms the case is brought into the Federal court in the district of the owner, and there the rights of contending parties are adjudicated. If the people's property is to be taken, if ownership of the property must be required by the United States, is not the gentleman and the Congress willing that just compensation shall be allowed?

With reference to the statement made about special assessment. We know that in the case of a special assessment the assessment is a charge against the thing and not the person. If that is true, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Congress, then the question as to the wealth of the holder of the land is not material, so far as this case is concerned. The test is as to the ability of the land especially benefited, as is claimed, to respond to the extra charge imposed upon it by the extra assessment levied to meet the cost in the particular case.

The gentleman attempted in a way to intimidate the House, or at least urge caution or restraint, by the threat of a veto. I wonder if the gentleman has the ear of the Chief Executive of the country?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I have no better information than the gentleman himself.

Mr. COX. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he was present at the conference had with the President, at which Mr. Blake, of Oklahoma, and the Chief of Engineers were present when Mr. Blake furnished the President with a brief on this question?

Mr. FREAR. I have not seen the President for two months.

Mr. COX. I submit to you, gentlemen, that in his whole argument as to the cost of the execution of the project, on which he predicates his statement as to what will happen in the courts of the country, the gentleman takes the highest estimate made by any witness appearing before the committee as to the value of the land, and does not show the House fairness of striking an average between the highest and the lowest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have always had a great deal of respect for anything that was said by the late Champ Clark, of Missouri. During the days I served with him here I learned to love him, as all the rest of us did, and as I look back over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I read always with interest what Mr. Clark had to say upon any great public question.

In 1916, in February, 12 years ago, this House amended its rules and created a Committee on Flood Control. Mr. Clark introduced the resolution to provide for the amendment of the rules and the creation of that committee; and I remember well the discussion that took place when that resolution was under consideration. Mr. Mann, who was the leader on the other side of the House, joined with the Speaker and spoke in favor of the rule, and in the discussion Mr. Clark made this brief statement, among others:

> The resolution or rule was introduced for the sole purpose of investigating what I think is the greatest economic question that the American people must deal with in the next quarter of a century.

Later on in his discussion he said:

> In my judgment, the control of floods and incidentally the drainage of overflowed lands is, as I said before, the greatest economic question to which the American mind is going to be directed in the next 25 years.
> When I was a child my father used to put me to sleep of a night by singing to me a song that "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm." And at that time Uncle Sam was rich enough to do that; but now all of his good land is gone, and men who have children lie awake o' nights studying about where their children are going to find homes in the days to come. Now, here we are. There is enough overflowed land on the Mississippi River and its tributaries—I take that simply because it is the greatest river system on the face of the earth—every acre of that land equal to the best acre of land under the sun, to make a State as big as the State of Missouri, which has 69,815 square miles of territory. This overflowed land lies right in the heart of civilization, with churches and schoolhouses and railroads and markets and all of the facilities for American life. If that land was drained and put under cultivation, it would support a population of 25,000,000 human beings.

While that bill was under discussion I had occasion to make a few remarks, and if the House will pardon me I want to read just a brief statement from the remarks I made at that time. These remarks are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 3, 1916:

> Now, this question of controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers is not a local question. It is one of the Nation's problems. It has long been recognized to be such, but has never been properly handled. I believe that the time has come when the Federal Government should take hold of this, one of its greatest problems, and solve it. The control of the flood waters of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and their tributaries should be made a separate national project, like the building of the Panama Canal or the Alaskan Railroad. A plan should be worked out by which a coordinated system of levees and other river improvements would be constructed under scientific and continuous methods, and I do not doubt that the floods of these great rivers can ultimately be controlled, millions of acres of rich land reclaimed, and millions of dollars saved to the people each year.

I could not improve on that if I had written it to-day. In a few moments I will refer to something that I happened to say in the following year when we passed the first flood control act.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to what was said by our friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Wisconsin and always have had. I remember well the days when the gentleman from Wisconsin was on the Rivers and Harbors Committee. He always serves a good purpose in the House. He is a protestor; he is an objector; he nearly always takes the other side; his criticisms are often constructive; he used to always fight river and harbor appropriations. When he was on the Ways and Means Committee he nearly always fought bills that were brought in by that committee.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. That is rather a blanket indictment. On a great many bills which were successful I was on the affirmative side.

Mr. DENISON. I do not want to be unfair to my friend. I prefaced my remarks by saying that he serves a good purpose here, and yet the policy of river and harbor improvements, which my friend from Wisconsin always fought so strenuously, is more generally approved and more permanently established and followed by Congress to-day than it ever was before he became a member of that committee. He has served a good purpose.

Mr. MAJOR of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. MAJOR of Illinois. The gentleman does not mean that his objections helped to accomplish anything, does he?

Mr. DENISON. I think that the objections which are urged by our friend from Wisconsin help to encourage the policy he fights, and I hope that will be true in this case.

Now, gentlemen, let us go back and discuss the Mississippi River for a moment. Geologists tell us that the Gulf of Mexico used to extend up to what is now Cairo, Ill., and that in the course of time the great river which drains all of these 31 States brought silt down from the hills and gradually filled the valley until it has built up what is now known as the Mississippi Delta. The silt coming down from the upper regions gradually built up the banks of the river until back channels were formed, such as the Atchafalaya and others, and if you go down in that valley now you will find that the land along the banks of the Mississippi River is higher than the land back on either side. You have got to go up hill to get to the river.

In this basin there are 30,000 square miles of delta land—that is, there are 30,000 square miles of land that is in a state of nature, subject to the overflows of the Mississippi River. The Delta begins at Cape Girardeau, Mo., just a few miles above Cairo. Originally there was a natural diversion channel beginning just below Cape Girardeau and going from there on south into the St. Francis River, and running into the Mississippi River again farther below; just as the overflow waters of the Mississippi River run over the natural banks of the river in Mississippi, go back into the back country, and form the Yazoo River, which runs practically parallel with the Mississippi River, and finally runs into the Mississippi River below. There are a number of these diversion channels and they reach the sea in Louisiana.

In the early days the people who settled in this valley began protecting themselves against the overflows, and in 1850 the Federal Government deeded to these various States millions of acres of swamp and overflowed land, and one of the purposes stated in the act was that these lands might be drained and reclaimed.

The earliest settlers that settled in the lower States and received their grants of land from governments in Europe—these old, early land grants specified that the land was granted upon the condition that the owners would protect themselves against the floods and reclaim them for cultivation.

They did that. They began a policy of protection as soon as they began to settle the land; they began down about New Orleans to build little levees to protect their land. This policy spread and continued on up the Mississippi River to St. Louis, until gradually levee districts were formed in order that the farmers and other owners of land might cooperate and strengthen themselves in their efforts to fight against the high waters, and gradually they built up a splendid system of levees.

I am going to discuss while I have the time this question of who should pay for this improvement, whose duty it is to pay for the lower Mississippi flood-control works.

I am sorry I can not agree with some others in the House with reference to this question. I am sorry I can not agree with my friend from Wisconsin with reference to it. I believe, gentlemen, there are two problems involved in this flood-control question. There is the problem as it pertains to the principal tributaries of the Mississippi River, and then there is the problem that pertains to the Delta Basin of the river. I think they are entirely separate problems and will require separate remedies. I am going to discuss principally the problem that pertains to the main river, beginning at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and going to the Gulf of Mexico.

My own view is it is the duty of the Federal Government to work out a comprehensive plan of flood control for the Delta Basin of the Mississippi River, and that the Federal Government ought to pay the expense of putting that plan into effect. I do not believe you can ever do it successfully and require local contributions. We have been trying that. We have been trying it for a good many years and it has not worked successfully; in fact, the plan has failed.

In this connection I want the Members of the House to bear this in mind: The State of Missouri has from its own funds constructed a levee system which, if there were not other levee systems in other States, would fully protect all the land in that State. The State of Arkansas, or the people of the State of Arkansas, have with their own funds constructed a system of levees which, but for the levees in other States, would fully protect the people of the State of Arkansas; and the same is true of the State of Louisiana, and the same is true of southern Illinois.

The point I am making is that the people themselves along this great river from their own funds have reclaimed their lands and built levees that would protect them, were it not for the flood-protection works constructed by the people in other States.

Let us suppose, for instance, there were no levees in Illinois and there were no levees in Arkansas or in Mississippi, and the people of Missouri—and I use that State merely as an illustration—had gone ahead and constructed the levees they have now from their own funds, as they have done largely. The people of Missouri would be absolutely safe from any flood that will ever come down the Mississippi River. The same is true of Arkansas and the same is true of the people in southern Illinois.

The national problem arises by reason of the fact the Federal Government has allowed the people of these various States to follow their own course and build their own levees as they chose and where they chose until the action of the people of one State has thrown the waters back upon the people of another State, and vice versa.

For instance, the people of Missouri have constructed their levees in order to reclaim their lands and protect their people along the west side of the Mississippi River to a point where it backs the flood waters over upon southern Illinois and has threatened the destruction of Cairo and other places in southern Illinois.

Now, what is the solution of this problem? This is where the Federal problem begins. One State can not remedy it; two States can not remedy it. This is a condition that has grown up, not only with the permission of the Federal Government, but with the assistance of the Federal Government. The people began building levees in Cairo, Ill., back in the early part of this century. They built levees that were sufficient to fully protect them from the known floods; but other people began building levees across the river in Missouri to reclaim their lands, which they had the right to do, and as they completed their levee system across the river the flood water had less opportunity to go on its way to the sea, and finally it began to be choked and still further choked as the levees across the river were increased and were built closer and closer to the river banks. The result was that the flood water of the Mississippi and the Ohio were backed up on southern Illinois, and Cairo and the surrounding community had to build their levees higher after each flood because they could see the danger and the destruction that was threatening them. Finally, only a few years ago, Cairo had built a levee 50 feet high, and all the engineers said they were absolutely safe from any flood that would ever come down the Mississippi River. They felt secure, but new levees were built across the river, and those levees were built higher and higher and were often built almost out to the natural banks of the river. Then the natural diversion channel below Cape Girardeau was closed.

So, with a levee on one side and the hills over in Kentucky on the other, a great bottle neck was formed and the flood waters were choked and stopped in their course to the sea; and Cairo was compelled to build her levees 60 feet high, which she did, with her own money, and now she is threatened with destruction because of the construction of the last levee across in Missouri at Dorena; and in the flood of 1927, if the Dorena Levee had not broken, if the Dorena Levee had not given way and allowed the flood waters to go out into their natural basin and flow ways where they had always gone in a state of nature, Cairo would more than likely have been destroyed.

And so all up and down that valley there are populous cities, and great industrial districts, that, when the flood comes, depend for their safety upon disaster happening to somebody else. When the water gets high they patrol the levees just as the Army patrols its lines during war, to prevent people from cutting their levees. The Government must do something to remove the menace that exists all up and down the valley. The necessity always exists for patrolling the levees in order to protect the people of one community from destruction by people in other communities who would cut the levee in order to avert the disaster that threatens them.

So we have now reached the situation in the Mississippi Valley which is not a natural condition. The people from selfish motives—I do not say it critically—try to reclaim as much land as they can, and have built levees for their own protection, and not for the protection of people elsewhere up and down the valley, until now we have a system of levees built too close to the river banks to allow the water to reach the sea.

Water in the time of great floods can not go between the levees fast enough and the only thing that saves us is that there is hardly ever a flood in the Ohio and its tributaries at the same time that one occurs in the Mississippi. In 1927 there was comparatively no flood on the Ohio and its tributaries—the water was low at Paducah.

If there had been a flood on the Ohio and its tributaries in 1927 when the great flood came down the Mississippi nothing could have saved Cairo and Mound City and other cities in southern Illinois. The water would have reached 62 feet or more and the levees are only 60 feet.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is not it the experience of levees that it is necessary to build them higher and higher?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; that is what has happened. We have built them higher and higher. Whereas the water used to spread out 30 to 50 miles it is now confined within the channel of 2 to 5 miles.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Could not they do some dredging?

Mr. DENISON. You can not do that. There are only two practical things that can be done, in my judgment, and one is to relocate the levees back farther and give more room for the flood waters to travel between, or else you have to divert the waters into other channels.

Mr. KVALE. Why can not some dredging be done?

Mr. DENISON. They can do it but it would not solve the problem.

Mr. KVALE. Would it not help?

Mr. DENISON. The cost would be absolutely prohibitive. It is all they can do to dredge the sand bars for navigation, and to deepen the Mississippi River channel would not relieve us of the flood problem. There are only two solutions to this problem, as I have said. I am omitting the theory of reservoirs, because I am not going into that. If you cut that theory out you can only solve the problem by moving the levees back and make the flood way wider or you must divert the flood waters into different channels.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Then the gentleman has come to the conclusion that sooner or later levees will be found to be failures because the water gets so high that when it does come it makes the damages greater, and that it must be regulated by spillways or by holding back the waters of the streams or tributaries by reservoirs?

Mr. DENISON. Exactly.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does the gentleman think it would be wise to spend the amount of money necessary to control the floods by building spillways and conserving the water by reservoirs?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I am sure it would be. When the flood occurred in 1927 the President called on the engineers to make an investigation and report. General Jadwin was put to work with 200 Army engineers, men of experience. And, gentlemen, the engineering question in connection with rivers is a special field of work. These men are experienced, and they began work on the question. Then a special committee of engineers of the War Department was organized to study reservoirs, and another special committee of engineers for spillways was created. They went all over the country and got the very best information they could.

The Mississippi River Commission, a very capable organization, also began studying the subject. They went from New Orleans all up the valley holding hearings. They permitted any engineer or any citizen to come before them and present their views on this question. They held very comprehensive hearings all up and down the Mississippi Valley. So that we have had a year to study this question. The engineers have had a year in which to investigate. I think they have done good work. The Chief of Engineers finally coordinated the findings of all of the engineers under him and made a report to the President, and that is known as the Jadwin report or the Jadwin plan.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The gentleman said that these engineers went all over the country investigating the matter of building reservoirs, and their results on floods.

Mr. DENISON. They are supposed to have done so.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. I live on the Arkansas River, and we could not even get one of these engineers to come into the State. Yet they made a report against reservoirs on the Arkansas without any survey whatever.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, I am not prepared to defend the committee of engineers that made the investigation in respect to reservoirs. I assume that they did the best they could in the time they had. Their work may not have been complete. At any rate they reported against reservoirs, not because they are not proper in theory, but because they concluded that the expense of constructing them would be prohibitive.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. I happened to be before the Flood Control Committee one day when I heard Colonel Potter, president of the Mississippi River Commission, say that he would not like to hitch himself up to any flood-control plan until he had made further investigation of the reservoir project on the Arkansas and the White Rivers, and I think he is in a position to know as much about this question as any man in the United States. That was right in the face of the report that was made by Colonel Kelly.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows that there was brought out in the testimony before the Flood Committee that the presiding officer of that commission of engineers investigating reservoirs was at that time in the employ of a power company, and has since resigned and gone actively with that power company.

Mr. DENISON. No; I did not know anything about that, and that would not influence me if that were the fact. This is too big a problem to discredit any man or any plan because some man who advocates it happens to belong to a corporation or to be connected with some power company, or otherwise. It is too big a question to be decided on considerations of that kind.

Mr. Chairman, I have considered the question of local contributions in connection with the flood problem of the lower Mississippi from every point of view. I can not see how any part of the costs of a broad, adequate national plan can be assessed against the local communities. They have already expended some $290,000,000 in constructing their own levees. They must now be protected against an unnatural condition brought about in each State by the action of other States. Only the Federal Government can provide and pay for such protection, and I think the Federal Government must do it, and ought to do it now, if it is ever to be done at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as has been suggested, this is anniversary week, and I would add that it is for us to observe it by doing in a big way a big job, too long delayed.

On April 16, 1927, a year and a day ago, there came the Dorena break in the levee on the west, or Missouri, bank of the Mississippi River, 33 miles below Cairo. This, the first of 145 crevasses to form, marked the beginning of what Secretary Hoover has called the "greatest peace-time disaster in the history of America."

Before proceeding further, this leads me to suggest that as the first break in this series of crevasses occurred in southeast Missouri, just so does this section represent the key to all that vast territory which stretches away a thousand miles to the South. Here the great alluvial plain has its beginning. Here, if a mistake is made, all below must suffer. Here is the "roof of the valley." The work must be well done. Whatever is undertaken must be finished.

The problem is largely one of finance. The local communities can not contribute. In spending, this section has gone the limit, with $51,000,000 put into drainage and levee projects, almost $32,000,000 remaining unpaid. This is in addition to millions in farm mortgages. As indicating the local situation, eight counties in southeast Missouri, representing 2,580,000 acres of farm lands, show in six years, beginning in 1920, almost half a million acres sold under the sheriff's hammer because of inability of the farmers to meet principal and interest on mortgages. Preposterous seems the proposition to ask a community so situated to pay any part and which at the same time proposes that the people, so sorely pressed, be asked to supply the land for a great flood way for the protection of a city in another State. But as to this I shall not now speak at length.

While southeast Missouri represents the beginning of the alluvial basin, it is not here that the flood problem has its inception. Seeking the real solution of this, we must consider the tributaries, the largest of which is the Missouri, into which pour other important streams, such as the Osage. No plan of flood control which leaves out the tributaries can be thought of as complete and dependable.

The suggestion that flood control be thought of as a national problem is not new.

More than 80 years ago President Tyler, in a message to Congress, urged such action. Following the flood of 1844, the Missouri River crest of which is marked by a tablet set in the wharf in Boonville, Mo., in the district which I serve, a young Representative from the West arose in Congress and made a plea for Federal control of the great river. His name was Abraham Lincoln. Three decades passed, and one of America's greatest men of letters, one who knew the river and its lore, advocated Federal control. He was a Missourian, Mark Twain. Another quarter century, and an able President and outstanding personality, a man of convictions and courage, a hater of cowards, a true conservationist, advocated river control. He was an American, Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The present plea, as made by the United States Chamber of Commerce, the American Federation of Labor, the great farm organizations, and other bodies, that flood control be regarded as a Federal problem is not new. In 1890 a group of New York business men in a memorial signed by the late Chauncey Depew and others declared that only the Nation could control the Mississippi and in a plea for national support asked:

> Where is the State that does not directly or indirectly derive some benefit from the millions of wealth squeezed out of these sodden grounds but of which the producer retains but the pittance of the poorest living?

The Mississippi is one of the world's greatest rivers. It discharges three times as much water as the St. Lawrence, twenty-five times as much as the Rhine, and three hundred and thirty-eight times as much as the Thames. It has 54 tributaries that are navigable by steamboat and hundreds navigable only by small boats. The total mileage of navigable waterways and tributaries is estimated at 15,000 miles. At 2,000,000 cubic feet per second, flowing for a day, its waters would cover 620 square miles to a depth of 10 feet, while the flow for a week would cover 4,340 square miles to the same depth, or the entire State of Louisiana or Mississippi to a depth of 4 feet in one month, and is equal to six times the water passing over Niagara Falls. It deposits at its mouth each year a mass of soil and silt equal to a square mile in extent and to a depth of 260 feet. It "eats" annually about 9½ acres for each mile of its length. Obviously, no community, no State, can control such a force.

Conceding that flood control on the lower Mississippi is a national problem, there are those who insist that before we proceed we must know what it will cost. Eleven years ago when America, in the name of humanity, went to war, we did not wait to learn what it would cost. I submit that when again comes this same call of humanity, this "Macedonian cry," that we can not consistently wait under the pretext that we want first to see the complete program and know the exact cost.

We have looked after those in foreign fields. We will not do less for our own folk. What if before the work is finally completed and adequate protection afforded for the more than a million human beings behind the earthen banks, the Federal Government has expended a tenth part of the cost of the World War, or even as much as the capitalists of our country last year invested in foreign securities. It will, if the work be well done, be worth the price.

As Secretary Hoover has said, it is not for us to expect the 1,200,000 people in the alluvial plain to move out, but to look forward to the time when as many more will make their homes there.

The argument has been made, subtle and weak as it seems, that these people ought to move out and that "anyway, most of them are negroes." In answer, let it be said that in the saving of human life, in great humanitarian undertakings, we know no color line. Incidentally, some day in this Capital City, with its many monuments, I hope to see erected one to the memory of the "black mammy" of the South, to one who was more than servant. It may be of bronze or marble and the work of a master, but it can not give expression to the spirituals and lullaby songs of those faithful old souls. [Applause.]

Why do the negroes in the cabins, small and meager, and the owners of the big old plantation houses, some of which seem almost to have souls, continue to live 'mid such surroundings? The answer is:

There's something in us native to the soil where we belong;
The gift of gentle gladness or the touch of living song.
There's something in us answering in the long result of years,
Responsive to the message of the soil that caught our tears,
That caught our echoed laughter in the childhoods far away
It comes back, rushing o'er us some far time at work or play,
And all the end and answer of the problem where we roam
Is in the dreams remembered of the little spot called home.

[Applause.]

The magnitude of this problem is such that we can not measure it in money. There come times, such as this, when the dollar as the measure of value is as false as a 30-inch yardstick, as false as a 10-ounce pound, as false as a three-quart gallon. When I recall some of the pathetic pictures, some of the scenes of utter desolation, ruin and wreck that the river had wrought, when I in memory again take that trip through the flood-devastated regions, I feel that I would do violence to my conscience and be no credit to my country if I should at this time quibble over costs.

I see again the countryside where the waters had receded, littered with dead stock, decaying bodies producing a terrible stench. I see gutters of streets filled with powdered lime like snow. I look again across great seas of muddy water, the sites of homesteads that were, marked here and there by groves of trees. Occasional mounds, frequently crowned by last resting places of the dead, became havens for the living, for human beings and wild animals. Many of these mounds were mounts of prayer—prayer for safety and for the assurance that such a calamity should never again come. I see great sodden stretches. All is gone save here and there a water-warped help house.

As near Elaine, Ark., I see a great plantation of 3,000 acres owned by men of my own State, not one of the 175 plantation houses left in place. Most were demolished. Some were floated over against the timber line and at one point 15 were piled in a mass against a railroad bridge. Where the waters have receded, I catch the glimpse here and there of a cabin out of which the mud and slime had been scooped, the floors scoured, and a white counterpane placed on the bed. It is humble, but it is home.

In connection with the flood come many human interest stories. This is one: After the waters had receded in one stricken city, there was seen a negro carrying a sack over his shoulder. "Boss, does you think thar's any moh dangah o'flood heah?" he asked. On being assured that there was none unless another break should occur, this colored man carefully opened the bag and released an old rabbit. "Ole Mr. Rabbit, him and me done ride all night long on de same log in de rivah and I promise him that if de good Lord save me I sho look arter him."

No better picture of the flood in its relation to the colored people has been given than in these lines, "Broken Levees," by a Missouri philosopher:

O, de pale sun blush whah de black waves rush, en de flat-boat trimble when de ole folks whine;
De tukkey buzza'd gloat whah de dead mule float, en de ha'nt snoop eroun' when de moon don't shine.
Dey's weepin' an' a-wailin' when de watah top de palin' end de sof' mud oozle thoo de crack in de do';
En de coon dawg bristle when de steamboat whistle, de flood guinter kivver all de earth once mo'!
De bird man fly to de top er de sky, en de whole worl' shout w'en he made dat trip;
But we ain't got time in de muck an' de slime, whah de dead mule float in de ole Mississip'!

But, after all, the picture that stands out strongest in my mind is that of the optimism, hope, and persistency of the people. A gray-haired man with characteristic spirit said, "No, sah; we were not defeated; we were merely ovahpowered."

Great floods tear the human heartstrings. There is told the story of a man who saw Neptune walking upon the floor of the sea, and that this mythical god entered the Gulf of Mexico and was soon far up the Mississippi. As he journeyed, he dipped his palm into the water and drank. Soliloquizing, he said, "This is not the sea, but the water is salty." Then it is told how refugees in boats and barges passed by, deep lines in their faces. Sinking with his trident to the river's floor, Neptune said, as he went his way, "The waters taste of human sweat and tears."

At Clarendon, Ark., where the White River, whose waters originate in Missouri, had done its worst, there was wreck and ruin. I went into a bank, a beautiful building, where the water had reached the ceiling. Next door was the office of the only newspaper in the town. The lone linotype had been propped up many feet, yet the flood covered it, as it did everything else in the office. As the waters went down, the editor and his little force, as is characteristic of the craft, as my colleague Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma knows, dug the sand and mud out of the old type cases and issued an extra. In this edition were these lines:

Don't fret, and don't you cuss,
And don't be trubble' nusser,
Ain't never been anything so wu'se,
But might a been a little wusser.

Can we fail to put faith in such a people, to those who in the darkest hour never doubt?

It was the same story everywhere. We heard it at Greenville, the home of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], where for many weeks that splendid city was under water and through the streets of which we drove in wagons pulled by Missouri mules. This was necessary because after six weeks the water in many of the streets was too deep for automobile travel. Here we talked with some of the people gathered in the great concentration camp, one of 149 established by the Red Cross. Many of them had no homes to which to return. They had lost all. The landowners looked forward to another cropping season, and the help, with a confidence which has never been misplaced, looked to the landowners.

In the work of the Red Cross and Government agencies we can secure one of the best pictures of this national calamity. The Red Cross sent out three calls, $17,000,000 came in; 330,000 persons were rescued from housetops, levees, mounds, and other points of temporary safety. At the height of the work this great "mother to all" organization was serving a million meals a day, and 607,000 persons were cared for. More than 200,000 head of livestock was looked after, and this was no small problem, owing to the great scarcity of feed and the difficulty of having it shipped in.

Camps varied from the crudest to the most modern. In some the housing facilities were principally box cars, in which the refugees slept and from the doors of which they fished. Hundreds of cooking stoves were used out in the open, and it was an interesting sight to see the colored women as they prepared their meals, largely of "pone and po'k," if they were given their preference. At Alexandria, La., we saw one of the most modern camps, with special dining and nursery equipment for mothers and babies, and there were many in every camp.

The greatest and perhaps the most important work of all, save that of the immediate saving of life, was represented in the battle to prevent disease. State and national agencies and the Red Cross cooperated; 410,000 were inoculated against typhoid, 163,000 vaccinated against smallpox, and literally barrels of quinine distributed. Because Congress had not been called in special session, those who had been driven from their homes were made dependent upon the Red Cross and the charity of America.

I do not charge that delay in action; that the failure of the President to convene Congress in special session was due to the fact that the South rides to the polls on a mule instead of an elephant, but I do believe that a mistake was made when in the time of dire distress this body was not convened so as to bring about earlier action.

I have referred to the helpful agencies. I have never been close to the great corporations, but, in common justice, it should be said that great credit is due the railroads for the magnificent work done. Every road in the territory did its duty. The work of the Missouri Pacific is typical. It handled thousands of refugees, taking them to concentration camps, furnished more than 3,000 box cars in varying periods from three days to three months. At the same time the expense of keeping its lines open and repairing tracks amounted to almost $2,000,000, while the losses totaled $7,000,000.

A year ago the Nation as a whole had caught a great vision and was determined to vitalize it until it became a verity. But when the flood waters went down many forgot. It has ever been so. We are an impulsive people, anxious to aid even to the extent of giving millions and loaning more to those in other lands.

To-day the question comes home to us: What are we going to do for our own? Are we to continue a piecemeal, penurious policy, which, since 1900, has permitted losses of two and a half billion dollars; or are we going to provide protection for these homes and the safety of every citizen, thereby doing justice to this section, which contributes to the welfare of the whole of our united Nation?

Such is the challenge that comes to this Congress! [Applause.]

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR]. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on the base of a statue in New Orleans, erected to commemorate the wonderful statesmanship, broad benevolence, and inspiring oratory of Henry Clay, were found the words:

> If I could eradicate this deepest stain, slavery, from the character of our country, I would not exchange the proud satisfaction which I should enjoy for all the triumphs ever decreed to the most successful conqueror.

Paraphrasing that sublime utterance, if I could be instrumental in releasing the people in the Mississippi Valley from the greatest slave owner and slave driver that the world ever knew, the Mississippi River uncontrolled, I would not exchange the proud satisfaction for all the triumphs ever decreed to all the conquerors that ever came onto this earth and who are immortalized in the chapters of all the histories of the globe. [Applause.]

Since I came to Congress I have preached the word of flood control, I thought, to the unconverted, to the heathen. I labored on in the vain hope that my prayer would be answered. I knew I was not going to make any great progress until some unparalleled calamity should occur in the history of the valley. I felt at times I was a distant relation of John the Baptist. Men thought I was talking for the district I have the honor to represent, to use a bromide; that I had some special interest to serve; that I was a potboiler; that I was looking for the fishes and loaves; that I wanted some appropriation to boast about in order to further my political interests and my political ambitions; but, gentlemen, that was farthest from my thoughts.

As a boy, as a child, reared on the banks of the Mississippi, in a city that had the sword of Damocles hanging over it constantly, I soon became aware of the haunting terror that dogged the footsteps of every man and woman who lived along the alluvial parts of the Mississippi River.

The Johnstown disaster, which shocked the Nation, and later on the Galveston affair, which caused people to weep, from ocean to ocean, only served to emphasize the direction of my slant of mind and to show me that a greater catastrophe was impending; that some day the Mississippi River banks would hold; that there would be no break between Baton Rouge and New Orleans; and that then the protection levee which controls the destiny of that city would give way and that New Orleans, on account of its topographical situation, would furnish a tragedy such as the world had never known, for all engineers unite in the belief that the city is so situated that a break in the river at the protection levee or Dumaine Street means that houses would be overturned and driven out to the only place that the waters could find an exit, would there act as a dam, and then begin to burn as they did at Johnstown, so that they could not be used as rafts and that 400,000 of your people, blood of your blood, bone of your bone, and sinew of your sinew, would be drowned like rats or burned in a fire such as hell has never had. That was the picture which was in my mind and that is what inspired me to sing my song here, a melancholy refrain, day after day, whenever I got the opportunity, in order to let you know that your countrymen, the men and women of that valley, were in terrible danger but particularly that the lives of the people of one of the great cities of the United States were hanging in the balance as long as this flood problem was uncontrolled.

Keep in mind, gentlemen, that as long as the levees break above New Orleans we do not have to fear, and it was only when there was the break at Bayou de Glaises, with the water sweeping down the Atchafalaya, that we knew we were safe in the 1927 disaster. For before that crevasse and those that followed when Secretary Hoover gave out the statement that he was looking, with agonized eyes, to the thirteenth city of the United States because 4 feet more of water was coming down the Mississippi than had rushed to the sea in 1922, we felt that that historic city, with all of its wonderfully inspiring memories, was marked and doomed for such a destruction as had never overwhelmed any other city in the history of the world, and it was only the break at Bayou de Glaises and the rushing of the waters down the Atchafalaya which practically made for the safety of the people of New Orleans.

In other words, the misfortune of that rich agricultural section inured to the advantage, the protection, and safety of our old city. It is a melancholy reflection to know that our protection was at the terrible cost of a temporary destruction of our kinsmen. However, in order to make doubly sure we made a cut at Caenarvon, and we did it unhesitatingly, though with great grief and sorrow and financial cost, every dollar of which New Orleans is paying to those whose property was lost or damaged. It was in my district, and I knew the people would be inundated and driven from the homes in which they had lived, not for one or two generations but for six, seven, and eight generations. Those people go as far back for their American origin as any people on this continent. But they got out, and it was one of the most mournful trains in the history of the United States, to see them wending their way into the city of New Orleans, where they were taken into homes and given places until the threat and menace of the flood had disappeared, and we had repaired the levees and rehabilitated their homes.

No, my friends, you can not ignore this proposition. Of course, there will be men who will make money out of it, but many have made billions out of the tariff and nobody has winced. I have voted for such measures because it means for the common good and the upbuilding of the country, from my particular standpoint, though I differ reluctantly from those with whom I am associated and love on this side, the Democratic side, of the House because they are largely closer to me in blood and bone than many on your side, the Republican side.

I have seen hundreds of millions given for the development of waterways in other sections, and I am glad the Congress gave it—$160,000,000 for the Great Lakes and about $150,000,000 for the Ohio River alone. I say this was well done. It will make for the national greatness and the national glory and promote the happiness and welfare of our people. I have seen you give $11,000,000,000 which went, when all is said and done, to make shambles out of Europe and for our boys to die like dogs in the mud; and later on, I have seen you permit our bankers, national and international, under the guise of reconstruction send approximately $15,000,000,000 over the way. If you weep for Europe, whence came our ancestors, my tears will mingle with yours, but what about American Bill Jones on the Arkansas, and World War Veteran Joe Smith on the Mississippi, and Spanish-American War Tom Jones on the Missouri?

Of course, in every great enterprise and national undertaking there will be money made as long as the civilization we have based upon property rights exists, and what if a little money is made in the valley—not by us! We do not own railroads. They belong to magnates, great and small, in other sections of the country. We of the valley have been money-makers. We have always by our toil added to the wealth of other sections whose capital was invested in our factories, foundries, and mines, and fields, and farms, We have always been contributors, and just as we have contributed, just as we have run rivers of gold from that section to New York and other cities where the headquarters of railroad lines are, and insurance companies are located, and where all of the great clothing manufacturers are, have we as uncomplainingly made sacrifices for our country, because it is our own. Gentlemen, here I am, born and reared in New Orleans, and every stitch I have on, shoes, underclothes, socks, and all, come from the Northeast. There may be money made, I repeat again, out of such a gigantic proposition, but how can it be otherwise where great moneys will be expended?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. So, gentlemen, we can not stand upon nickels and dimes in a matter that means so much to the people of the Mississippi Valley directly and to the Nation in its broadest and far-reaching effects. We have got to go on with the work, and so far as investigations are concerned you will become the laughing stock of America if you give that sort of a bunco song to them once more.

The engineers have been investigating for 40 long years, and for 40 years destruction and death have been threatening the people of the valley. We must make a start. Engineering is like medicine—it is experimental. There is nothing exact about it and you have got to lay the foundation and from day to day profit through your errors and build up a successful system upon wrecked theories and fallacies of the past.

You have got to go on, my friends. This is not a threat; it is a mere statement of fact. If the Republican Party, the party in power, does not solve this proposition, they will have more to explain to the people of America than they have ever had during all their long, splendid, historic career, and I honor the party because it has written into the history of this country some memorable chapters. But you can not dodge it if you would, and I know you do not want to do it if you can possibly avoid it. You have got to solve this problem, and you know it.

You can not go into another campaign with the problem unsolved, because the conclusion will be irresistible, the deduction and the inference are inevitable, that if you could not solve this, you are not able to administer the Government safely and accurately and economically along any other lines. In the minds of the American people that thought will be just as certain as night follows the day and they will accept your failure as an infallible indication of your political and mental bankruptcy. Just as false in one means false in all, inability in a great crisis like this would spell inability generally; and you have trouble enough of your own from other angles not to foolishly invite the situation which would come to you in the event that the problem was not solved. If the Republican Party, the administration, does not meet it, write Ichabod over the door of your temple—"The glory of my house has departed"—I think as the tragic farewell to greatness, a mournful announcement of political decay.

I repeat, gentlemen, we can not stand upon the nickels-and-dimes idea. "It will cost too much" will not appeal to American ears where the brains behind those ears know what you have done in so many other directions. You have helped in all other directions and to neglect your countrymen and not to give them—not charity, but only that succor which will put them on their feet and enable them through renewed purchasing power to add to the prosperity of the whole Union, would be fatal.

I remember, Mr. Chairman, in 1895 I was a clerk in a cotton house. I was a sort of chief cook and bottle washer in the establishment. I was the bookkeeper, the stenographer, and did everything, including working as an assistant cotton classer. I mention this to show that it was a day of great poverty throughout the Southland. Then came what was looked upon as a disaster that was going to practically obliterate us and accomplish what was in the minds of many inevitably the result of the great Civil War. Cotton went down until middling hit 5 cents a pound. A bale of cotton could not pay the rent of the acre on which it was raised, and then New England set up a cry because we could not buy their boots, could not buy their shoes or clothes, and that rich powerful manufacturing section then began to understand that the country was interdependent, bound together for weal or woe, for better or worse, in sunshine and in storm, in victory and in defeat, in triumph and in disaster. [Applause.]

I believe it was Lowell, who in his immortal poem, "The Present Crisis," gave to the world over, and to his own America particularly, a message "so holy and so sublime that it would not misbecome the lips of those ethereal virtues whom blind Milton saw with that inner eye which no calamity could ever darken flinging down upon the jasper pavements their crowns of amaranth and gold." He sang into our hearts and souls that benevolence meant the advancement of those who bestowed and that bread cast upon the waters shall be returned to you after many days—that the reward of one duty well performed is the power to discharge another, and that helpfulness to a stricken people made for a realization of the yearning at every heart and brought us nearer my God to Thee—and that neglect-breeding selfishness and greed which, in turn, begot cruelty, took from man that which has ennobled him in the eyes of his Maker. In unforgettable words he carried to our better natures the assurance that right was not forever on the scaffold, that wrong was not forever on the throne. That is perhaps the sentimental aspect and view of a dreamer of dreams—but sentiment is higher and above reason when it is not the loftiest reason itself.

But if America looks at this great question solely from the standpoint of an enlightened selfishness, which many cynical philosophers assert is the basis of all civilization, from the practical standpoint of the hard-boiled statesman flood relief will be granted, the great Father of Waters and main tributaries taken over as a national obligation and converted by the genius of our governmental machinery and capacity into an asset that will build up our greatness higher and along nobler and finer lines than it will ever attain as long as the Mississippi remains the most dangerous and costly liability that ever cursed, afflicted, and disgraced a nation as opulent as the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes. In order that the committee may not rise without having some idea of the foundation upon which the terrific argument made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is based I want to call attention to two or three things. If the gentleman from Wisconsin is right then General Jadwin has been guilty of deceit toward the people of the United States. When the Jadwin plan was put forth to the public all through the report were statements like these: "The land is of little or no value." "The land is swamp land."

If the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin is true, they have misled the people of the United States into thinking that the flood ways are of no value or of small value, and consequently the amount to be contributed by the local interests was little or nothing. To-morrow or the next day I will read the record to you.

Now, in regard to a former Member of Congress and a former Senator appearing before the committee, I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin, in spite of his enthusiasm, would not want to misrepresent the former Member of the House and former Senator. On page 4482 of the flood-control hearings will be found this:

Mr. JOHNSON. What legislation do you mean, Senator?

Mr. LORIMER. Legislation for flood control, including a spillway through Cypress Creek down into the Tensas Basin.

In so far as we are concerned, Mr. Chairman, if it would assure flood control, such land as we own in that neighborhood we would be very glad to contribute. It has a value of probably around $10 an acre. It never can be worth any more, because it is in the direct path of the flood way and is also in that area that is overflowed by the backwater from the Old River in Tensas Basin.

Now, I have a couple of telegrams which I received to-day that I wish to read. One is from J. F. McIntyre, president of Willets Wood Products Co., Natchez, Miss. He says:

Chairman FRANK R. REID,
Flood Control Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Our company own 41,000 acres cut-over and timber land in Concordia Parish, La. We will sell any part of our land that is required for spillways at $5 per acre all around, gas, oil, and timber reserved.

(Signed) J. F. MCINTYRE,
President Willets Wood Products Co.

The next one is from Wilmer J. Thomas, vice president Delta Hardwood Lumber Co., Rayville, La.:

Hon. FRANK R. REID,
Chairman Flood Control Committee, Washington, D. C.:

Believe those opposing your flood control bill because local property owners will demand exorbitant prices are mistaken. We own 12,500 acres in Catahoula Parish and will be glad to accept $10 per acre for flowage rights. Believe you will find most of the landowners will want only a fair and reasonable compensation.

(Signed) WILMER J. THOMAS,
Vice President Delta Hardwood Lumber Co.

Now we are getting the record to present to the House so that you will have an idea that the committee is not guilty of any such disposition as to report out a bill where anybody will make a great deal of money.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is altogether wrong. A lot of this land is worth only $2 to $7 an acre, and the people would be glad to give it to the Government.

Mr. REID of Illinois. I am more sure than ever that my position is right, that local contributions will prevent any flood control, because if the land is of the value he says, how can any local levee district ever raise a billion dollars to match the Government's $290,000,000 under conditions now existing? [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two minutes. The argument made by the chairman I will be glad to answer at the proper time. I do not think it would be wise to do so at this time. As far as values are concerned, I have given you the best information I have. The committee knows there was testimony offered of $75 an acre. Land in the New Madrid flood way averages double that amount. As to the telegrams, that testimony was never before the committee. We have not had that kind of evidence placed before the committee to my knowledge by anyone. It is true that Mr. Lorimer made a statement as to an interest in lands that he would be glad to contribute. Whether he can contribute or not I do not know; and I do not know what lands he had in mind. He did not offer to contribute any part of the 226,000 acres in the flood way belonging to the Tensas Land Co.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman say that former Senator Lorimer was interested in land?

Mr. FREAR. He said so before the committee.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then how can he sit here on the floor of the House if he is directly interested?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF A BILL

Mr. STALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill (H. R. 12204) to authorize the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to accept the title to a State camp for veterans at Bath, N. Y., which was referred to the World War Veterans' Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw the bill H. R. 12204. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PORTRAIT OF HON. HENRY D. FLOOD

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following proceedings of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on Friday, March 30, 1928. The committee record relates to the ceremony connected with the presentation to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of an oil painting of Henry Delaware Flood by his widow and children. Mr. Flood was the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee from 1913 to 1919:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Friday, March 30, 1928.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Gentlemen of the committee, your chairman has the honored privilege this morning of introducing a distinguished son of Virginia, Harry Flood Byrd, Governor of Virginia. [Applause.]

STATEMENT OF HON. HARRY FLOOD BYRD, GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA

Governor BYRD. Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, ladies and gentlemen, I appear here to-day as Governor of Virginia to present to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives of the United States on behalf of Mrs. Flood, a portrait of the man who served as chairman of this committee in the greatest of all wars brought us into contact with all the world and into conflict with a powerful part of the world.

This portrait preserves for us the features of Henry Delaware Flood, who served his State for 10 years in the legislative halls at Richmond, as a member of the State Constitutional Convention, and who took a leading part in that convention, which was the most important event in the history of Virginia; as a member of the Virginia Debt Commission he took also a leading part in settling that controversy between Virginia and West Virginia; and as chairman of the Democratic State committee.

He served his country for 20 years in the Congress of the United States, and he served all men when he introduced, on behalf of this committee, the resolution declaring war upon Prussian militarism.

That war, initiated by that resolution, marked the inevitable end of America's complete isolation in international affairs, and this former chairman of your committee will always retain the distinction of having played a worthy part in supreme events that revolutionized the place, the power, and the prestige of our country upon a stage as wide as the world itself.

It was Mr. Flood also who, as chairman of the Committee on the Territories, introduced the resolution conferring statehood upon New Mexico and Arizona.

But it is not for me to appreciate at length the public services of this man who was your colleague for so many years. I hold to him a more personal relation. I can not hide behind the mask of my official position the love and admiration that I felt for this brother of my mother.

In my earlier years he was to me another father. In my older years he was an affectionate and considerate elder brother.

I admired him most because of his loyalty to friends and to causes. He never forgot those who served him and he did not hesitate in the face of difficulties in championing the measures in which he believed.

He was a party man, who believed in party discipline and party organization.

For example, he was not for Woodrow Wilson in the Baltimore convention, although Mr. Wilson was born in his congressional district. But no man in either branch of Congress gave to President Wilson a more effective or loyal support, especially during the trying days of the World War.

He was as fair and square in politics as he was in business. But he never posed as the possessor of self-virtues that require self-eulogy. He was a practical, unpretentious man who went his political way without pretense and did his daily work without parade.

And because he was fine and sincere he drew and held the friendship and admiration of many men in both parties in the Congress of the United States, whose own manly qualities recognized and responded to similar qualities in him.

So much I hope you will indulge me in saying this much of this uncle whom I loved.

Now, as Governor of Virginia, acting for Mrs. Flood, I present to you the portrait of one of Virginia's most distinguished sons, who served and loved his State and country. I well know how much he valued the friendship and confidence of his colleagues on this Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I like to think to-day that his sentient spirit smiles down upon us as we place him where he may look down upon your deliberations and be, in memory, the companion of your counsels. [Applause.]

(The portrait of Mr. Flood was unveiled by his children, Bolling Byrd Flood and Eleanor Flood.)

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, it is peculiarly fitting that another distinguished son of Virginia, and the successor on this committee of Mr. Flood, should respond in behalf of the committee, Mr. MOORE. [Applause.]

STATEMENT OF HON. R. WALTON MOORE, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF VIRGINIA

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I feel very much honored in being requested to perform this duty.

I might speak of my personal relations with Mr. Flood, having been associated with him in the General Assembly of Virginia, the Constitutional Convention of the State, and later having served with him here in the House of Representatives. But I shall not do that, but take a few minutes to talk about his important identification with the work of this committee, and incidentally say something of the evolution of the history of the committees which deal with foreign affairs in the two Houses.

We are surprised as we look back to find that in the earliest days there were no standing committees to handle foreign business in either branch of Congress. Prior to those committees being formed, the messages of the Presidents, so far as they touched upon foreign affairs, were distributed among various committees, or were turned over to special committees raised for the purpose when particular matters required consideration.

It is with something of pride, as a Virginian, that I recall that in 1816, when the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which has become so powerful and influential, was established, that was done under the leadership of one of the predecessors of Governor Byrd in the office of the chief executive of our Commonwealth, James Barbour, who was also Secretary of War in the administration of President John Quincy Adams, and later minister to England.

And I believe that, when in 1820 the House Committee on Foreign Affairs was created, that was done under the leadership of another Virginian, Representative Hugh Nelson. Before that, between 1909 and 1920, there was a House special Committee on Foreign Affairs.

In the period from 1909 until Mr. Flood passed away, there were 40 chairmen of the special and standing House committees, and of those 40 chairmen, six of whom were Virginians, but one exceeded Mr. Flood in length of service, and that was Representative N. B. Banks, who for a while served as Speaker of the House. Next to him, Mr. Flood and Representative Archer, of Virginia, who afterwards became a Senator, served each for a term of six years.

This committee, so far as the office of chairman is concerned, has had a peculiarly distinguished record. Let me mention some of the very eminent statesmen who have filled the chairmanship.

There was Nathaniel Macon, of North Carolina, for a time Speaker, afterwards a Member of the Senate and its Presiding Officer, and known throughout the country as one of the most conspicuous and trusted leaders of his party.

Another was John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, Secretary of War, United States Senator, and Vice President.

Another—the memory of great men sometimes fades out and they are forgotten—was John Forsyth, of Georgia, Senator, Secretary of State, and minister to Spain.

Another was the wonderful orator, Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, Secretary of State and also minister to Spain.

Another was Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts, who was Attorney General, and in many fields of action illustrated his great capacity, his learning, and his ability for service to the country.

Another was a very noted orator, who, in his day, was constantly in the eye of the public, Thomas Corwin, of Ohio, first a Representative and then a Senator, Secretary of State, and minister to Spain.

Another was John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, who served in the Senate and as Attorney General.

Deserving to rank with those men and others of equal prominence who might be mentioned, and to be thought of in connection with them, was our friend, whose lamented death occurred during his service of many years here.

Mr. Flood was appointed a member of the committee as far back as 1903 and became chairman in 1913. He was chairman during the time of that greatest of all tragedies to which Governor Byrd has referred. He was chairman while the world was engaged in the war, before we entered the conflict, and he was chairman when it was determined that our Government should become a participant.

There are Members of Congress still serving on one side of the Capitol or the other who belonged to the committee in 1917, gentlemen whom we all know and respect. Mr. LINTHICUM, of Maryland; the venerable gentleman from North Carolina, the only veteran of the Civil War in the House, Major STEDMAN; Mr. HARRISON, of Mississippi, now a Senator from his State; Mr. FESS, of Ohio, also now a Senator; Mr. SABATH, of Illinois; Mr. HUDDLESTON, of Alabama; Mr. CONNALLY, of Texas; Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin; Mr. TEMPLE, of Pennsylvania; and the distinguished present chairman of this committee.

It was on the 2d day of April, 1917—a day that will always shine out on the calendar of the ages—on the evening of that day, after darkness had come and the lights had been turned on, that at 8.30 o'clock the President of the United States appeared before a joint session of Congress and declared that the hour had struck when this country should unite its fortunes with the fortunes of the nations of Europe which were combating the military aggression which seemed then almost too strong to be successfully resisted. No one who witnessed it can ever forget that scene. No one can ever forget the ringing and eloquent words which were uttered to the Congress by the President and which stirred the heart of humanity on both sides of the ocean.

That was on April 2, and on the 4th of April the Senate acted, passing a resolution declaring war, and on that very day the resolution came to this committee, was acted on promptly, reported to the House, the debate forthwith occurred, and the approval of the House voted.

No words of mine justifying the action that was taken can equal the words of the chairman of this committee, Mr. Flood, who brought the resolution before the House and led in the proceedings that were then taken. Let me read one or two sentences from his speech presenting the resolution and urging its passage. I quote from the RECORD:

"But it has seemed to me that during the past three weeks there has been manifested to everyone who has watched the current of events a determined and deliberate intention on the part of the German Government to insult our flag, to destroy American property, and to murder American citizens, and a nation that will not fight for its honor and for such wrongs to its people is not worthy of the love of those people or the respect of the world and will not long retain either. [Applause.] With that situation, it seemed to me there was but one course for an American and a Congressman to pursue, and that was to accept the gage of battle thrown at our feet by the arrogant autocracy of Germany. [Prolonged applause.]

"For two years and a half the world has been afire. For two years and a half of our civilization has been shaken by a convulsion unequaled in its history heretofore. But during that time the great Chief Executive of this country, by the exercise of a marvelous patience, by the exercise of great wisdom and patriotism, has kept this country out of Europe's fearful conflict. But despite all of his effort in the interests of peace, despite the wishes and the prayers of the American people in the interest of peace, despite our many courtesies to and our unfailing consideration of the German Government, this powerful belligerent, this most unscrupulous of all the European belligerents, has so acted as to make it necessary for us to enter the war, and when we do enter it we will teach that belligerent that it is a dangerous thing to arouse the long-suffering and patient democracy of this great Republic. [Applause.]"

Then he said in conclusion, the complete silence broken only by his voice:

"The American Nation is the fairest flower of civilization. Princes may be jealous of her progress and tyrants may read in her rise their own downfall; but the great heart of the people of every land and clime is hers, she is their beacon light, guiding them to the glories of this grander day. [Prolonged applause.]"

The discussion lasted but a few hours, and at its end the die was cast, and this great Republic rapidly and effectively armed for the great adventure. What occurred the world knows, and the annals of men to remotest time will record, and in those annals will always stand the name of the man, then chairman of this committee, who was so conspicuously identified with the great events of the most memorable era in his time; the man whom we are now commemorating, in the presence of his widow and children, relatives, and friends.

I for one do not believe that there is any useful connection with any transaction of high importance, making for the protection and betterment of mankind, can fail to exert a lasting influence. I do not concur in the sentiment of Edmund Burke, the most eloquent man of the most eloquent race, which is so often repeated. Burke and another were the Whig candidates for the House of Commons to represent the city of Bristol. They were campaigning in that city.

Burke had already made an address, which comes down to us as one of the most masterly he ever delivered. In a few hours his colleague suddenly died. The people gathered about the hotel where Burke was staying, calling upon him for some expression of the feelings aroused by the event which had so unexpectedly occurred, and he used this language:

"What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue."

We can not agree that such an estimate can have any general application. We can not believe that men who served like our friend can be regarded as having been merely shadows in a passing drama, or can be regarded as having merely pursued shadows along the track of time. It seems to me that he and all who, in a spirit of real devotion to duty, willing and eager to make every sacrifice, have performed service, can not be remembered otherwise than as having aided in upbuilding, in developing, and in promoting the progress of civilization, which is no shadowy or unsubstantial performance, but a performance essential to the maintenance of the liberties, the happiness, and the endearing welfare of humanity.

In behalf of the committee, as the friend of Mr. Flood, as a Virginian, and most of all as an American, proud of his record of achievement, I am happy to receive this portrait, which I hope will long be kept among the valued possessions of this body, of which he was such an ornament. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen of the committee, ladies and gentlemen, we appreciate very much your presence here to-day to take part in the commemoration of the memory of a very noted American. The committee, especially its chairman, is very grateful to you.

If there is no further business, the committee will stand adjourned.

(Thereupon the committee adjourned.)

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 1928

Rev. James W. Morris, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Let Thy merciful ears, O gracious and Heavenly Father, be open to the prayers of Thy people who come to Thee. Endue their souls with such a realization of Thy all-seeing eye, before which all hearts are open and all desires known, as shall hallow and purify all their occupations and activities. Especially in behalf of those whom Thou hast intrusted with the affairs of state and who sit in the halls of legislation, we pray that their minds may ever be enlightened and their wills clarified and directed by the consciousness of that Thy searching presence, that so all things by their endeavors may be established on the best and surest foundations. Grant this, O Father, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT NEBRASKA CITY, NEBR.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 11887, a bridge bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 11887) authorizing the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Nebraska City, Nebr., was read twice by its title.

Mr. NORRIS. A similar bill in identical terms was introduced in the Senate by my colleague, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL]. The committee to which it was referred has reported the bill, recommending that it pass without amendment. That bill is now on the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and that the House bill be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill H. R. 11887, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Nebraska City, Nebr., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Nebraska, the State of Iowa, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Nebraska and Iowa, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Interstate Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such right, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that Senate bill 3843, of the same title, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, Senate bill 3843 will be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11203) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Telfair and Coffee to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Ocmulgee River at or near the present Jacksonville Ferry in Telfair and Coffee Counties, Ga., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Telfair and Coffee, State of Georgia, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Ocmulgee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the present Jacksonville Ferry in Telfair and Coffee Counties, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Public Printer, transmitting the annual report of the operations of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1927, and the calendar year 1927, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. PHIPPS presented letters and telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Medical Society of the city and county of Denver, the Delta County Medical Society, the American Society of Clinical Pathologists, and numerous physicians, all in the State of Colorado, praying for the adoption of the so-called Robinson amendment to House bill 1, the tax reduction bill, so as to permit deduction for income-tax purposes of expenses in attending medical meetings, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Washington, praying for repeal of the national-origins quota provision of the existing immigration law, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BROOKHART presented a memorial signed by J. A. Field, secretary Izaak Walton League of America, of Des Moines, and sundry other citizens of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 1271, the so-called migratory bird bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by the chamber of commerce of Powell, and Orin Snyder Post, No. 37, American Legion, of Midwest, both in the State of Wyoming, favoring the passage of legislation to provide for aided and directed settlement on Federal reclamation projects, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Travis Snow Post, No. 5, American Legion, of Torrington, Wyo., favoring the passage of legislation to increase the strength of the Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Travis Snow Post, No. 5, American Legion, of Torrington, Wyo., favoring the passage of the so-called Box bill, being House bill 6465, placing immigration from countries therein designated on a quota basis, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—TAX REDUCTION

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an editorial appearing in the Washington Post of this morning, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The editorial refers to amendments proposed to the revenue bill. An amendment was presented by myself the other day proposing to raise the tariff on certain agricultural products. It is well known that the Washington Post is looked upon as spokesman for the administration. In this editorial it is intimated that a conspiracy has been entered into to prevent the tax reduction bill from being passed. Among other things, the editorial says:

The latest proposal—

To hamper tax legislation, of course—

sponsored by Senator SHIPSTEAD, of Minnesota, is evidently designed only as an embarrassment.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I had not consulted any Member of the Senate about the submission of the amendment. It was submitted at the request of very many people in Minnesota who are engaged in the occupation of agriculture, who stated that such products as potatoes and rutabagas are forced down in price because of the flow of similar agricultural products into the Northwest from Canada, and that there are also large importations of vegetable oils which come in competition with our dairy products.

I resent the imputation that the amendment was not offered in good faith. The slogan of the Congress, of the country, and of all political parties has been that a parity shall be established between agriculture and industry. Congress has so far refused to reduce the tariff schedules on manufactured products of industry, and Congress will now have an opportunity to raise the tariff duties on agricultural products to a parity with those on the products of industry.

The amendment was not submitted for the purpose of hindering the passage of the so-called tax bill, the revenue measure. It is not true that it was submitted as a result of any conspiracy of any Member of Congress with me to hamper the passage of the tax bill. Farmers are not concerned much with a reduction of income taxes, because their income is so small they do not pay this tax anyway. Has it come to pass that it is considered to be antagonistic to a Republican administration to propose to raise the tariff? Has it come to a situation where a proposition to raise the tariff is considered heretical doctrine by a Republican administration, or is it only heresy when it applies to agriculture? How do you know the President will veto a bill increasing the tariff on a few agricultural products?

We know, and it is admitted by the advocates of the McNary-Haugen bill, that it would be worthless without a tariff. It is hooked up with the tariff; the very foundation of it is the tariff. It will be ineffective and useless without tariff schedules to protect agriculture from the influx of agricultural products, now amounting to two and one-half billion dollars. So even though Congress may pass the McNary-Haugen bill, and the President may sign it, that measure will to a large extent be useless unless tariff schedules are raised on certain agricultural products. Everyone who knows anything about that subject at all knows that.

I wish again to say that it is an unfair imputation to say that this amendment was not submitted in good faith. I have had correspondence with hundreds of farmers in Minnesota who have asked for relief from the influx of agricultural products into the Northwest. I introduced the amendment for them. The amendment, if adopted, would afford a remedy, and I am very much surprised that a Republican newspaper should charge me with being sponsor of an antiadministration measure because I propose to raise the protective tariff on agricultural products.

The editorial from the Washington Post of April 18, 1928, which was ordered printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

TAX REDUCTION AND POLITICS

Tax reduction bids fair to meet a political death at the present session of Congress. There are increasing signs that enemies of the adminstration intend to make certain that any revenue revision measure passed will be unacceptable to the President. The theory of the anti-administration strategy appears to be that the Republican Party will be weakened if it fails to bring about some cut in the present schedule of taxation.

The latest proposal sponsored by Senator SHIPSTEAD, of Minnesota, is evidently designed only as an embarrassment. A "rider" to the tax reduction bill providing for increased duties on farm products may attract considerable Democratic and Progressive support, but it would not be approved by President Coolidge. The tariff can not be considered in any such piecemeal fashion. The structure of tariff legislation is too complicated and interdependent for any such procedure to be followed. Many Members of Congress know this, but they are more intent upon making political capital than drafting legislation.

Considered in the light of traditional Democratic policy on tariff matters, there ought to be no support from the minority party for tariff revision upward. In this instance the Shipstead plan affords the Democrats the best opportunity they have yet seen to prevent sound tax reduction. The Progressives, more particularly in the Senate, have not been inclined to support a tax cut. Their view is that any surplus which may result from the existing revenue laws should be applied to the debts. They may, however, be swung over to the Democratic theory of tax revision, declared unsound by the Treasury, in order to gain increased duties for agriculture. But, with the House safely Republican, it is not to be expected that the tariff will be revised as an incident to tax reduction.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD's amendment to House bill No. 1, submitted by him on the 16th instant, was also, on his request, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SHIPSTEAD to the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes, viz: On page 225, after line 19, insert the following new title:

SEC. 802. EFFECTIVE DATE OF TITLE

This title shall take effect on the day following the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course there is no agreement between the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and the Democrats with reference to the amendment which he has offered; and I rise to express my appreciation of the statement given to the press on yesterday by the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee, with reference to his views touching that amendment.

There was passed in the House of Representatives before Christmas, and labeled House bill No. 1, the revenue bill, seeking to give some tax reduction to the American people at an early date. The bill, as has been stated upon the floor of the Senate and in the House of Representatives, was labeled House bill No. 1 because the leadership in that body thought that should be the first bill passed by the Congress. That bill has remained in the Committee on Finance without final action since last year. For now about three weeks the Committee on Finance of the Senate has been considering the provisions of that bill with the idea of trying to get together upon it and report it to the Senate as early as possible. It now seems that the Finance Committee will report the bill to the Senate early next week. I hope when that report shall have been made that the leadership of this body will steer the bill to early consideration by the Senate. I am sure that this side of the aisle will approve the statement of the Senator from North Carolina that he hopes that nothing will arise in the consideration of that proposed legislation that might embarrass it or defeat tax reduction.

I concede to no Senator here greater enthusiasm for the early consideration of tariff reform or tariff revision legislation. I wish that the House of Representatives during the present session had given consideration to the inordinately high tariff duties on many articles, and, possibly, to the too low duties upon certain other articles, and had passed a tariff revision measure so that the Senate might have considered it; but, of course, under the Constitution, the Senate is not permitted to originate tariff legislation. I wish that we might consider the tariff question in the Senate as a rider upon some bill, but not a bill of the importance of the internal revenue tax reduction measure. That bill, Mr. President, being House bill No. 1, is too important; it means too much to the American taxpayer for us to attempt tariff revision upon it. We know that the Executive would veto any legislation which might be engrafted upon the tax reduction bill that might not meet his views. So it seems to me the wise thing to do, when the Senate Finance Committee shall report the revenue bill, will be to eliminate tariff considerations from it, and confine the discussion to the rates that are in the bill and to its administrative features, so that when the bill shall finally be put into the form in which it will go to the President he will have to write his veto or approval upon that proposition alone.

I hope the Senate will agree with the minority members of the Finance Committee that we can give a greater tax reduction to the people at this time than the Treasury now thinks it wise to give them. The Treasury Department has gradually revised its estimates from this amount to that amount quarterly during the year until now it states that internal-revenue taxation should not be reduced below $200,000,000. I want to put into the RECORD, so that not only the Senators may read it, but the country may read it as well, the views as to the Government estimates and as to how great a reduction the Treasury will stand as expressed to the Finance Committee by the representatives of the United States Chamber of Commerce. I believe that their views are sounder than those expressed by the Undersecretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, representing the Treasury Department; and I hope when the bill shall finally go to the President for his approval or disapproval that it will give to the American taxpayer a reduction of at least $300,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Mississippi will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, April 12, 1928.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: Responding to your invitation, I have the honor to present the position of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on Federal tax reduction.

Since its organization in 1912, the chamber with committees composed of outstanding business executives and economists has continuously studied and from time to time submitted to its membership for referendum vote, questions on the fiscal policies of the Government, without regard to changing governmental administrations.

The essential function of the chamber is to develop and present nonpartisan principles which are in the public interest. Facts are ascertained through careful investigation by representative committees and after full consideration and deliberate vote of our member chambers of commerce and trade associations throughout the country the position of the national chamber is determined.

The chamber's war record of taxation policies has a direct relation to the policies the chamber now urges for the reason that by an overwhelming vote of its membership, effective soon after the declaration of war, the chamber immediately urged a large increase in income taxes, the imposition of excess-profit taxes, and new and heavy excise taxes.

This position was in support of the principle that the largest possible part of war cost should be met through current taxation in order that during the inevitable readjustment of postwar years the tax burden might be more quickly lightened.

This policy was adopted by the Government and the war thus was financed, but since the war full application of the principle has not been made and taxes have continued out of proportion to the needs of the Government for current expenses and for amounts specified by Congress to be used in debt retirement.

Our latest taxation referendum, No. 50 (October last), was carried by the largest vote in the history of the chamber. I am attaching this referendum showing the personnel of the chamber's committee, together with their report, and a tabulation of the names of the organizations which voted upon it and how they voted.

The officers of the national chamber are therefore charged with advocating:

1. Reduction of the corporation income tax to not more than 10 per cent.

2. Repeal of the remaining war excise taxes on particular businesses.

3. Repeal of the Federal inheritance tax.

These proposals were presented by the chamber's tax committee to the Committee on Ways and Means, November 1, 1927.

The revenue bill which passed the House of Representatives on December 15 has been held in the Senate committee now four months. In this period our committee has had no reason to change its views in regard to the revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1929 on any facts or developments which have arisen in the interval.

The national chamber has steadily advocated return to a peace-time taxation basis. Its recommendations have included for two years the repeal of the Federal inheritance tax, for four years the reduction of the corporation income tax, and for seven years the repeal of the war excise taxes. Two years ago it opposed the increase of the corporation income tax from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent, now demonstrated to have been unnecessary.

The taxation recommendations of the chamber at previous sessions of Congress are demonstrated to have been entirely feasible and possible, as shown by the following table indicating the total amounts of actual debt retirement in recent years and the sources from which these amounts of retirement were made possible.

Funds used for debt retirement

	Compulsory (required by law gradually increasing each year)	Permissive		Actual retirement
		Interest from foreign governments	Year-end Treasury surpluses
1924	$289,000,000	$159,000,000	$505,000,000	[1]$1,098,000,000
1925	306,000,000	160,000,000	250,000,000	[1] 754,000,000
1926	322,000,000	160,000,000	377,000,000	[1] 872,000,000
1927	359,000,000	160,000,000	635,000,000	1,133,000,000

[1] Includes an amount obtained through reduction in the balance in the general fund

Over one-fourth of the income of the National Government—that is, $1,133,000,000—during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, was applied to debt retirement. This is more than three times the statutory requirements for debt reduction. Nearly as much will be used to reduce the national debt this year should no tax bill be passed.

After careful consideration Congress passed legislation providing for the retirement of the national debt in an orderly manner. If it is the judgment of the American people that the debt should be retired more rapidly, Congress would undoubtedly pass legislation increasing the statutory rate of debt reduction.

ESTIMATES FOR 1929

The national chamber believes that the official estimate of receipts for the year ending June 30, 1929, are low by a considerable figure.

CORPORATION INCOME TAX

We find that corporations showing any net income for 1925 had an aggregate of $9,340,000,000 in taxable income and showed on their returns a tax liability of $1,170,000,000 at a rate of 13 per cent. Through data published by the Treasury in December, 1927, it is demonstrated that the total taxable income shown by corporations for 1926 taxable year was increased over 1925 by at least $200,000,000, or to $9,540,000,000. On this figure, therefore, at the rate of 13½ per cent, the total corporate tax due, according to the 1926 returns, would seem to be at least $1,242,000,000. It has now become evident that the tax liability shown by corporations upon their returns for 1927 will not vary substantially from the tax liability for 1926.

From these amounts due, however, the official estimates are that only $1,120,000,000 was collected in 1927 fiscal year, that $1,120,000,000 will be collected in the 1928 fiscal year, and that $1,120,000,000 will be collected in 1929 fiscal year. In other words, regardless of the nature of the income tax and the undoubted growth in the volume of business, a "fixed" estimate is used for the receipts from a source yielding a good third of the total revenue receipts of the Government. It would seem reasonable to assume that, granted that business conditions in 1928 calendar year remain in general at a parity with the business conditions of 1927, receipts in 1929 fiscal year from current corporation tax at a rate of 13½ per cent would exceed the official estimate of $1,120,000,000 by at least $100,000,000.

It has been pointed out that these figures do not show actual collections made but only taxes due. If this criticism is accepted, the Treasury's estimated basis of the loss of $90,000,000 figured upon the same data for the reduction of the rate of corporate income tax by 1 point—that is, from, say, 13½ per cent to 12½ per cent—is too high.

BACK TAXES

There is no public record over a period of years of the actual collections made from corporations within each fiscal year of the taxes shown upon the returns as filed, or any public record of the part of the tax shown upon the returns on which there was delinquency with payment in subsequent years, or any public record of the amounts collected from corporations through assessment of taxes additional to those shown upon the returns.

A very large total is involved in so-called "back taxes" which fall into the following categories:

First. Uncontested claims which are merely delinquent in payment.

Second. Claims for additional taxes pending in the Internal Revenue Bureau which may be settled there.

Third. Claims for additional taxes which have been sent from the Internal Revenue Bureau to the Board of Tax Appeals on the appeal of the taxpayer.

Fourth. Unpaid claims for additional taxes involved in cases before the courts.

The first must naturally be the amount between the total tax liability admitted on income returns filed by taxpayers and the receipts from taxpayers at the close of the fiscal year.

Upon the second there is no public record of the total amount. One large accounting firm advises that Government claims of this character against their clients now pending in the Internal Revenue Bureau total $100,000,000, and it is, therefore, apparent that the aggregate of all such claims in that bureau must amount to a very large sum, at least several hundred million dollars.

Upon the third the claims before the Board of Tax Appeals now amount to $685,000,000—the greatest total in the history of the board—an increase of $80,000,000 since October, 1927.

The cases under the fourth category, while involving considerable amounts in additional taxes, are particularly important in that the decisions of the courts will be precedents which may determine the outcome of the Government's claims under the second and the third.

The records show that collections from "back taxes" were—

In 1926	$285,000,000
In 1927	331,000,000

The official estimate of last November of revenue from this source of $180,000,000 which has recently been increased by $40,000,000 to $220,000,000 for the fiscal year 1929, is lower by $111,000,000 than the $331,000,000 of 1927, above, which to the chamber does not seem reasonable.

The official statements would seem to mean that in the $220,000,000 now estimated as receipts from "back" taxes in 1929 fiscal year there are $100,000,000 of these delinquent "current" taxes.

In other words, it would seem that in the official estimate there are only $120,000,000 of receipts from claims for additional taxes for all preceding years. Without stopping to cite official testimony as to the amounts of additional taxes assessed and collected for a period within the last 12 months, it seems sufficient to point out that if only $120,000,000 in additional taxes are collected in the fiscal year of 1929 these collections will not be sufficient to offset tax refunds, which are officially estimated to amount to $138,000,000. It is only reasonable to assume that the Government is receiving from its additional tax claims an amount in excess of the refunds made.

OFFICIAL ESTIMATES

In December, 1927, the official estimate of the surplus for 1929 fiscal year was $252,000,000. On April 3, 1928, this estimate was so changed as, upon a comparable basis, to be $297,000,000.

This revision has taken place three months in advance of the opening of the fiscal year of 1929. At the time of the opening of the fiscal year of 1928, now current, the official estimate was that the surplus at the end would be approximately $200,000,000. In December, 1927, when the year was almost half run, the estimate was increased to $454,000,000.

Table A (appended) shows that without exception for each of the past five years the official estimates of receipts have been underestimates by wide margins and that the estimates of expenditures have been overestimates.

It shows, too, that the actual surpluses have exceeded estimates made only six months before the close of each fiscal year in amounts ranging from $100,000,000 to nearly $600,000,000—in the last year, $252,000,000.

RECENT OFFICIAL RECOMMENDATIONS AS TO TOTAL TAX CUTS

In connection with each of the past three revisions of the revenue act there have been official recommendations as to the total amount of tax cut that could not be exceeded.

The following shows that each of these recommendations was greatly under the actual tax cuts made by Congress and, still, large surpluses resulted:

	Cut recommended by the Treasury	Cut passed by Congress [1]	Surplus current year	Surplus year following
Revenue act, 1926	$300,000,000	$422,000,000	$377,000,000	$635,000,000
Revenue act, 1924	323,000,000	519,000,000	505,000,000	250,000,000
Revenue act, 1921	[2] 372,000,000	663,000,000	313,000,000 (1922)	309,000,000 (1923)

[1] The amounts of these reductions are variously computed. The figures in this column are estimates appearing in the Budget message of December, 1927.
[2] The first recommendation of the Treasury was that taxes should be increased, and not decreased.

EFFECT OF CHAMBER'S PROGRAM ON 1928 (FISCAL YEAR)

The following table shows the effect of the national chamber's program for tax reduction in the fiscal year 1928:

Official estimate, surplus as of June 30, 1928	$401,000,000
War excise and estate tax repeal as of July 1, 1928	No effect.
Corporation tax rate reduced to 10 per cent on 1927 incomes would cut receipts of present fiscal year by not more than	150,000,000
Treasury surplus June 30, 1928, after cut of 10 per cent	251,000,000

[NOTE.—It is discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury by law to carry such surplus to general fund for ordinary expenditures in next fiscal year or for debt retirement.]

EFFECT OF CHAMBER'S PROGRAM ON 1929 (FISCAL YEAR)

As has been shown, the national chamber's committee believes that the official estimates of receipts for the fiscal year 1929 are still too low by more than $100,000,000. Moreover, the chamber's committee has pointed out that there will be available approximately $400,000,000 for current expenses should an actual need arise. Approximately $160,000,000 of this is in interest received from foreign governments which can be used for current expenses of the Government instead of being used, as heretofore, for debt retirement. Added to this would be a sum up to $250,000,000 from the surplus of June 30, 1928, carried into the new year.

Even though the official estimates are taken to be correct, the national chamber's program is well within the principles of sound finance, as is shown below:

Amount which can be carried forward from surplus of 1928	$251,000,000
Official estimate of 1929 surplus (with present tax rates) $297,000,000, less provision for new and unbudgeted expenditures of $85,000,000	212,000,000
Receipts from foreign-loan interest	160,000,000
	623,000,000
Less chamber's program of elimination and cut	394,000,000
Surplus, year end	229,000,000

From the above it is apparent that it would be unnecessary to devote the $160,000,000 of interest payments from foreign governments to current expenditures, but the amount would be available for debt retirement and still leave a surplus of $69,000,000.

BUDGETARY PROCEDURE

Since its first referendum in 1912, and without abatement after the congressional legislation of 1921 establishing the Bureau of the Budget, the chamber has been an outstanding advocate of proper budgetary procedure in the fiscal operations of the Government.

The chamber has always contended that the revenue side of the Budget of the National Government should each year properly provide for the expenditure side.

In support of budgetary procedure the chamber has always contemplated the desirability of one centralized control over estimates both of receipts and expenditures in order adequately to present to the Congress and the country a properly balanced Budget of income and expenditures instead of, as at present, having the expenditure estimates presented by one agency of the Government and the income estimates by another.

The chamber has been a consistent advocate of economy in government and gives due recognition to the record of Congress during the last six years in keeping appropriations within the figures recommended by the President in his Budget messages.

The chamber has never hesitated to advocate and wholeheartedly support reasonable measures of taxation which will produce revenue sufficient to discharge all of the proper obligations of the Government arising out of legitimate governmental activities, whether special or recurring.

The national chamber recognizes that it is the province of Congress to fix the rates of taxes and to set the amount to be raised by taxation, as well as to fix the amount of debt reduction.

We place before you the facts as we find and see them, the well-considered opinion of our members, representing every section of the country and every type of business and industry, in a sincere desire to help you in the consideration of an intricate question which affects the economic welfare of the Nation.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT AT REQUEST OF SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE

(By the Chamber of Commerce of the United States)

In a public statement issued under date of January 3, 1928, copies of which were sent to members of the Senate Finance Committee, it is observed that to the $252,000,000 of surplus then officially estimated for June 30, 1929, there should be added an amount on account of the conservatism of that estimate. It was suggested that the corporation income tax would yield about $135,000,000 more than the Treasury estimated and that back taxes would yield about $50,000,000 more than the Treasury estimated. These two items added to the surplus of $252,000,000, the official estimate, made a total of $437,000,000.

The Treasury has not yet made any specific allowance for increased yield in the corporation income tax, but it has added $5,000,000 from current income tax of both kinds and $40,000,000 to its estimate of yield from back taxes, offsetting these amounts by $85,000,000 on the expenditure side, although that total sum has not yet been voted by Congress. By this calculation it now reduces the surplus earlier estimated at $252,000,000 to $212,000,000 for June 30, 1929.

In support of the proposition that the official estimate of the 1929 surplus is too low, we desire to refer also to the assertion that, since the March collections from income tax are now known, the collections for the remainder of the calendar year, including the first two quarters of 1929 fiscal year, are known. Collections for the March quarter in recent years have varied from 32.2 per cent of the total for the four quarters of the calendar year to 26.5 per cent. Last year the percentage was 27.6 per cent. Any calculation based upon the collections in the March quarter of 1928, therefore, may prove to be wide of the mark by an amount running into the hundreds of millions.

Apparently some confusion has arisen from the circumstance that the chamber has said and believes that the Treasury estimate for June 30, 1929, of a surplus of $212,000,000 is still too low, and repeats that statement in to-day's presentation. It has to-day made the further explanation that, wholly disregarding any possible increase in yield over the Treasury estimate of surplus, the whole chamber program of tax reductions and repeals could be allowed.

This is clear by reason of the discretionary power resting with the Secretary of the Treasury to carry over, say, $251,000,000 from the surplus of the current fiscal year (now estimated at $401,000,000). This $251,000,000 added to the $212,000,000 estimate of 1929 gives a total of $463,000,000, while in that year, without allowing for any increase for growing taxable income of the country, the chamber's program would not reduce public revenues by more than $394,000,000. The further point is made that if need be the power rests with the Treasury to devote up to $160,000,000 of foreign interest payments as an offset against the interest which our Government is paying to the American holders of Government securities, thereby reducing the charge on current taxes by that amount.

There has been no change in the argument, but simply two different presentations.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Mississippi for his eloquence as a spokesman for the White House. I congratulate him.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the first time I have been accused of occupying that position.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HALE. Is morning business closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is not closed.

Mr. HALE. Then, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11723) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the La Fayette Extension Road, commencing at Lee & Gordon's mill, near Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and extending to La Fayette, Ga., constituting an approach road to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5898) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps to accept such decorations, orders, and medals as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr.

BRITTEN, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. VINSON of Georgia were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2900) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD, Mr. ELLIOTT, and Mr. UNDERWOOD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 12286, Order of Business 818, the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12286) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine, in charge of the bill, if his understanding is that the total expense of the Nicaraguan expedition from May 4 of last year until April 16, over and above what the expenditures would have been had that expedition not been made, is $1,608,987.03?

Mr. HALE. Substantially; yes.

Mr. BLAINE. Another inquiry: I notice that the report by the Secretary of the Navy does not include damage that has been done to property belonging to the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. HALE. I assume that no damages have been assessed. I do not know whether there would be any liability on our part for that or not.

Mr. BLAINE. Has the Senator any information as to the amount of damage that has been inflicted upon property belonging to the Government of Nicaragua by our war vessels and our war operations in Nicaragua?

Mr. HALE. I have not, Mr. President; but I assume that the report of the Secretary of the Navy covers the information they have on hand. If not, possibly the Senator could get further information from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I have no knowledge of the matter myself.

Mr. BLAINE. But the report does not include any statement as to the damages to property belonging to the Government of Nicaragua caused by the Government of the United States through its operations?

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether there has been any such damage.

Mr. BLAINE. For the information of the Senator, though he no doubt knows it, I will state that the Senate took action only a few days ago appropriating a little over $19,000 as one item alone, to repair a dock or wharf that belonged to the Government of Nicaragua, which was damaged by a war vessel ramming that dock. My attention was called to that; and I am referring to damage of that kind, and damage of a similar character.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know of any damage of a similar character that occurred? I suppose that might have happened in time of peace. I understand that one of our vessels ran into a dock belonging to the Nicaraguan Government and did a certain amount of damage. If there are any other similar cases, I presume they will be called to our attention. The resolution did not ask for that, and I have no knowledge myself of any such matters.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has asked me if I have any information along that line. I might suggest to him that I am not a close confidant of the Secretary of the Navy. It is very improbable that he would give me any information. I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, nor am I a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, so I have no means of knowing.

Mr. HALE. No such matter has been brought to my attention, and I doubt if it has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BLAINE. I am attempting to ascertain just what damage we have done in connection with the operations in Nicaragua.

Mr. HALE. I think the statement made by the Secretary of the Navy is fairly complete.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Has the Senator examined the last paragraph on page 5? Does that give the Senator the information he desires?

Mr. BLAINE. That is not the information I desire. That appears to be damage that has been done to Nicaraguan citizens, not to property of the Government of Nicaragua. We may be called upon to pay for damage done to the citizens of the Republic of Nicaragua. I do not know how much that would be. I do not know how much damage has been done to property belonging to the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator suggest that the naval appropriation bill for the coming year be held up until we can find out these things? I do not think it is a matter of very great importance.

Mr. BLAINE. No; I have not made any such suggestion.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not. I hope he will help me in expediting the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to call up the amendment that I proposed the other day. I have made a slight modification in it, and will send the amendment to the clerk's desk as soon as I make the insertion. I ask that the modified amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend by inserting a new paragraph after line 17, on page 53, as follows:

Provided, That after December 25, 1928, none of the appropriations made in this act shall be used to pay any expenses incurred in connection with acts of hostility against a friendly foreign nation, or any belligerent intervention in the affairs of a foreign nation, or any intervention in the domestic affairs of any foreign nation, unless war has been declared by Congress or unless a state of war actually exists under recognized principles of international law.

The words "acts of hostility" and the words "belligerent intervention" shall include within their meaning the employment of coercion or force in the collection of any pecuniary claim, or any claim of right to any grant or concession for or on behalf of any private citizen, copartnership, or corporation of the United States, against the government of a foreign nation, either upon the initiation of the Government of the United States or upon the invitation of any foreign government existing de jure or de facto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, as modified.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator is going to speak on that amendment. I certainly can not accept it for the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. I expect to debate the proposition.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment? This seems to be a matter of very great significance from every point of view, and I am sure that when it was read the first time its contents were grasped by very few Members of the Senate. Therefore I request that the amendment be read again, so that we can all hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk restated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the importance of this amendment will readily occur to those who have given thought to this subject when we study the report made by the Secretary of the Navy in connection with this Government's hostile expedition to the Republic of Nicaragua.

The expenditures, as reported by the Secretary, over and above the normal expenses of the naval forces at the home stations, as set forth in that report, are $1,608,987.03.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator's amendment provide that the President can act upon the authority of Congress first had and obtained? I am not sure that I caught it accurately. I do not know whether that was made an exception. Ought not that to be an exception in the Senator's amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator evidently has not caught the purport of the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not suppose I have. I heard it read, and I just glanced at it.

Mr. BLAINE. The amendment proposes a limitation or a restriction upon the use of the money appropriated under the power of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Of course, if Congress grants him power, then he may lawfully exercise it.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understood the Senator's amendment, it provides that this power shall not be exercised unless there is a declaration of war.

Mr. BLAINE. By Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can easily conceive a state of circumstances by which the Congress might want the President to take certain steps in a given case, and I was wondering whether there ought not to be an exception of that kind in the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. No exception is necessary, because Congress would have the power to do that, notwithstanding the amendment, whenever the proper emergency arose.

The amount of money involved in this hostile expedition, in comparison with the total expenditures for the Army and Navy, is indeed small, but this expedition—I believe an unlawful expedition—has cost the lives of 21 American boys. Forty-five American young men have suffered casualties in addition to the 21 death casualties.

Of the Nicaraguan guard, eight have been killed or have died as the result of wounds. Four of them have suffered casualties other than death. Of the Nicaraguan people, 202, according to the Secretary's report, have lost their lives.

It is admitted that this report does not account for all the loss of life in Nicaragua. We may never be able to determine the total loss of life. The report does not state how many women and children have been killed, and at least the children, the babes in arms, could not have been engaged in any hostile activity. How many of the aged Nicaraguans have felt the force of the hostile army in their country, their home, we do not know.

Mr. President, the blood of these boys, of these men, these women and children, is upon the hands of those who have directed the hostile and war activities against the Republic of Nicaragua, acts contrary to all precedent in the history of this Republic, contrary to the law and the Constitution of this Republic, contrary to the rules and customs that prevail among nations of the world.

I know the defense will be made for this unholy and unwarranted warfare that America is fulfilling its solemn obligation entered into by a representative of this Government and the contending forces of Nicaragua. I anticipate that defense. That defense has no justification in fact or in law or in good morals and good conscience.

On May 4, 1927, a communication was addressed to General Moncado by Henry L. Stimson, the personal representative of the President of the United States. I shall read that communication. It is as follows:

DEAR GENERAL MONCADO: Confirming our conversation of this morning—

We have little information as to what that conversation was, but whatever it was, he continues:

I have the honor to inform you that I am authorized to declare—

Not to request, but to declare—that the President of the United States has determined to accede to the request of the Government of Nicaragua to supervise the election of 1928; that the permanency in power of President Diaz during the rest of his administration is considered indispensable for this plan, and will be insisted on; that the general disarmament of the country is also looked on as necessary for the successful carrying out of this election, and that the forces of the United States will be authorized to take charge of the arms of those who shall give them up, including those of the government, and to disarm by force those who refuse to comply.

With all respects,

(Signed) HENRY L. STIMSON.

That constitutes the basis of the alleged sacred promise, a promise obtained, an agreement, so far as it is an agreement, not entered into by the free will of the people of Nicaragua, but obtained by force, by intimidation, by coercion, and, it is alleged, by bribery.

The armed forces were there. They had been there for some time. The people of Nicaragua were looking into the muzzles of the guns upon the war vessels. A small, weak, defenseless people, torn to pieces by internal strife, had no power to resist that exhibition of force. There was no course left for them than that demanded by the representative of the President. An invitation under those circumstances, do you call it? If the gunman were to enter your home, and, in the presence of your family and your friends, you were looking into the muzzle of his automatic, when he suggested an invitation to your home, quite readily indeed would the invitation be extended, and he would enjoy the friendliness of the evening, he would impose himself upon you, yes; by invitation, at the muzzle of a gun, your consent having been obtained by the same token. So with the people of Nicaragua and the Government of Nicaragua. A sacred agreement? No! An unholy agreement.

The answer may also be made that this is not the first time that force has been used against weaker and smaller people by the temporary rulers of America. If that is a substantial defense, then I am in error. But, Mr. President, it is demonstrable that never in the history of America, ever since and from the promulgation of our Federal Constitution, on the 17th day of September, 1787, until November 3, 1903, was there ever a single precedent to support any administration in its attack upon the people of the Republics to our south.

I confess that since November, 1903, there have been acts on the part of those who have had the temporary administration of the government, by which they have undertaken, in the countries to the south of us, the same coercive measures that prevail in Nicaragua.

I shall not review in detail the history of this Government in relation to the Republics to the south since 1903. It may be claimed by those who apologize for the acts of this administration in its conduct toward weaker and smaller peoples and nations that there were precedents prior to 1903. Debates in this Chamber in the past have indicated that such defense may be made. But I shall differentiate and I shall undertake to distinguish between those incidents to which reference has been made in former debates, and the acts of hostility in which this administration is presently engaged.

I know there are those who will say that the sending by President Tyler of an expedition to Texas may constitute a precedent, but the facts with respect to the annexation of Texas do not justify any assertion that the act of President Tyler is a justification for the present exhibition of force toward these smaller nations. It must be remembered that when Texas came into the Union, Texas was a republic which had obtained her liberty and her independence. The President of that Republic, President Houston, had entered into a treaty with the Government of the United States for the annexation of Texas to the United States as one of the members of this Union, an act which was freely taken by the people of Texas through their representatives and according to the sentiment of the people of Texas. It had been their hope, and that hope grew into a desire, to join the Union of States. So when that patriot, their President, entered into the treaty with the Government of the United States for the annexation of Texas it was the free, voluntary act of the Republic of Texas and her people. There had been no coercion; there had been no force used and no intimidation.

That treaty was pending. It had not been ratified by the Senate. The President of the Republic of Texas, almost as a condition of that treaty, appealed to the President of the United States to send troops to Texas to protect Texas against invasion by Mexico.

That act was a protective measure in the interest of the Republic which was seeking admission to our Union, and was justified by President Tyler on the ground that the United States had an interest in the preservation of peace and in the security of Texas until the Senate had the opportunity to pass upon the treaty entered into through the free and voluntary acts of the people and the Republic of Texas.

There are those who may contend that when Perry went to Japan in the fifties his act constituted a precedent for the present acts of our Government in Nicaragua. Of course, there was a pretense made even with respect to the expedition of Perry to Japan, but the pretense did not constitute the justification for Commodore Perry's expedition. Commodore Perry carried a friendly message from the President of the United States, and he sought only to deliver that message to the ruler of Japan. However, Japan and her Government were little known to western civilization; even the knowledge of her Emperor was so obscure and uncertain that Perry himself did not know that he was dealing with the imperial representative of Japan instead of the Emperor of Japan. But there was no use of force, no intimidation.

That occurrence in the history of the United States, so far as the facts are concerned, was a voyage of peace carrying a friendly message from the President of the United States, demanding nothing, asking for nothing except the opportunity to enter into friendly diplomatic relations with the Government of Japan. Perry did not go to Japan to protect any loans that had been made by J. P. Morgan & Co., or Kuhn, Loeb & Co., or any other international money lender. Perry did not go there to protect or allegedly to protect property which Americans were exploiting in Japan. There were no Americans in Japan. America had no interests in Japan, financial or commercial.

I know there will be those who will attempt to justify the acts of the administration in the present instance by recalling President Grant's attempt to annex San Domingo. His attempt was unsuccessful. He undertook to usurp the war-making power in the employment of force abroad. He undertook to assert upon his authority the right to send a hostile fleet to a country with which we were not at war. After President Grant had been unsuccessful in his attempts to coerce Haiti in the Domingoan-Haitian controversy, he withdrew his orders for the use of the armed forces of the United States. His withdrawal was under his own orders before any actual force had been employed. He made no further attempt to usurp the power or assume the power under the Constitution which he did not enjoy without an act of Congress. He therefore recognized the constitutional limitations of the President and the constitutional powers of the Congress by his act in withdrawing the armed forces of America, and at a later day expressly in a message to Congress recognized that it was necessary for him to seek and secure an act of Congress before employing force or coercion.

In the debate upon Grant's attempt to usurp the power to make war were engaged two of the great giants of American history—Charles Sumner and Carl Schurz. Sumner, coming from New England in those days when he represented the spirit of New England's patriotism and devotion to our Constitution, joined his great intellect with that of that distinguished German-American who belonged to that group of Germans who came to America in 1848 and here gave their intellect and their blood to the perpetuation of a free government. Those two distinguished Members of this body beat back—yes, they beat back the imperialistic tendency of President Grant, than whom there was none other more efficient upon the field of battle, but who, surrounded as he was, yielded to the pleas and petitions of those who wanted to embark this Government upon the highway of imperialism.

As I recall the history of that incident there was only one voice in this body to express a defense of the acts of the President. It was the voice of Senator Harlan, from Iowa, and in his defense of the attitude and attempt of the President and his administration he undertook to and did refer to the incidents of Perry in Japan and President Tyler in Mexico; but his defense was but a feeble defense, and he made no attempt to harmonize the act of President Grant and his administration with the two incidents to which I have referred. This body, in the several acts passed during those days, sustained the power of Congress and denied the right of a President to make war upon a friendly nation without an act of Congress declaring war.

There was one other incident in the history of our country which the apologists of this philosophy of force and coercion sometimes cite in support of their contention, and I want to distinguish that case from the situation with respect to Nicaragua. I refer to the Boxer rebellion. There was a joint demonstration on the part of the several nations, including America. America sent some 5,000 troops to China; but remember, sirs, that the excuse then used and the reason for the demonstration of force in the sending of an army to China was based upon the proposition that there had been an assault made upon the several governments by the Government of China or those acting in harmony with or with the understanding of that Government, an assault against the embassies of nations duly represented at the Court of China. So in that instance the excuse for the force and coercion then employed was entirely different from the excuse made in the case of Nicaragua. What has been done in China since I shall not discuss at this time.

I can not, however, in this connection remain silent when we find our Government exercising in China a sovereignty of extraterritorial jurisdiction, indefensible and entirely incompatible with the rights of nations and the equality of nations.

Mr. President, the historical incidents to which I have referred neither in fact nor in law constitute a precedent justifying the present policy of imperialism and dollar diplomacy exercised by this Government.

I now come to the period when there was a change in our policy. For 116 years, ever since the foundation of this Republic, down to November, 1903, the policy of this Government was that of noninterference. There was no dollar diplomacy; there was no governmental guaranteeing of private loans abroad. America had not been used as the international sheriff to collect the interest upon bonds and other obligations owing to private parties by foreign governments. For 116 years this Government had observed the policy that secured to us peace and promoted peace on the Western Hemisphere. In 1903 the policy was changed.

There was a revolution in the Republic of Colombia. There is no doubt that that revolution was promoted from Washington, if not, in fact, planned in Washington. It is true the revolution was a coup d'état. That revolution was organized overnight. There had been a treaty or a protocol entered into, as I understand, between the Republic of Colombia and the United States. When the Colombian Congress adjourned without its Senate ratifying the treaty proposed between Colombia and the United States, President Roosevelt, by an Executive order, sent four American warships to the Isthmus of Panama. There was disappointment both upon the part of the revolutionists and the administration at Washington. The American Government had sent four war vessels to the Isthmus, but the Government became impatient at the revolutionists; they were not acting quite as quickly as had been agreed; and the revolutionists became rather doubtful about the compact into which they had entered. The administration at Washington complained that the revolutionists did not take advantage as promptly as they should of the situation that grew out of the presence of the war vessels. So Washington dispatched a message to the American consul, and we will observe with what efficient speed that revolution was conducted.

I assume that Mr. Latané, professor of American history and lecturer on international law in the Johns Hopkins University, can be cited as authority in this respect. He outlines the swiftness of this revolution.

"At 3.40 p. m. on November 3, 1903," he says, "the following dispatch was sent to the American consuls at Panama and Colon":

> Uprising on Isthmus reported. Keep department promptly and fully informed. Loomis, Acting.

At 8.15 the same evening a reply was received from the consul at Panama, as follows:

> No uprising yet. Reported will be in the night. Situation is critical.

At 9 p. m. the very same night a second dispatch was received from the same source:

> Uprising occurred to-night, six—

I presume that means 6 o'clock—

> No bloodshed. Army and navy officials taken prisoners. Government will be organized to-night.

And it was.

That was a revolution, however, without bloodshed. The Panama Canal, the construction of which was brought about by a treaty between America and the Republic of Panama, organized as a result of this overnight revolution, was so popular with the American people that the means of obtaining that canal were given slight consideration; and President Roosevelt later, in effect, repudiated that method of diplomatic concourse.

I reviewed that history to some extent in the debate on a proposal for a foreign policy, and quoted President Roosevelt. The history of that time clearly indicates that, in the opinion of the administration, the end justified the use of any means; but in later years there was regret and America, in acknowledgment of that wrong and in the satisfaction of that wrong, paid the Republic of Colombia $25,000,000. That, however, was the beginning of the present policy of aggression; and that incident has been used to support the policy of imperialism and the policy of "dollar diplomacy" which the present administration has adopted and observes.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to review the unjustifiable acts, the coercion, and the warfare in which our rulers have engaged without the consent of Congress. The history is recent. It is familiar to all. The situation in Nicaragua is only one of the incidents in the last quarter of a century in pursuit of imperialism.

The amendment which I have proposed, Mr. President, has no special reference to Nicaragua. It has no special reference to Haiti. It has no special reference to Cuba or to China. It has no special reference to any country in which the armed forces of America are engaged to-day. It has reference to all of them; for neither in fact nor in law nor in the Constitution is there justification for the occupancy of territory abroad by the armed forces of America.

These coercive measures have been justified on the ground that the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, is independent of Congress. I want to examine that proposition. I want to take an inventory, an assessment, of the powers of the President as Commander in Chief and the powers of Congress, and the limitations on both.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I ask the Senator if he does not think his amendment ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. BLAINE. It has nothing to do with the question which I think the Senator has in mind. This amendment is a limitation upon the expenditure of money appropriated by this bill. If it had any other purpose, it might not be germane to the bill; but this amendment limits only the uses to which the money may be put.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am thoroughly in accord with the general principle enunciated by the Senator; but it seems to me that an amendment of the character proposed by the Senator ought to be subjected to the scrutiny of that branch of the Senate which has been giving special study to problems connected with our foreign affairs.

Mr. BLAINE. I will advise the Senator that early in the session I introduced a resolution that embraces that problem which is before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not want the Senator to misunderstand my inquiry.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am in very hearty accord with the general principle which the Senator is seeking to have made a policy of our Government; but I can conceive of possible circumstances where it might be embarrassing to our Government to have a strict limitation such as is proposed by this amendment in the future, apart from the present position of our country in South and Central American States.

Mr. BLAINE. If I may not be interrupted, I think it is demonstrable that the use of money appropriated by this bill for the purposes excluded by the amendment is a diversion of public funds, and against the law and the Constitution.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to see—and I think the Senator agrees with me—some definite policy fixed. I think it would be a fine contribution to our legislative policy if a committee like the Committee on Foreign Relations should definitely outline a policy which would be carried out in the future, and the prevention of the use of the armed forces of this country insisted upon.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit me to proceed, I think I will develop that whole situation before I get through. I appreciate the Senator's position.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In other words, it seems to me that the subject is such an immense one that we ought to give a good deal of study to it, and now, once for all, in view of the protests in this country against our present policy in Central American States, define a course for the future, and put limitations upon just what the executive departments can do, and how far the Executive can go in pursuing a form of invasion or war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the parliamentary situation in which the Senator is now placed. If the course suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts were followed, there would be no effect, of course, on the money appropriated by the pending naval appropriation bill. We would not accomplish anything. It seems to me that we ought to have a well-defined policy. As I look at it, we have no authority of law now for doing the things being done in Nicaragua. I do not believe anybody can cite any provision of law that gives the President the authority to do what he is doing. But if this amendment were referred to the committee, before the committee could possibly act on it and legislation be had, this appropriation bill would be passed, and there would be a continuation of the policy. This amendment has application only to the money appropriated in this bill. It does not fully cover the situation; I think that is conceded. But it seems to me as a parliamentary proposition it is the only thing we can do if we want to do anything.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I appreciate what the Senator has said, but it seems to me that the discussion which the Senator has opened up has drawn our attention to the necessity for some general legislation, or a general policy, upon the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to ask why the date in the amendment is fixed as December, 1928.

Mr. BLAINE. December 25, 1928.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is that because it is Christmas Day?

Mr. BLAINE. Not necessarily, but that is a mighty good date on which to be out of Nicaragua. I think the Christian spirit would run higher throughout the world, and be exalted, if we could get the boys out of Nicaragua by Christmas time. It is not a sentimental question with me; it is a practical question. I understand that the election is to be held in Nicaragua on or about October 24 or 25.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is what I supposed the Senator had in mind; that is, waiting until after the election in Nicaragua.

Mr. BLAINE. It is claimed that if we were to withdraw now, there would be an unsatisfactory condition in Nicaragua among the contending factions when the election is held. I have contended that we blundered into Nicaragua, and I have no doubt but that we will have to blunder out, and I am trying to point a way by which this administration can save its face and prevent any further blunders. I think a period of 60 days after the election is held ought to give ample time in which to get out, and that brings it on or about December 25, Christmas time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I assumed that was the Senator's reason.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If the Senator keeps the marines there for another 60 days, that would be time to have another election.

Mr. BLAINE. After October?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. After the first one.

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the elections came every four years.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They come whenever we decide to conduct them.

Mr. BLAINE. Not if this amendment to this bill is adopted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But the Senator proposes a very unstatesmanlike proposition.

Mr. BLAINE. In respect to what? I am just seeking information.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The idea that the Senator has proposed in his amendment is contrary to our history in the Caribbean, in Latin America, for the past 30 years. The Senator proposes that we attend to our own business, and I say that is a very unstatesmanlike proposition.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that this is not a gesture. I am willing to do something for my country, and if we can get those boys out of Nicaragua, and take this hand of coercion and oppression off of the people of Haiti, and keep our nose out of other people's business after Christmas time, then I shall feel that I have accomplished something in the interest of my country.

Mr. President, this is a practical question now. I am not responsible for our blundering into Nicaragua. I am not responsible for the troops now being in Nicaragua. I have stated, and I reassert, that it was a blunder to get into Nicaragua, and we may have to blunder out of there; but if this amendment can be written into the law by this Congress and we can escape this imperialistic policy, if we can shake it off by Christmas time and reestablish America as America was for 116 years, I am willing to offer my cooperation in the interest of the larger measure.

That may be called unstatesmanlike, but I am not keen about names. I am keen only about results. So I say I am willing to permit this Government to have up to Christmas time to end this imperialistic régime; and from that day and hour, if this were the law, there could be no warlike forces of the United States in another country under the terms of this proposed amendment. Perchance, should a President then attempt to usurp power, not only would he be subject to impeachment but he would be subject to prosecution under the criminal laws of the United States and subject to imprisonment. However, I assume, sirs, that the President would obey the law.

Mr. President, I want to define the power the President possesses as Commander in Chief. There is nothing mysterious about the power. There is nothing about the power that is not well understood. The fact that the President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy gives him no other power than the power derived from the Constitution and the laws enacted by Congress pursuant to the Constitution.

There are no implied powers in the President as Commander in Chief. There are no reserved powers of the President as Commander in Chief. Every power of the President as Commander in Chief is defined by the law and the Constitution, and the President is subject to the law and the Constitution.

The power of the President in war time has been defined in the case of Ex parte Milligan, United States Reports, volume 71, 4 Wallace. The proposition involved in this matter goes to the question of the exact dividing line between the powers of the Congress to declare war and to appropriate money and the power of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

Let me state, Mr. President, that there is no such thing as war power either in the President or in Congress. Whatever powers the President possesses or Congress possesses after war is declared are powers derived from the Constitution and the law, and there is no power coming to the President as a war power outside of the Constitution and the limitations fixed by the law.

On page 120 of this report the court said what I shall read. This is language which every President ought to read as his morning prayer and his evening benediction. Says the Justice of the Supreme Court writing the opinion:

> Time has proven the discernment of our ancestors; for even these provisions, expressed in such plain English words that it would seem the ingenuity of man could not evade them, are now, after the lapse of more than 70 years, sought to be avoided. Those great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of constitutional liberty would be imperiled unless established by irrepealable laws. The history of the world had taught them that what was done in the past might be attempted in the future. The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people equally in war and in peace.

(At this point Mr. BLAINE was interrupted by the expiration of the morning hour, when some discussion took place, which appears at the conclusion of his speech.)

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I repeat the words of the Chief Justice of our Supreme Court, as follows:

> The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances.

The court further said:

> The power to make the necessary laws is in Congress, the power to execute in the President. Both powers imply many subordinate and auxiliary powers. Each includes all authorities essential to its due exercise. But neither can the President in war more than in peace intrude upon the proper authority of Congress nor Congress upon the proper authority of the President. Both are servants of the people whose will is expressed in the fundamental law. Congress can not direct the conduct of campaigns nor can the President, or any commander under him, without the sanction of Congress, institute tribunals for the trial and punishment of offenses either of soldiers or civilians. * * * Where peace exists the laws of peace must prevail. What we do maintain is that when the Nation is involved in war, and some portions of the country are invaded, and all are exposed to invasion, it is within the power of Congress to determine in what States or districts such great and imminent public danger exists as justifies the authorization of military tribunals for the trial of crimes and offenses against the discipline or security of the Army or against the public safety.

I quote that as indicating that the President is limited by the acts of Congress and possesses no power as a war power.

The Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy is the Commander in Chief in war times and in peace times. He commands the militia under certain circumstances. What is his power as Commander in Chief? In war times the Commander in Chief may take physical, actual possession of the Navy. He may sail at the head of the Navy. He may navigate the ships. He may shoot the projectiles from the guns of the ships. He may do anything with the Navy personally in times of war against an enemy nation. But his acts must be within the limitations fixed by Congress and by the usage and customs observed amongst civilized nations. His power is limited by the international law which prevails during war. He may become the pilot of the air forces of the country in time of war and personally take possession thereof. He may become the actual, physical head of the infantry or the artillery. He may operate the trench mortars or fire the 1-pounders or direct and actually fire the machine guns or the great field artillery pieces.

He may do those things personally as Commander in Chief within the limitations fixed by Congress and within the limitations of international law. He may mount his steed, march at the head of the cavalry, and compel everybody else to bite his dust. He can do it personally as Commander in Chief within the limits of the laws fixed by Congress and the international law. He may supply the provisions and the ammunition and all the subsistence necessary for the Army and Navy within the limitations fixed by Congress and the restrictions of international law.

Those are his powers as Commander in Chief. But Congress may not appropriate a single dollar for the Navy, and so as Commander in Chief of the Navy the President then becomes Commander in Chief of painted ships upon a painted ocean. Congress may refuse to appropriate money for the operation of the Cavalry or the Infantry or the Artillery or the Air Unit or of any unit of the Army. The President is still the Commander in Chief, but if there is no money furnished by Congress with which to purchase the horse upon which the Commander in Chief rides in command of his Army, all that is left to him is his hobby horse.

There is nothing strange about the power of the Commander in Chief. What about it in peace times? It is identically the same power. There is no difference. One can not distinguish between the powers of the President in peace times and war times. They are identically the same within the restrictions and limitations fixed by Congress. In peace times he may ride at the head of the Army. He may order out the Artillery, the Infantry, the tanks, the aircraft, and ride up and down the United States within the limitations fixed by Congress and the Constitution and international law. He can not quarter soldiers within the homes of our citizens either in war time or in peace time. So there is no difference between the power of the President as Commander in Chief in war time and peace time. In war time the Congress gives him added power because of the necessities of the emergency; but whatever the power may be that is extended to the President, it comes through the act of Congress within and under the Constitution and does not adhere to the office of Commander in Chief by implication or by inference, but only by express provisions of law.

In peace time, for instance, when Congress appropriates money to build barracks for the marines at Quantico, Va., the President can not take that money and build barracks for the marines at Corinto, in Nicaragua. He can not take money that is appropriated for military reservations and buy migratory game bird sanctuaries. The President, as Commander in Chief, has no more right to divert public funds dedicated for specific purposes by acts of Congress in relation to the Army and the Navy than he has to divert public funds devoted to any other purpose. To divert that money contrary to the act of Congress is an offense against the law, whether he does it as President or as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. So the President as Commander in Chief has no general powers, no unrestrained powers, no unrestricted powers. Every power possessed by the President is an express power derived from the Constitution and the laws, and in war times within the limitations fixed by international law.

What are the powers of Congress in this respect? Under Article I, section 8, of the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense.

Congress has the power to declare war; Congress, by express declaration, has the power to make rules concerning captures on land and water. Congress has power under that section—I am now quoting the Constitution—

> To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

Now, mark this—and I am again quoting from the Constitution—

> The Congress shall have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

The President can not make such rules and regulations as Commander in Chief until Congress shall have acted. Then he initiates them within the limitations fixed by Congress, whether in peace time or war time.

Further, the Constitution gives to Congress the power—

> To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

These are the powers of Congress, not of the Commander in Chief. The Commander in Chief is only the agent of Congress under the Constitution.

Now let us examine briefly the restriction upon Congress. The restriction upon Congress is a restriction upon rulers as well and upon all citizens, as defined in the case of ex parte Milligan, to which I have referred. Under Article I, section 9, of the Constitution, it is provided—I am again quoting—

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Not a single dollar can lawfully be taken out of the Treasury of the United States except in compliance with law enacted by Congress.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] said yesterday on the floor of the Senate that the time had come when there should be a "showdown" on the Nicaraguan question. I challenge him now and here to submit a legal justification for the expedition to Nicaragua. No money has been provided by statute, as I understand, to supervise elections in Nicaragua. The appropriations which have been made are for specific purposes, and those purposes are defined.

But, Mr. President, administrations have chosen to exercise this power for the last 25 years; Presidents have chosen to exercise power, contrary to the precedents of 116 years of America's early history. However, even Presidents in the last 25 years have come to Congress for authority in respect to these matters.

I recall that in the so-called Tampico incident, when the question was whether Mexico should give a certain number of salutes—whether 5 or 19, I have forgotten—President Wilson came to Congress for authority to send a squadron down into the Gulf of Mexico to compel the Mexicans to give the proper salute.

When Villa with his band crossed into Arizona or New Mexico—I have forgotten which, but I think it was Arizona—in 1916, and, as I remember, about March 15 of that year President Wilson came to Congress. It was on the 17th day of March following when the Senate of the United States and, I believe, likewise the House unanimously passed a resolution permitting the President to send armed forces into the Republic of Mexico under certain conditions.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Did President Wilson come to Congress before sending marines to Santo Domingo in 1916, which expedition resulted in the loss of some two thousand or more lives, as I recall?

Mr. BLAINE. No, Mr. President; President Wilson did not come to Congress in the Santo Domingo or Haitian matter, and, I think, very much to the regret of his friends; I believe that is an incident which they would like to forget. I do not know why President Wilson engaged in that act, which was contrary to all his public declarations. I have never been able to analyze that which was in his mind when that force of coercion, intimidation, interference, and intervention was sent to Santo Domingo and Haiti.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator is aware that when the President acts he must act upon information furnished him by subordinates, by the State Department, by some other department, or by the Army or the Navy, and they in turn must rely upon information furnished them by subordinates. It was said we went into the Dominican Republic for the purpose of putting down bandits; at least that is what we were told we went there for. It is a strange coincidence that we did not hear anything about bandits in the Dominican Republic until sugar went from 3 or 4 cents a pound to 26 or 27 cents a pound, and sugar lands became very valuable in the Dominican Republic.

The people who owned those lands refused to sell them to the large sugar companies, and bandits went out at night and started to shoot up the countryside and burn the buildings of people who would not sell their lands. Then we were asked to go in for the purpose of protecting property against those bandits; and our forces hunted the bandits, but were not very successful in capturing them for a long time. I am reliably informed that in the archives of the Navy Department there is sworn testimony to show that a sergeant of marines one day reported to his colonel and said, "Colonel, here I have the chief bandit." The colonel reprimanded him and apologized to the prisoner and turned him loose, because he was the local manager of the National City Bank of New York. But the colonel was an honest man and stayed on the job long enough until he discovered that the sergeant had told the truth.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] said that we should study some of these questions and find out something about them. I commend his advice to the Senate. The Senate ought to know.

I accused the Senator from Wisconsin a short time ago of expounding a very unstatesmanlike doctrine. I find now that he is going back to the Constitution to find justification in law or in the Constitution for using the armed forces without the consent of Congress. It is a very old-fashioned thing to do. The idea is so old that most people think it is new.

The Senator from Wisconsin has often been accused of having new ideas. The idea that anyone should follow the Constitution or the law is so old-fashioned that most people think it is new.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Milligan case defines precisely the powers of the President and the powers of Congress in times of war. It is worth while to review the Prize cases. I shall not take the time to do so this afternoon; but the principle laid down by our Supreme Court in those cases is to the effect that the power of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy is no different than his power as President. It is wholly within the limitations fixed by law; but as Commander in Chief he may personally assume control of the operation of the Army and Navy, subject to the law and the Constitution, and in war subject also to international law.

Of course, both in war and in peace, the President selects his subordinates to carry out those powers, which he possesses under the Constitution and the law as Commander in Chief. Therefore if Congress refused to appropriate money for the Army and Navy, the Army and Navy would cease to exist. There would be no Army and Navy of which the President could be Commander in Chief, except, as I said, perchance, a painted navy upon a painted ocean. Congress may refuse to appropriate any money for the Army and Navy and thus strip the President of any power as Commander in Chief. Therefore, since this power to raise and support armies and to appropriate money therefor is given to Congress by the Constitution, it is exclusively within the jurisdiction of Congress. Congress may make that appropriation large or small. It may reduce the appropriation to a point where in practice there could be nothing but a paper navy or a paper army. Congress may fix by an appropriation act the limits within which the Commander in Chief must stay. Congress may appropriate money to raise and support an army to be used wholly within the territorial boundaries of the United States, and for no other purpose. It may limit the Navy to the inland waters of the United States. The limit of the extent to which armies and navies may be raised and supported is fixed by Congress.

When public funds are once in the Treasury of the United States they can be withdrawn only pursuant to an express appropriation by Congress, and the restriction operates upon all departments of the Government.

Justification for this statement rests upon the decision in the case of Knote v. United States (95 U. S. Repts.), beginning on page 149. I shall not stop to read the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Field.

In the Prize cases, reported in Second Black, page 668, and in Ex parte Milligan, Fourth Wallace, page 2, and in a long line of decisions this is what the court said:

> The power of the President as Commander in Chief must be exercised in accordance with the laws and usages of nations, and in the manner prescribed by Congress.

Further quoting:

> Otherwise, his orders will afford no protection to an officer acting under them. An instruction to an officer can not justify an act which, without it, would have been a trespass.

It is true he is authorized by law, by the Constitution, previous to the declaration of war by Congress, to meet insurrections or invasions by military force; but that is a constitutional power, derived from the Constitution, and in the name of the Commander in Chief.

There are many things the President can do as Commander in Chief in war times under the laws and usages of nations and under the limitations prescribed by Congress. I shall not go into that question. It is not relevant to my discussion.

The President has the power to repel invasion and insurrection under an act of Congress and within his power under the Constitution. The powers to which I have referred to a very large extent are discussed in the cases to which I have referred. This is not my declaration. I am not making a declaration growing out of my own mind or imagination. I have pointed to the source of power possessed by Congress and by the President.

Now, let us examine what text-writers have said upon this question of the power of the President.

In a general way Willoughby, on the Constitution, in volume 2, page 1207, section 713, gives the powers of the President in times of peace and in times of war. I mean he outlines in more or less detail the things the President may do:

> The constitutional Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States, is the President. Through or under his orders, therefore, all military operations in times of peace as well as of war are conducted.

Operations in the field and practice—

> He has within his control the disposition of troops, the direction of vessels of war, and the planning and execution of campaigns. With Congress, however, lies the authority to lay down the rules governing the organization and maintenance of the military forces, the determination of their number, the fixing of the manner in which they shall be armed and equipped, the establishment of forts, hospitals, arsenals, etc., and, of course, the voting of appropriations for all military purposes.

Large power, therefore, is in Congress; and the Commander in Chief merely directs the armies and navies in the field. He may do it in person, as I have said, but he chooses to do it through his subordinates—the only practical way, of course, by which it may be done.

Professor Corwin, professor of politics at Princeton University, after discussing the powers of the President and Commander in Chief, comes to this conclusion, as stated on page 156 of his work The President's Control of Foreign Relations:

I conclude that the presidential power under survey is somewhat analogous to the so-called right of self-preservation at international law. Theoretically the power is a defensive power and reserved for grave and sudden emergencies. Practically the limit to it is to be found in the powers of Congress and public opinion.

Of course, if the President and Congress have deadlocked on the proposition, the President may go to the country and obtain a Congress in accordance with his views, but that does not give him any additional power. He may acquire additional power if Congress responds to his demands.

Henry Campbell Black is recognized as one of the great constitutional lawyers and text-writers of undoubted reputation and intellect, and in his work Black on Constitutional Law, fourth edition, page 123, section 83, he says:

The constitutional power of the President to command the Army and Navy is distinct from the power of Congress to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. The President can not by military orders evade the legislative regulations, and Congress can not by rules and regulations impair the authority of the President to act as Commander in Chief.

The President has no power to declare war; that belongs exclusively to Congress. But without any declaration of war, or before such a declaration is made, he may recognize the actual existence of a state of war and employ the Army and Navy against the enemy.

That is, where all the facts relating to a state of war exist.

Congress must still "raise and support" the Army and "provide and maintain" the Navy, and it is true that the power of furnishing or withholding the necessary means and supplies may give it an indirect influence on the conduct of the war. But the supreme command belongs to the President alone. In theory, he plans all campaigns, establishes all blockades and sieges, directs all marches, fights all battles and engagements.

Those are the powers of a Commander in Chief of an Army and Navy, restricted in war time as he is restricted in peace time, a power that is within the Constitution, and when Congress acts it makes operative that power.

Mr. President, I desire briefly to call attention to the international law and custom of nations upon this question. I will quote very briefly.

Chancellor Kent is recognized in America as a great authority upon legal propositions, and he gives the rule with simplicity and clearness. Speaking of the equality of nations, he says:

Nations are equal in respect to each other, and entitled to claim equal consideration for their rights, whatever may be their relative dimensions or strength, or however greatly they may differ in government, religion, or manners. This perfect equality and entire independence of all distinct states is a fundamental principle of public law.

General Halleck, who has written upon international law, and who is as authoritative in logic as are Vattel and Sir William Scott, says:

All sovereign States, without respect to their relative power, are, in the eyes of international law, equal, being endowed with the same natural rights, bound by the same duties, and subject to the same obligations.

Washington, in speaking of belligerent intervention contrary to international law, said this on December 25, 1798, when he wrote to his compatriot, Lafayette. They had won the independence of America:

No government ought to interfere with the internal concerns of another, except for the security of what is due to themselves.

I again quote from General Halleck on this question of non-intervention:

Wars of intervention are to be justified or condemned accordingly as they are or are not undertaken strictly as the means of self-defense and self-protection against the aggrandizement of others, and without reference to treaty obligations; for, if wrong in themselves, the stipulations of a treaty can not make them right.

The invitation of one party to a civil war can afford no right of foreign interference as against the other party. The same reasoning holds good with respect to armed intervention, whether between belligerent states or between belligerent parties in the same state.

There is the Nicaraguan situation. There were belligerent parties within the Republic of Nicaragua, and the United States had no right under international law to intervene under any pretext.

Halleck said again:

Armed intervention consists in threatened or actual force employed or to be employed by one state in regulating or determining the conduct or affairs of another. Such an employment of force is virtually a war, and must be justified or condemned upon the same general principle as other wars.

Mr. President, by all the precedents set by the statesmanship of America prior to 1903, statesmanship which towered above the present narrow, intolerant statesmanship as mountains tower above ant hills, we were denied the right of intervention.

The amendment which I have proposed is supported by the history of the United States for 116 years. It is supported by the highest authority in our land, by the judges of our Supreme Court in their decisions in specific cases. It is supported by the text-writers of renown and responsibility, by the statesmanship of those who thought in terms of America, her peace, and her security.

Mr. President, I have failed to find a single case, I have failed to find a single line of legislation, that justifies the conduct of this administration in the affairs of Nicaragua.

In the face of this showing, I repeat that the blood of American boys is upon the hands of those who have, without lawful power, brought our Nation into what Sumner so aptly described as "a dance of blood."

During Mr. BLAINE'S speech—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1271, the migratory bird bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] if he has any understanding with the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BLAINE. I have. I suggested to him that I perhaps would not conclude before half past 2 or 3. However, the Senator from South Dakota is here and can speak for himself.

Mr. NORBECK. I would like to proceed with the migratory bird bill, but the Senator from Wisconsin has not concluded his remarks on the naval appropriation bill, and would prefer very much that he be allowed to proceed. Therefore, let it be understood that he may proceed and we will not press the consideration of the bird bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that the migratory bird bill will be the unfinished business until it is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. Then I shall ask the Senate to go right on with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill and make that the unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS. That would be unnecessary. I suggest that the Senator in charge of the migratory bird bill ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily.

Mr. HALE. I shall be very glad to have him do so.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from South Dakota may call up the unfinished business at any time after the Senator from Wisconsin concludes. He will simply have to demand the regular order.

Mr. NORBECK. I was really in hopes that we could dispose of the unfinished business this afternoon.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like to know whether the naval appropriation bill is going to be proceeded with during the remainder of the afternoon or the migratory bird bill. I think, so far as the unfinished business is concerned, we ought to reach a conclusion upon it.

Mr. NORBECK. May I suggest that we take up the migratory bird bill at 4 o'clock and try to get a vote on it at that time? In the meantime Senators can proceed with debate on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Apparently the Senator thinks we can get a vote on the migratory bird bill in a very few minutes after it is taken up. I do not know whether the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] can conclude his remarks in time this afternoon or not. I suggest that we let the migratory bird bill remain before the Senate until 3 o'clock and, if we can not dispose of it in a short time, then temporarily lay it aside, and let us proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a very simple matter. The Senator from Maine can ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and then the Senator from Wisconsin can proceed with his discussion, and when he is through we can vote on the migratory bird bill.

Mr. NORBECK. That course is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing to do that.

Mr. NORBECK. With the understanding that we will take up the migratory bird bill at 3 o'clock.

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business being temporarily laid aside, the Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. BLAINE'S speech—

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1271) to more effectively meet the obligations of the United States under the migratory-bird treaty with Great Britain by lessening the dangers threatening migratory game birds from drainage and other causes, by the acquisition of areas of land and of water to furnish in perpetuity reservations for the adequate protection of such birds, and by providing funds for the establishment of such areas, their maintenance and improvement, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I am not going to make any lengthy speech now. I would like to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the advantages of the license over the direct appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADVANTAGES OF THE LICENSE OVER THE DIRECT APPROPRIATION

If the appropriation of $1,000,000 per annum for the acquisition of refuge areas is actually made for a number of years, I have no hesitation in saying that it will be better than the Federal hunting license for the raising of funds to carry out the provisions of the act. But you know as well as I do from our previous experience that after a year or two it is going to be most difficult to continue these appropriations. On the other hand, if a special fund is built up in the Treasury out of the receipts of Federal licenses, it will not be so difficult to get the estimate allowed by the Director of the Budget and the Appropriations Committee for the acquisition of areas as refuges for migratory birds. While there are approximately 6,000,000 licensed hunters throughout the United States according to statistics compiled from the records of State game commissions, these reports include not only the hunters of migratory game but also resident game, such as quail, wild turkeys, pheasants, rabbits, squirrel, deer, elk, and other big game. It is not contemplated that more than 15 or 20 per cent of these hunters will ever be required to take out licenses under the provisions of the bill to hunt migratory birds, particularly with the exemption proposed to eliminate the requirement of the license for hunting woodcock, doves, wild pigeons, and yellowlegs.

The hunting license originated with the first state-wide organization for game conservation adopted in any of the States. Both resident and nonresident licenses are to-day required in every State for the hunting of any kind of game within their borders. Some States, however, exempt resident landowners and members of their immediate families from the necessity of taking out licenses to hunt on their own premises, and one State—Texas, I believe—only requires a license for hunting outside of the county of residence. In most of the States the funds derived from the sale of licenses are turned into game-protection funds for the direct support of game-conservation work in that State. In a few instances, particularly in those States which have adopted budget legislation, the license funds are turned into the treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and direct appropriations are made from the revenues of the State for the support of the conservation work. The hunting license has been in effect for so long and the funds derived therefrom are so generally used for conservation purposes that the support of conservation work throughout the country by hunting licenses may be said to be an institution. It is not the hunters throughout the country who are interested in the conservation of migratory game birds that are kicking on the payment of the proposed $1 Federal license. They are desirous and anxious for the opportunity to contribute this small additional amount in order to provide Federal funds for the furtherance of the conservation of such birds.

The proposed refuges and the proposed licenses will not interfere in any manner with the operation of the State laws or the State conservation program.

Mr. NORBECK. Four amendments have been offered to the bill, two by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and two by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE]. I think the Senator from Wisconsin wants to make a statement in regard to his amendments.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have suggested to the Senator from South Dakota that I desire to withdraw the two amendments which I offered yesterday. I will state my reason for the withdrawal. The Senator from South Dakota with great fortitude and patience has carried on this contest, and it has suggested to me the probability that the amendments I have offered would provoke long debate. I do not believe them important enough to delay a vote on this measure. The question of the maximum amount which might be paid for land is one, perhaps, that can be left to the department until there is some remedial legislation. The question of excluding hunting of migratory birds within a certain area adjoining a sanctuary no doubt may well be left with the States.

I have no doubt that Congress has the power to legislate upon it under Article VI of the Constitution, which makes a treaty the supreme law of the land and provides that every court must recognize it, the laws and constitution of a State to the contrary notwithstanding; but I am certain that the States will perform their whole duty in the future as they have in the past and, therefore, it is a proposition which might well be left to the States. I therefore ask that the two amendments may be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments are withdrawn.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I suggest that a quorum is absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Locher	Schall
Bayard	Frazier	McKellar	Sheppard
Black	George	McLean	Shortridge

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] was temporarily passed over. Is it to be reoffered?

Mr. NORBECK. Before that is done, I desire to offer for printing in the RECORD some indorsements of the migratory bird bill. These telegrams had reference to the bill carrying the $1 license fee, and were all received before the bill was amended by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The telegrams are as follows:

MISSOULA, MONT., February 17, 1928.

United States Senator PETER NORBECK,
Washington, D. C.:

Montana sportsmen realize that if the clean and invigorating sport of shooting wild waterfowl is to continue, something must be done immediately. The nesting, feeding, and wintering ground of these birds is each year becoming more and more restricted; likewise the places where they may be hunted. Migratory bird conservation bill affords the only just and practical relief. We are deeply interested in this measure, and earnestly hope it will speedily pass Congress.

THOMAS N. MARLOVE,
Chairman Montana Fish and Game Commission.

RICHMOND, VA., February 16, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate:

Bird conservation bill indorsed by overwhelming majority America's outstanding wild-life conservationists. No measure had larger and wider publicity. Longer passage delayed more money cost to provide needed refuges and shooting grounds, such lands being taken up fast by wealthy syndicates of hunters.

M. D. HART.

HARTFORD, CONN., February 16, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate:

It is my understanding that hearing on migratory bird conservation bill comes to-morrow. Regret impossible for me to be present. Bill strongly indorsed by this commission. Unless we can provide sanctuaries with feeding grounds for our migratory waterfowl the supply will continue to decrease. The Federal license to provide funds for defraying the expenses involved seems to be the one logical solution of the problem.

JOHN W. TITCOMB,
Superintendent State Board of Fisheries and Game.

BOSTON, MASS., February 16, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate:

Please record Massachusetts as strongly indorsing migratory bird conservation bill. Our sportsmen willing to help finance work of Federal Government in doing things proposed under this bill, although they do not expect any of such funds to be expended in our State until the great needs in the West and South are taken care of. We earnestly urge the passage of the bill at this session of Congress.

WILLIAM C. ADAMS,
Division of Fisheries and Game,
Department of Conservation.

FRANKFORT, KY., February 16, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate:

The Kentucky Game and Fish Commission urges the Senate committee to report favorably the migratory bird conservation bill. Its passage will assist us in conservation, especially in the western part of our State, which lies across the migratory-bird path.

GEORGE C. WAGGONER,
Executive Agent Kentucky Game and Fish Commission.

COLUMBIA, S. C., February 16, 1928.

Senator PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate:

I earnestly urge immediate passage of the migratory bird conservation bill, for it will mean a great thing for the conservation of our wild life.

A. A. RICHARDSON,
Chief Game Warden of South Carolina.

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 16, 1928.

PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate:

Immediate action necessary to save migratory birds from destruction. Urge your strong support of bills now pending.

W. E. ALBERT,
State Game Warden.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., February 17, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Minnesota organized, and individual sportsmen and game and fish department sincerely believe in and squarely behind migratory-bird refuge and shooting grounds conservation bill now before Senate. In view of international aspect and migratory bird treaty act it seems obvious to me protection and perpetuation migratory water fowl is obligation and duty of Federal Government, and further believe if matter left in hands individual State attention given will be both sporadic and spasmodic. Fail to see any justification for claim bill under consideration constitutes any invasion State rights. Sincerely hope bill be recommended for passing by committee Friday and will be enacted into law by Congress this session. Will greatly appreciate any effort you may exert along this line.

JAMES F. GOULD,
Commissioner of Game and Fish.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 16, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The sentiment existing in the State of Indiana is overwhelmingly in favor of the passage of the migratory bird conservation bill. The Federal Government should do its part in the protection and propagation of migratory birds, inasmuch as it holds jurisdiction over the same under the treaty with Canada. Sportsmen in this State will not object to paying a Federal license.

GEORGE N. MANNFELD,
Superintendent Fisheries and Game.

BALTIMORE, MD., February 16, 1928.

Senator PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I beg to add my hearty indorsement for the enactment of the migratory bird conservation bill. This bill should be placed on the Federal statutes as quickly as possible. It is very important that we enact both Federal and State legislation for the further protection of the wild life of this country. Under State administration, wherever game refuges have been established they have worked wonders in saving our wild life. And to further the preservation of migratory birds we must establish Federal game refuges. I heartily indorse the hunters' license feature, as this system, wherever it has been adopted in the States, has worked wonders for the conservation of our wild life.

E. LEE COMPTE,
State Game Warden.

Mr. NORBECK. I have a telegram from Dr. William T. Hornaday, a conservancy expert of international fame, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

STAMFORD, CONN., April 9, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Latest news received. Your wise and generous amendment to your migratory bird bill has completely transformed that measure into a safe, sane, and far-reaching agency for a general increase in waterfowl throughout the whole United States, and a 25-year extension of legitimate sports in hunting it. No true sportsman or game defender can fail to support your bill as amended. I hope you will stand as firm as the Rock of Gibraltar for the Federal license fee of one insignificant dollar and wardens to protect the sanctuaries and feed birds as may be necessary. On the Jack Miner plan, without the money and the warden, the whole plan falls to the ground and we may as well cease our efforts to save migratory game and hunting on a basis of continuance. I am trying to broadcast an appeal to a million sportsmen for their active support for your bill.

WILLIAM T. HORNADAY.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, in the temporary absence of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], I will offer his amendment in his behalf. In lieu of section 17 of the bill, I offer what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out section 17 of the bill and in lieu thereof insert:
